Fragmentary Thoughts at the Commencement of New Year.

Time quickly passes. Seconds, minutes, hours, days and months follow each other in rapid succession. The first composes the second, and it the third, and thus are formed the years which mark the period of human life. How brief is life! How soon gone! How mysteriously the curtain falls behind us and remains, hiding the Past from our enjoyment and improvement forever! But 'tis true, strangely true. Our time can be but once spent. Yet many, who trifled away their time, see at last their folly in spending their time as devotees at the unhallowed shrine of fashion and self-gratification. But Time breaks "the silver cord," and there is none to repair it.

We anticipate each day, we spend it, and though it passes by, it bears a correct record of all our deeds, whether good or evil. This particular fact is too little thought of. Thousands spend each returning day as though 'twere of less value than silver or gold, little appreciating the inestimable worth and necessity of improving time, and the celerity with which it hurries us on to eternity. No one can too highly value time, but may overrate the indispensibility of applying it in any one direction. Our relation to, and dependence upon this life, and its claims upon us, are various and numerous; hence our responsibilities, as probationers of time, arise from different sources. If we disregard the laws of physical life, we suffer, more or less, the ravages of disease, or an untimely death. If we violate the laws of moral life, in our business pursuits and social or individual habits, we are stigmatized as immoral, in whatever point of immorality we may be guilty. And, in particular, if we transgress the God-given laws of Everlasting Life, wilfully or by neglect, we will fall short of the design of our creation, and, as a consequence, fall short of that inheritance which is prepared for all them that love and fear the Lord.

Another so-reckoned year is numbered with the things that were. We are one year nearer our latter end. We have enjoyed another round of the seasons since last we bethought the commencement of a new year. The scythe has not yet cut us down, while many by it have fallen around us. You and I, dear readers, still remain; but many whom we knew one year ago, we know no more "according to the flesh." There is surely a wise design in our being thus permitted to enter the limits of the New Year. If we know and feel this design, we will act, henceforward, as though we appreciated the goodness of God through which we receive all that is good for us, and all that is calculated to fit us for "the world to come," whether it be Divine discipline or Divine comfort. But we are slow to take calm, sober reflection of the character of life we have lived before men, and before "the Judge of all the earth." "I speak to such as know the law" of Christ. "I write unto you" who have declared submission to King Jesus, and allegiance to the Government which is "upon his shoulders." We are oftentimes reluctant to take lessons of our past lives. When we look back and see the zigzag track we have left behind us, we often turn from the sight and forget; yet this is what we should do, if we "press forward" in the life of Godliness. But they who make progress in the divine life are only such as improve their time by taking lessons of the past, and putting them into effectual practice. If we see wherein we have come short or failed to do our Christian duties, it is not only our privilege, but an unquestionable obligation to guard against future shortcomings. "See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, because the days are evil." Eph. 5 : 15.

Unconverted reader, have you permitted another year to elapse without giving your heart, & submitting your whole will to the Lord? Do you really mean to enter upon another year of rebellion against God? thus hazarding your eternal welfare. I entreat you, consider. Spend not your precious time in satisfying "the lusts of the flesh." Make haste and return, and God will have mercy.

1 Pet. 5: 7.

In their passage through the wilderness, the children of Israel had much fault to find with God in his dealings with them. They demanded such discipline as they thought best, prescribing to God not only what they wanted, but the time and manner of it. When Jehovah detained Moses in the Mount, they concluded that his non-appearance, and the tardiness of him that had sent him, would justify their inauguration of the old worship; and forthwith they proceeded to manufacture a golden calf. Many fall into the same error now without suspecting it. Impatience and want of faith led to their adoption of such criminal measures; and the gloom and perplexity into which the delay and seeming forgetfulness of Divine Providence often involve us, have a like tendency to prompt our resort to means of amelioration on which rests the withering frown of God. They were not even satisfied with the supplies vouchsafed by the Lord for their necessities, although Heaven itself observed the strictest punctuality in its bestowment. Not only did they eat Angels' food, but they gathered it every morning. Ps. 78: 25. Ex. 16: 21. What God had so graciously provided, and so punctually given, they soon began to loathe. After the most astounding exhibitions of the Divine power and goodness to demonstrate his interest in them, they rebelled and murmured, and betrayed such incorrigibleness, that they nearly all fell in the wilderness as examples of the dire consequences of unbelief.

God cares for us all. His resources are infinite, his wisdom unsearchable, and his mercy endureth forever. His loving kindness never fails, but he will not be dictated in the distribution of his bounties. The prophet and the poor widow and her household must be nourished out of an empty barrel for many days. Reason could discover neither sense nor possibility in such an arrangement. Faith fared sumptuously every day where unbelief would have starved. The ravens must do their share in effecting the purpose of God in behalf of his chosen. When there is "death in the pot," faith casts in a handfull of meal, and there is no harm. Self-pleasing and selfish calculations sent Jonas to Joppa, thence to flee to Tarshish from the presence of the Lord; but to teach him humility and the folly of fighting against God, he was sent into the belly of a great fish, to make a tour along the bottom of the ocean we know not whither, and then to be spewed out on dry land again, a better man we trust. All these instances show that God cares for his people, and inspire us with confidence to cast all our care upon him. The crumbs that I am trying to pick from the loaf of Eternal Life, do not reach you every morning like the manna, but their irregularity is not the result of forgetfulness or indifference. When you take up the Companion to glean your portion, and find not what your soul craves, your disappointment should render the blessed Bible only the dearer. The most loving of all beings "abode two days still in the same place where he was," although he very well knew that at Bethany two devoted hearts were breaking with anxiety to see him come. What he did "beyond Jordan" we cannot tell, but he was certainly engaged in a great and good work, for it is added, "many believed on him there." His power is boundless, his bounty exhaustless, his love passeth knowledge, his sympathy exquisite beyond human conception, and his care more gentle, vigilant,and unremittent than a mother's. You lie down and rise up, and transfer your body slowly from room to room, now in your chair, then on the lounge, and then again on your couch, your spirit oftentimes sad, and your flesh quivering with everpresent, ever-gnawing pains; but your being in Christ, will, in a sense make him a sharer of all your sufferings and sorrows. As he was the bearer of your sin and guilt, he is equally the bearer of your care.—He gives manna according to his wisdom and love, but sends quails in his wrath. It is better to be in the wilderness with the severest discipline and scantiest fare, than in Egypt by the fleshpots, eating to the full of "fish, and cucumbers, and melons, and leeks, and onions, and garlic." His care is never more conspicuous than when we are wandering in desolate places, away from all discernible sources of support.—To lie passive in his hand, in the midst of our utmost endeavors,recognizing his presence in the seven-fold intensity of the furnace flames, confiing in his faithfulness whatever betide, oh this is to extract water out of the Rock, sweeten the waters of Marah, heal every serpent-bite, have the fire-pillar always in view, and bathe the soul with perpetual light and clothe it with the Divine glory as with a garment. "He careth for you."

Your springs are in God, and your chief joy in his love; and anything that enables you better to understand and appropriate his word, you regard as an evidence of his care, and press to your heart as a treasure. These crumbs, although sometimes rather dry if not mouldy have often nourished and refreshed your soul.—Any obscurity that may be found in them, you can have elucidated by private correspondence. Christ also has his love-letter, addressed to his Church, the Bride Elect, and to each individual member of it. When the love-thrilling, love-clinging soul is perplexed in the study of Heaven's message, we can send a private missive to Jesus, and have our closet flooded with the joy unspeakable of a first love, by the gracious, soothing, soul-quickening answer that follow our supplications. God careth for you in giving the word, and no less in making its contents as honey and the honey comb to your hungry spirit. We are made to love, and every one has experience of it in one or another form. We have all felt glad in the reception of tokens of affection from those to whom our hearts are strongly attached. If we receive a letter from such a person, we absorb its contents as the thirsty ground drinks in water. So should the believer peruse and study and ponder the New Testament. Every syllable is precious. It is full of the heart-utterances of Jesus. It is an epitome of the love of the Uncreated. Every page flows with honey from the great hive in the King's Garden of lilies. Every letter is written with the heart's blood of him who loved us unto death. Verily God careth for us.

In your extreme sufferings, and sad experiences, protracted trials, and crushing care, you open the love-missive of the Chief among ten thousand, and read the comforting declaration, "casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you." Oh that we would never doubt this glorious truth. When all deductions of reason, and all precedents of experience afford no clue to the solution of our great life-problem, oh that we could so sink down into the depths of love and trust, as to surmount every obstacle by the confiding "even so, Father," of our blessed Lord and Savior. Gloomy, joyless, forlorn we often feel, because of our distrust of the precious, comforting assurance that the One altogether lovely and true cares for us. In all the world there grows no flower so fragrant to the sense, as the heart's ease of Jesus to the drooping soul.—What can be more exhilarating. Jesus cares for you, and he graciously and lovingly invites you to cast all your care upon him. What more could we ask? All our care. Nothing is to be kept back. Into his ear we may whisper all our griefs. Whatever gnaws our feelings, or burdens our hearts, we may freely transfer to him. We may deem ourselves unworthy to eat the crumbs under his table; he takes us into his confidence, calls us friends, gives us a place in his kingdom, and is only waiting the necessary term of discipline to exalt us above principalities and powers, and share his Throne with us. All that he permits now, is only to give us the necessary character to enjoy so great felicity and glory which he has in reserve for us. He may not remove the thorn in the flesh, but he does what is far more conducive to our ultimate good, he will perfect his strength in our weakness. No medicine is found on the surface or in the bowels of the earth that gives such relief to the body, as the words of the Everloving One bring to the sorrow-burdened, care-burdened heart. He is faithful that promised. Cast your care upon him. The government is upon his shoulders, and what is a burden too intolerable for us to bear, is to him as the small dust in the balance. Your sickroom is the little world where your life-struggle must be fought out.—Friends come and go, sing and pray, weep with you and rejoice, give such comfort as they can or you may need; but when all are gone, you have still remaining the First and the Last, who is all in all, ready to take all your care on him, and offer his bosom as the pillow of your weary soul.

Suggestions to Contributors.

In presenting our reflections on this subject we do not wish to be considered as dictating nor presumptuous, neither do we wish to discourage any of the writers to our papers, either the learned or unlearned.—Our desire is simply to advise with the members and encourage them to strive hard to attain as near as possible to that point of perfection, that will accomplish the greatest good to the greatest number. The new volume of the Companion has been commenced and its pages, when completed, will transmit to posterity our labors, whether for good or evil, and will do much to mould their religious sentiments; hence the importance of exercising much discretion in the substance and style of our writing.

The Spirit that prompts us to write should be the first object of our examination. Our motives will insensibly affect, to a greater or less degree, the execution of our work. It is well nigh impossible for us to conceal our zeal motives in writing, from those much accustomed to reading; therefore if it is our desire to accomplish good results we should be sure that they are pure. Purity of Spirit is what God imperatively demands of us and he will except of nothing else. As evidence of this we refer to the case of Cain and Abel, of the widow's contribution of two mites, of the prayers of the Pharisee and the Publican, &c. It is this that gives life and efficacy to everything that we do. It is the propelling power in the Christian warfare.

We should write for edification, instruction, and encouragement. To the feeble and wavering we should administer strength and encouragement, for the babes and sucklings, edification and instruction. To the erring and the wanderer we should appeal with great ardor and fervency, urging the threatenings as well as the promises of God. St. Peter speaks of this after this wise; "For knowing the terrors of the Lord we persuade men." "We that have passed from death unto life," know the dangers to which man is exposed, therefore we should so "use the gift that is within us," that others may be persuaded to accept the offers of peace, and that we may "continue in all things written in the law to do them."

We should have for our object the establishment of the kingdom of Light and the dispersion of darkness, and to accomplish this we ought so address ourselves to the people that the most humble and unlearned will readily comprehend our meaning. It should not be our wish to see our names in print. A christian ought to be too modest to desire such notoriety. When we reflect that our names only represent so much weakness and corruption, so much of the fleshly and earthy, we ought rather shrink from the public eye and court obscurity; if we could do it consistently with our duty to our Lord.

We should not desire to exhibit our talents or our learning. If we fully comprehend the infinite wisdom of the great Omniscient and understood his counsels and designs, the greatest and wisest of this world would count themselves but fools. What do we know that should exalt or puff us up in our minds? we poor, miserably ignorant creatures. The little knowledge we have, even if we could measure the distance to the remotest stars, and their distance from each other, and understood their motions and revolutions, and could appropriate all the elements of nature to the use and comfort of man, and subject the beast of the forest, the fowls of the air, to our desires, we would yet be a mere pigmy, and should only cause us to despise our littleness and insignificance. It is a most pitiful and yet most disgusting sight to see a weak, finite being exalted and puffed up on account of his imaginary wisdom.

We would always do well before we commence writing for the press to read the advice of St. Paul on this subject which is as follows: Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. Taking the precaution and always invoking divine favor we would often be in a much happier mood for writing, and doubtless, much that is written would never leave the desk of the author, and that which is accepted by the editor would be richer in the life-giving Spirit.

The style of our writing should always receive our attention. The substance may be full of beauty and riches, full of life and strength, yet so clothed in words as to be sealed to a large portion of the brotherhood. It is very necessary, if we wish to accomplish good that we understand the character and circumstances of those to whom we write. It is well known that the church is composed of persons of the most humble pretensions to human wisdom. They have but little knowledge of the sciences, of the arts, of literature, &c., a large portion I presume never progressing farther in that way than to be able to read and write.—Then of what service is it to them when we use terms that are understood only by the educated, or by those who own a copy of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, at $10.00 per copy. When we clothe our ideas in high-sounding, bombastic words and phrases, such as are only in use among the proud and ambitious youths of the colleges and universities, the only effect it has on the unlettered is to make them stare and marvel at our supposed wisdon, or to produce merited contempt and disgust.

The plainest and simplest language is the purest and most affective. The learned will comprehend it, and it will suit the tastes of the unlearned. The greatest writers of our language wrote in the style of the common people. Where is there a work more popular or attractive, or more admired for the ease and simplicity of its style than Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress?—Where is there a work equal to the writings of Josephus for sweetness and beauty of expression, for clearness and grandeur of delivery? But the Christian's pattern is the Bible, and we gladly commend that to the brethren as a sure and safe guide. The writers of that were, for the most part, of the common people, and they wrote at the command of the Spirit who was received by the common people. The Savior always spoke in a manner suited to the capacity of the masses. His inimitable sermon on the mount far excels any composition on record for its magnificent and admirable plainness. Contemplating it apart from the divine nature of its precepts, we do not know which to admire most, its charming and fascinating style, or the purity of its tone and sentiment.

St. Paul addresses himself to speakers as follows: "So also if ye utter not by the tongue words easily understood how shall that be known which is spoken; for ye will be speaking into the air." This is also very applicable to writers. If we write in an obscure and unintelligible manner we are writing in an unknown tongue. We do not edify. We are unto them a barbarian. Our work is useless and we do no more than exhibit our vanity and pride. It is not in harmony with our profession. We claim to be a plain, unassuming, unpretending people. Then we should strive to sustain the character in all things; in writing, in speaking, in dress, in our houses, in our deportment, in all things. It will signify nothing, it will accomplish nothing, if in our attire only we are plain. Remember "he that keepeth the whole law and offendeth in one part is guilty of all."

While we commend the manner in which the Bible is written we would not expect to confine ourselves to the words employed therein, to the exclusion of all others. Many thousands have been brought into common use since it was written that are just as unexceptionable. It was written nearly 2,000 years ago, in a different tongue, and by a different people, and language like everything else has undergone great change since. And while we recommend the dialect of the common people we should carefully guard against the slang and the vulgarisms with which it is often corrupted. They are the offspring of the vicious and degraded and from no part of the copy we admire.

There are certain rules which are naturally and readily understood by every person gifted with a full development of the senses, that are intended to regulate our conduct and to assist in determining what to accept and what to refuse, both as it concerns things present and things to come, and before we present ourselves as teachers of the people we should bestow some labor to acquire a knowledge of them. And the surest and speediest method to obtain this knowledge is to know ourselves, without which, it is impossible to accomplish the objects of our mission.

Persons often unconsciously acquire habits and manners that altogether unfit them for the service of teaching. They suffer themselves to soar aloft in long-continued flights, far beyond the reach of the common eye, in the fields of the imagination, and while they administer to the tastes of the few that have the strength of wing to follow, the masses are far below starving for want of the food thus lost forever.

There are three important and indispensable qualifications requisite to constitute a Christian teacher, whether he teach through the press or in the public assembly. First:—To understand well himself what he imparts to others. Second:—To have a large measure of the Holy Spirit to give life and efficacy to his instructions. Third:—To convey them in such a manner that the least as well as the greatest will easily understand us. With these we may confidently expect to accomplish good results.

The foregoing hints, imperfect as they are, will apply with equal force to speakers, and we would doubtless profit by them and such thoughts as they may suggest, if we are susceptible of improvement, and I think we all will acknowledge we are not perfect. And I would not have the brethren to think they are of private interpretation. They are intended for all, including myself.

Our work for the year of our Lord 1869 is now only commenced, and hoping that we will press onward and upward in the good cause, we invoke the divine favor on all our dear co-laborers and bid them God speed.

The Fallen Son.

Follow him home now from the scene of his debauch. He is an only son. On him the hopes of the family has centered. Every nerve have been strained to give him the choicest education. Parents and sisters gloried in his talents, and looked forward to his future fame. Alas! already these visions are less bright.

Enter now the family circle. Parents surrounded by lovely daughters. Within that circle reign peace, virtue, and refinement. The evening has been spent in animated conversation, and the sweet interchange of affectionate endearment. But there is one who used to share all this, who was the centre of that circle.—Why is he not here? The hour of devotion has come; they kneel before their Father and God. A voice that used to mingle in their praise is wanting. An hour rolls away—another hour has gone. Why has all cheerfulness departed? Why do those parents start at every footstep?

The step of that son and brother is heard. The door is opened;—he staggers in before them, and is stretched out at their feet, in all the loathsomeness of intoxication!

Oh! who shall tell the sorrows of a home made dark with sin!

Never allow yourself to speak evil of another, without the most ample evidence of his guilt. Mankind, in their best estate, are liable to err. There is enough, therefore, to be said of the real defects of ourselves, as well as others, without attributing evil conduct to people of which they are not guilty. You should be slow to believe reports detrimental to the good name of your neighbor and still slower in spreading them abroad to the world.

For the Companion,

Are we Christians?

This is an important question, and ought to engage our minds from day to day. We should certainly know whether we are Christians, or whether we are not. In the first place we should see whether we ever have become such, and when we want to know this, there arises a question, which is something like this: what is necessary in order to become a christian. The Laws of the United States tell us, what is necessary for the foreigner to become a citizen, and as we are all foreigners to the commonwealth of Israel, we must certainly learn from the laws of that kingdom what is required of u to become citizens of the Kingdom of Christ Jesus. But we know after their citizenship has been fairly obtained, after we have, like the foreigner who comes to the United States, renounced all obligation to former rulers and kings, and have been naturalized lawfully, then we are still yet in danger of again loosing our citizenship. Treason and disloyalty will deprive us of it, and therefore the importance of the question we should ask: are we yet legal to our government? True to our King and obedient to his laws? If we can answer these questions in the afirmative, then all is well with us, and we can claim our right as good citizens, and no one has a right to deny us any one of the privileges which by the Lord of all lords are given to his subjects.

But subjects of a worldly kingdom are bound by duty to defend their kingdom, whenever the enemy approaches. The Christian's duty is to fight against the enemy of all our happiness, and if we are good soldiers in the cause of our Lord, then we will give battle to him wherever he is to be found. It is certainly honor to the soldier when he is a fighting man and a dishonor when a coward. Therefore let us be good and brave soldiers, so that we can say with the apostle when we are done here below: "we have fought a good fight," &c. Let us always be found in the front. Our enemy is always in our rear watching his chance to capture some stragglers.

But again; we would consider it very foolish for a soldier (if he had the privilege) if he would choose a poor general for his leader; yet in the face of all this the majority of mankind will do this. We know we have two contending armies. The leader of the one is Christ Jesus himself, and he has a small army only; while on the other hand we have the prince of darkness commanding a powerful army. Now Christ Jesus is a very good leader; he never lost a battle: he is always in front of his army; always cheering up his men, and if we will listen to him and follow, he leads them on to certain victory. And more than this.—He is always paying good wages, and promising a good bounty at the end of final victory; and as he never has made one promise which he has not fulfilled we can take him at his word, and depend on all he says.

But now let us see what kind of a general satan is: those of us who have served in his army must acknowledge that he is no leader at all. He is a coward, for he is always in the rear of his men, never in front, he is always encouraging them on until he has them in difficulty and then deserts them, and allows them to do the best they can. Again; he is always promising and never fulfilling a single promise, because he was a liar from the beginning. He pays them no wages at all for he never has anything for himself, and still he keeps up a powerful army, so that we often have to wonder how he can be able to do so. But he is very sly, he knows very well that the army of the Lord is but a handful in comparison with his. This he tells his deluded army and tries to make them believe that by and by they yet will be able to accomplish a final victory.

Deluded being, defeat is certain for you. All power in heaven and in earth is given to our leader, and your portion and those of your followers who will not desert from your army and come over to us will be in an awful place forever. Now which of these two will we have for our leader? The one who was a liar and a coward from the beginning or the one who will make us happy in this world, and more abundantly so in the world to come? "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

Conversation on Feetwashing.

Forasmuch as the above subject has received considerable attention since our last Annual Meeting and a number of communications have appeared in the Companion, I have been solicited to write also, and in compliance with the request I will give the substance of a few conversations with a brother on the subject of Feetwashing. I will give the initials M. and J. and hope the brother will have no objections, as the name will not be given.

M. Brother J.; There is a subject I would like to have some information upon. I do not speak of this subject for controversy, but for information. The subject I refer to is the subject of Feet-washing

J. Well brother M., I will try to give you all the information I can upon that subject.—What is dark to you? the design, or the manner of performing it?

M. The manner of performing it. I have for years thought the one who washes ought also wipe.

J. Do you understand that the one that washes should wash and wipe the one next to him, and that one wash and wipe the next, and so on, all around the table?

M. No; I only mean that the one who washes should wipe all he washes, whether one, two, six, or no matter how many.

J. Well, now I understand you. But why do you think so?

M. The example of Christ teaches me so.

J. Then you base your understanding of the subject upon the example of Christ do you?

M. Yes, certainly; that is good ground; is it not?

J. We will see. You understand that we shall obey the example, do you?

M. Christ says: "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you."

J. Truly so. But now let us look at your manner of imitating his example. You wash and wipe six brethren. I will wash and wipe two, &c. Now is this following Christ's example? How many of the disciples were present on the occasion? I answer twelve. For when the evening was come he sat down with the twelve." Matt. 26: 20. "He poureth water into a basin and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded." John 13: 5. Whose feet did he wash? Answer, the disciples.—How many? Answer, twelve. For John writes, "so when he had washed their feet, certainly means the disciples, feet, for the twelve were present. Now brother M., if you wash and wipe six, and Christ in the example washed and wiped twelve, do you follow the example?

M. Yes, as far as washing and wiping is concerned.

J. But is that the whole example, literally? I answer no. Hence, though you plead for the "example," you do not imitate it. That always was a difficulty in my mind. Now I will tell you how I understand the matter. Paul says (1 Cor. 12: 27.) "Now ye are the body of Christ." Therefore the church should represent the body of Christ. And without too much stress upon the number, I think the members of the mystical body of Christ, the church, should represent the members of his physical body. Now how many members of the physical body were employed; I answer two, then to imitate that, how many members of the mystical body should be employed? Answer, two.

M. That is a new idea. I must have some time to consider.

Good Gifts.

"Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above and cometh down from the Father of lights with whom is no variableness neither shadow of turning." James 1: 17.

Every good gift. James would teach us that all things are the gifts of God. If we have, then, gifts or talents committed to our keeping, it becometh us to bestir us, so that at the day of reckoning we may come forth as just stewards, willing to give account for everything committed to our hands. I consider the Companion a good gift, through which we may convey our ideas to one another, to the encouraging of one another. We feel the responsibility, and would say: keep it well supplied with such matter that is interesting and edifying; so that it may in reality be what it is represented: good gifts, we believe we shall be held answerable to God for the use we make of them; therefore we should use great caution how we make use of those gifts; as a man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven. John 3: 27. All things are then the gift of God. Among the good gifts may be the blessings we daily receive: health of body and mind.

The many members of the body are good gifts none more so than the tongue or gift of speech, whereby there can much good be done and also not a little evil. The tongue has some important part to act; perhaps more so than all the rest of the members combined. Scripture teaches us that all things can or have been tamed, but the tongue no man can tame. All evil speaking, backbiting, and lying; defaming of one another; evil speaking of neighbors is perpetuated by that unruly little member, which we should doubly guard, as being one of the most important of the good gifts.

But the word would imply that there are other gifts, which are termed "perfect gifts," which we infer to be God's Son and his word, which he sent into the world as a gift; and we may safely term it a perfect gift, for it is only from God that perfection comes. Then the nearer we imitate, or live to that word, the nearer to perfection we may arrive; not that we can be perfect in this world, but we should strive to come nearer to that perfect gift, by imitating and following his precepts and examples, which will lead us to humility, and will direct us to do good; to love God, and obey him; to love our neighbor as ourselves. May our object be the furthering of the Gospel; the honor and Glory of God, and the welfare of our undying souls.

"Life's Harvest."

"Look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest."—John 4: 35.

These words are from the lips of our Savior to his disciples, after a conversation with a certain woman of Samaria. The Samaritans looked for a Messiah, and when it was known that he had come and was now sitting on Jacob's well, many "believed on him for the saying of the woman, which testified: He told me all that I ever did." This, also, gave rise to the language of the text. Tho' eighteen hundred years have elapsed since this language was uttered, we are reminded, almost weekly, of its truthfulness, by the calls of brethren from almost every part of the country: and I presume nearly every brother and sister feels a responsibility resting upon them, but cannot see where to begin, or what to do. If tears and prayers were sufficient, no doubt those piteous calls would cease; but prayers and tears will not suffice; we must work as well as pray. I shall here give a few extracts from the pens of some of our brethren on the frontier settlements. The first may be found in No. 16, Vol. 4, of the Companion. It is from brother Jacob P. Moomaw, Tremont Co., Iowa.

"We know of no members nearer than 75 miles.—The people are plain and sociable. I have been telling them about the faith of the brethren and they seem to have a great desire to hear them preach, and some are hungering after righteousness. May the brethren and sisters pray for the spreading of the Gospel, and may the ministering brethren remember the words of our Savior: 'Go and preach the gospel to every creature,' would be truly glad to have them come among us for a season, that some might be added unto us."

Brother J. D. Haughtelin, of Panora, Iowa, says: "We have a wide field and many more calls to come and preach than we can possibly fill." Brother Samuel Hilary of Urbana, Iowa, writes: "And brethren, where you are many in number remember us in the far west: pray for us that we may not be weak in the faith; we are a few here at this place, striving to enlarge Zion's borders. Oh forget us not: and the poor weak instruments, inexperienced in declaring the counsels of God: young in years, and younger in the life that he now lives, and younger still in the ministry; pray God that he may be enabled to labor to the glory of God, and to the good of his people."

If anything was necessary to confirm the language of Christ in the text, we have it in the above extracts. Many more might be given, not only from the west but also from the east, north and south. It now remains for us to act in the case. The hungry must be fed; and if we are inactive, some may, in a starving condition, partake of poisonous food to the ruin and destruction of the soul. What shall we do? When and where shall we begin? What course shall we pursue? are questions of momentous importance; and require immediate action and a decided course. From the lips of him who "spake as never man spake," we have the following language: "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth laborers into his harvest."

Brother Wertz, in No. 38, Vol. 4, says: "What good will it do if we pray for those parts which are destitute of the preaching of the Gospel and do not lay hold and do something? See James 2: 14—16." This is true. We may pray until we sink with hoary heads into the grave, and permit not the Lord to send forth laborers, and we will still lack. It is true we have laborers, but more are needed. Not only in the West, and South, but likewise in the east and in the North. In an article entitled "The Macedonian cry," by brother J. L. Forney, we are told that there are thirty two preachers in Somerset Co., Pa., and when Washington Co., calls, we learn from brother C. G. Lint that there are none to go, under the present circumstances; and there is no reason to doubt it. This being the case, the question arises: why does not Washington, and other countries follow the example of Somerset? It is indeed lamentable, to think that an old country in which the gospel has been preached at least twenty two years, should at last be destitute of a preacher. How can Macedonian cries be answered from places like this?

But means are required as well as laborers. This is a fact which cannot be denied. Although brother Harshbarger, in No. 41, Vol. 4 of the Companion, brings up the famous text, Matth. 10: 9. "Provide neither gold, nor silver," &c. It is true the disciples lacked nothing when they returned; but times and customs have changed since then. Brother D. M. Holsinger, in No. 15 Vol. 4 says; "the time has been when the territory settled by our brethren could be visited and attended to by our ministering brethren without much support." It is not so now. And brethren are well aware of the fact. If we admit that traveling could be done without means, who of us would or could ask a brother, who is compelled to labor with his own hands in order to provide the necessaries of life for himself and family, to go and fill those Macedonian cries! We believe those who call, would cease to do so, rather than ask a poor brother to spend even his time without a just remuneration.

But, says one, "let the wealthier go; they need no support." Here, then, the idea comes up, that a wealthy brother shall spend time and money, until he becomes poor in order to save us from contributing a mite to the cause of the Lord. No, brethren, let us all come up to the help of the Lord, and assist in this great and glorious work. We can all do a little, and never feel the effects of it. As the year is composed of seconds of time, so will our little contributions, help to swell the fund through which the gospel may be preached to all mankind. Now let us see how easily and effectually the work may be done. Suppose a certain arm of the church is composed of 100 members, and each member will lay by one cent every week for a missionary purpose: at the end of the year we would have laid up $52. And the brotherhood is supposed to be about 100,000 members. This number will lay up $1000 every week, and at the end of the year we should have the nice sum of $52,000, and who would miss it? And who could not spend one cent a week for so great a cause? The value of one egg at present prices would pay a sister's portion for two weeks; one pound of butter, thirty five or forty weeks, almost a whole year; and the beads, flowers, feathers and ribbons which decorate the bonnets and hats of some of our sisters [or their children.—Ed] might be used in such a way as to raise their portion without any inconvenience for some time. And when these resources fail, if nothing else is left, make it known to some good rich brother or sister, and they will, no doubt, give for you and for themselves. I think the church could easily raise $100,000 yearly, since it would only require about two cents from each member, weekly. Why, then, do we delay? Let us go to work at once. Commence now. And remember brethren and sisters, one member can do but little, while all can accomplish much. I believe the Lord will abundantly reward us with as increase of this world's goods; and by adding stars to our crowns in glory. Think of those who hunger and thirst after righteousness; many of them have left those who were near and dear to them, not only by the tender ties of flesh and blood, but also by the ties of church fellow-ship, and have gone as little sparks to kindle and lighten the dark and gloomy western horizon. These are they that call;

"And shall they call in vain?
Shall sheaves lie there ungathered,
And waste upon the plain."

Marriage and Domestic Happiness.

Marriage is a serious matter, and should be well considered. Preparedness and fitness for the important step is too little thought of sometimes.

Young women should carefully cultivate domestic duties and habits, and practice useful needle-work.—A knowledge of preparing meals nicely, and good management, are necessary for comfort and economy.

A sensible man will look for the following qualities in a wife: Gentleness and good temper, neatness in dress, that she is modest and well-behaved, that she is well acquainted with household duties, thrifty, and likely to make a good manager; and, above all, he will take care that she is likely to be to him a help, and not a hindrance, in the way to heaven.

Neglect of these things often hinders happiness, and causes much wretchedness.

HINTS FOR HUSBANDS AND WIVES.

Eph. v: 22-33; Col. iii: 18, 19; 1 Peter iii: 1-7.

1. Be careful that custom and habit do not lessen your courteous attentions to each other.

2. When you perceive a languor in your affections, always suspect yourself; the object which once drew your regard may be still the same, and blame attaches to you.

3. Be sure to avoid unkind and irritating language. Always conciliate: it is your interest and your duty. Recollect what God has borne with in you.

4. Bear and forbear. You must both accommodate, or you will both be unhappy.

5. Do not expect too much; you are not always the same, no more is your partner; sensibility must be watched against, or it will soon become its own tormentor.

6. When you discover failings which you did not expect, make it a prayer that your regard may not be diminished. Forbearance is the trial and grace of this life only.

7. Forget not that one of you must die first; one of you must feel the pang and chasm of separation. A thousand little errors may then wound the survivor's heart.

8. Never suffer your regard for each other's society to rob God of your heart, or of the time you owe to God, or your own soul.

9. Pray constantly—you need much prayer. Prayer will engage God on your behalf. His blessing alone can make you happy in the midst of mercies, and soothe the bitterness of life.

10. Every day let your eyes be fixed on God through Jesus Christ, that, by the influence of the Holy Spirit, you may receive your mercies as coming from Him, and that you may use them to His glory.

THROUGH MUCH TRIBULATION.—No one reaches heaven without passing through the waters of tribulation. It is the law of the kingdom, and a necessary law.—The psalmist accounts for it on the principle implied in the declaration—"Because they have no changes, therefore they fear not God." Yes, changes, sad and painful changes, are often necessary in order to turn the face of God's chosen heavenward. Said a Christian who lost his house and property by fire, "If they had not perished I should have perished." And another who had lost his eye-sight. "I could never see till I was blind." Thus God leads through the troubled waters up to the sunshine and the peace of the rest above. Most true it is, through much tribulation ye shall enter the kingdom.—Family Treasure.

LIFE'S TROUBLES.—Wisdom makes all the troubles griefs and pains incident to life, whether carnal adversities or natural afflictions, easy and supportable, by rightly valuing the importance of and moderating the influence of them. It suffers not busy fancy to alter the nature, amplify the degree, or extend the duration of them, by representing them more sad, heavy and remediless than they truly are. It allows them no force beyond what naturally and necessarily they have, nor contributes nourishment to their increase.

How shall we Escape?

"How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation." Heb. 2: 3.

By the term salvation, we understand a saving—a saving from some impending danger, and the greatness of salvation depends, in a great measure, upon the magnitude or extent of the danger from which we are being saved. This salvation then is great, because the calamity and danger from which it saves us, is also great, namely, that of lossing our eternal enjoyment or happiness in the world to come.

When the world lay in sin and iniquity; when there was no eye to pity, and no created arm to save; in the darkest hours of the world, this salvation came. Christ making his appearance in the little town of Bethlehem, bringing from God his Heavenly Father, this plan of salvation by which the fallen sons and daughters of Adam can be saved. This salvation, then, is great on account of its origin. It originated, and flowed from the Throne of God himself. The Apostle says, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that the world may not perish, but have everlasting life." We imagine a scene in heaven, when the query went forth: "Who will go to redeem yonder world?" All the Angelic and Seraphic hosts of heaven were silent. The question again goes forth: Yonder is that sin-cursed world, I have created them, and I love them, who will go to redeem them? Says the Son: Father here am I, send me; I will go to redeem that sinful world. The Son came, was mocked, scoffed and derided; was "taken by wicked hands, and led up Mount Calvary's rugged brow, reared between heaven and earth, and died the ignominious death of the cross, that we might live. Behold the price of this salvation. It cost the precious blood of the Son of God.

Again, this salvation is great on account of its extension: it extends to the uttermost parts of the earth. "Come unto me all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved." It is also a free salvation. "And let him that is athirst come.—And whosoever will, let him come and take of the waters of life freely."

It is also an impartial salvation. "God is no respecter of persons." There is none so low, there is none so high, none so poor, but he may attain to this salvation. Neither is there any too ignorant. The prophet says, "the wayfaring man, though a fool, may not err therein." But there is danger of neglecting this great salvation. How often do men and woman, when convicted of sin, when the spirit of God strives with them, say with Felix of old, "go thy way for this time when I have a more convenient season I will call for thee," but that "more convenient season" never come, till death overtakes them, and they drop into the grave in an unprepared state. They have neglected their salvation and how shall they escape at the great day of judgment. Their doom will be banishment from God, making their abode in the deep, dark caverns of irretrievable wo. Then may God help us to make sure steps for heaven and immortal glory, and not neglect this great salvation.

Carrying on Business for Christ.

Many years ago, happening to be in South Wales, I made the acquaintance of a Welsh gentleman. He was then a landed proprietor, living in his own mansion, and in very comfortable circumstances. He had been before carrying on an extensive business in a large town. By the death of a relative, he had unexpectedly come into possession of this property. After considering whether he should retire from business, he made up his mind that he should still continue to carry it on, though no longer for himself, but for Christ. I could not help being struck with the gleesomeness of a holy mind which lighted up his countenance, when he said—"I never knew before what real happiness was. Formerly I wrought as a master to earn a livelihood for myself; but now I am carrying on the same work as diligently as if for myself, and even more so, but it is now for Christ, and every halfpenny of profit is handed over to the treasury of the Lord, and I feel that the smile of my Savior rests upon me." I think that is an example worthy of being imitated.—Duff.

——:o:——

Not those who are appointed to judge of the character of others bear in mind their own imperfections, and rather strive by sympathy to soften the pang arising from a conviction of guilt, than by misrepresentation to increase it.

Earnestness in Teaching.

It is much to be lamented that there are so few enthusiasts in this honorable and important work.—Many who are engaged in it regard it as a bondage, and sigh for the day which shall finally release them from its drudgery and din. They have never felt that theirs is a high calling, nor do they ever enter the school-room with the inspiring consciousness that they go as missionaries and pastors there. They undervalue their scholars. Instead of regarding them as all that now exists of a generation as important as our own; instead of recognizing in their present dispositions the mischief or beneficence which must tell on wide neighborhoods ere a few short years are run; instead of training up immortal spirits and expansive minds for usefulness now and glory afterwards, many teachers have never seen their pupils in any other light than as so many rows of turbulent rebels, a rabble of necessary torments, a room-full of that mighty plague with which the Nile of our noisy humanity is all croaking and jumping over. And many undervalue themselves. Instead of recollecting their glorious vocation, and eyeing the cloud of teacher-witnesses with whom they are encompassed; instead of a high-souled zeal for their profession, as that which should form the plastic mind after the finest models of human attainment and Scriptural excellence; may regard their office as so menial, that they have always the feeling as if themselves were pedants. To prescribe the task, to hear the lesson, to administer monotonous praise and blame, is the listless round of their official perfunctoriness. But there are few fields of brighter promise than the calling of a teacher. If he gives himself wholly to it; if he sat before him the highest object of all tuition, the bringing souls to Christ; if he can form a real affection for his scholars, and maintain a parental anxiety for their proficiency and their principles; if he has wisdom enough to understand them, and kindness enough to sympathize with them; if he have sufficient love for learning to have no distaste for lessons; he will be sure to inspire a zeal for study into the minds of many—he will win the love of all except the very few whose hearts are deaf-born—and in a short time the best features of his own character will be multiplying in spheres far-sundered, in the kindred persons of grateful pupils. Should he live long enough, they will praise him in the gate of public life, or cheer his declining days in the homes which he taught them to make happy.—Or should he die soon enough, the rest from his labors will ever and anon be heightened by the arrival of another and another of the children whom God hath given him.—Hamilton.

Lot's Mistake.

Lot chose wisely, as they of the world speak. Well, if this world be all; he got a rich soil—became a prince, had kings for his society and neighbors. It was nothing to Lot that "the men of the land were sinners before the Lord exceedingly"—enough that it was well watered everywhere. But his wife became enervated by voluptuousness and his children tainted with ineradicable corruption—the moral miasma of the society wherein he had made his home. Two warnings God gave him: first, his home and property were spoiled by the enemy; then came fire from heaven; and he fled from the cities of the plain a ruined man. His wife looked back with lingering regret upon the splendid home of her luxury and voluptuousness, and was overwhelmed in the encrusting salt; his children carried with them into the new world the plague-spot of that profligacy which had been the child of affluence and idleness: and the spirit of that rain of fire, of the burned cities of the Plain rose again in the darkest of the crimes which the Old Testament records, to poison the new society at its very fountain. And so the old man stood at last on the brink of the grave, a blackened ruin scathed by lightning, over the grave of his wife, and the shame of his family—saved, but only "so as by fire."—Robertson.

Queries.

Will some one please give a scriptural reason why the sisters do not lay aside their garments when they arise from supper to wash feet? since we learn in Matth. 12: 50, "whosoever shall do the will of my Father in heaven, the same is my brother and sister and mother." Also in Mark 3: 35, "whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother and my sister and mother." Also in Galations 3; 28, "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

SALLIE E. CART.

Since Paul teaches in 1st Cor. 7: 39, that the wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth, but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to marry whom she will, only in the Lord, (the case being also the same with the man.) Why is it then that some of our members unite themselves in marriage to such as we think are not in the Lord? but of the world and of other denominations? Will some one explain?

LEVI ANDES.

Will some brother please explain Mark 10: 25. "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God."

Report of the Sabbath School in the Nettle Creek Congregation, Indiana.

From report in Companion Vol. 4, No. 39, issued Sept., 9th, until December 9th, 1868, includes twelve lessons, for our 7 classes; 3 male and 4 female. The average number of scholars present 30. Number of chapters read by the male classes 1534; female, 2033. Total 3567 chapters. Number of verses memorized by the male classes, 442; female 342. Total 784.

This school is conducted by brethren only, (and according to the minutes of the Annual Meeting of 1868.) And we think our reports will be more extensive in the future than they have been in the past; in consequence of a change which we have made in the time of our meetings; it being one hour later than usual. Why is it that we do not see more reports of Sabbath schools? Every school should report regularly, at some stated time. No difference how small the report may be, "if we cannot do the best, we must do the best we can."

LEWIS W. TEETER, Sec'y.

Proposed Visits by Graybill Myers.

On January 27th, to Philadelphia. Remain two nights.

On Friday 29th, to Green Tree, and remain until the morning of the 4th of February.

Thence to Indian Creek by such conveyance as shall be furnished.

I expect some one to accompany me on this mission. This will we do if God will.

Correction.

Brother Henry: Please correct an error in my report of business of last Annual Meeting, on page 546 of volume 4. Cedar Creek congregation should have credit for 128 dollars, instead of 125 dollars.

JOHN ARNOLD.

Brother Jacob R. Ellenberger, Plattsburg, Mo., will give information of a rare bargain in a farm for sale in that vicinity, at $25 per acre; 200 acres, in which he has no other interest than that he wishes a brother or brethren to buy it, and live on it. Address him as above.

Our paper this week goes to press several days later than we had expected, on account of disappointment by one of our printers. Owing to the press of business and labor our matter also lacks in its arrangement. Several items of correspondence have been crowded out, as also other matter intended for this number.

Christian Family Companion.

Tyrone City, Pa., Jan. 5, 1869.

Introductory.

TIME, in its onward course, has made one more revolution, and has brought us safely to the first day of January, A. D., 1869. We have been meditating—deeply reflecting upon time past, time present, and time to come. In viewing the past our thoughts drag heavily onward. The living and the dead are brought to memory. There are periods where we would gladly pause, and some that we would fain evade. We revert with gladness to the few good deeds of our life, and linger fondly by the thinly scattered days of pleasure and enjoyment, while we would hasten over periods which cause remorse from which repentance alone can afford relief. O that we could be wise, that we could so spend our time that we might with pleasure look back "and see that our whole life was thine." Time is still hastening on as rapidly as ever. It appears but a very short time ago that we commenced the publication of the Companion, yet four full years have already been completed.—We have just commenced another year, but God only knows whether we shall be permitted to complete it. If we shall be permitted to do so, it is our prayer that the Lord will enable us to conduct the work to his honor and glory, and to the edification and instruction of his people. We feel moved, in view of the brevity of men's lives, to enter the new year with redoubled energy. We have not many years of life to hope for, and not a day warranted, hence we desire to make good use of the present.

But the work is not ours only, kind reader. Your time, also, is hastening on. You, too, are a year nearer eternity than you were last New Year. You have one year less wherein to prepare for heaven and happiness.

Let us then, editor, contributors, readers—all, resolve to work and work with might, while it is yet day, for "the night cometh when no man can work."

Business.

H. J. Kurtz, Covington, Ohio. J. U. has paid only for the first half of Vol. 4. Hence owes 75 cents on last Vol.

Joseph Stetzel, Mt. Carroll, Ill. It is all right. Thank you.

William Eikenberry, Waterloo, Iowa. Use the numbers sent for distribution in obtaining subscribers. You have paid for next year.

Samuel Brown, Island City, Mo. You are right; we did owe you 50 cents. The book has been sent, and your name entered and credited for '69.

L. S. Snyder, Missouri Valley, Iowa. The pamphlet (History of Harrison Co., Iowa.) has been received. Thank you. It is quite interesting, and may be useful to us.

Henry C. Shooker, Mountville, Pa. You can send the money by Post Office Order or by Registered Letter. A single subscription may be sent safely by putting up carefully in good envelope and plainly addressing it to "The Companion," Tyrone, Pa. Money Orders and checks to be made payable to H. R. Holsinger or order.

DIED.

In Manchester, Wabash Co., Ind., December 6th, our dear young brother, SOLOMON KARN, aged 30 years, 6 months, and 18 days. Disease, Dyspepsia and Bronchitis. He spent much of his time and money to regain his health, but all in vain. He and his wife—a dear young sister in Christ—traveled through the Western States and staid in Minnesota some time, but found no relief.—Came home in October and finally death relieved him of his sufferings.

Our sister need not sorrow as those who have no hope. He died in the triumph of faith. Funeral services rendered by the writer from John 11: 25, 26.

SAMUEL MURRAY.

In the Missisinawa church, Delaware Co., Ind., October 14th, FLORRIA E., daughter of Ada B. and William GUMP, aged 11 months, and 26 days. Disease, Summer complaint and chills. All the care of parents and friends and the skill of physicians could not save her. She has gone to heaven to blossom there. Funeral discourse by brethren John U. and George W. Studebaker, from Luke 15: 16.

Also, in the same congregation, Nov. 29th, sister CATHARINE HOLDREN, wife of Daniel Washington Holdren, of Palsy, aged 55 years, 11 months, and 1 day. She leaves a husband and 2 step-children to mourn their loss. She had been consort of brother Andrew Yoder, deceased, and leaves 6 children of her former husband, all married but one. Funeral discourse by brethren John U. and George W. Stauffacher, from Rev. 2: 25.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."
The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.
It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.
So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.
Subscriptions may begin at any time.
For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

VOLUME V. TYRONE, PA. TUESDAY, JAN. 12, 1869. NUMBER 2.

Selected by M. J. C. Ecker.

Woman's Rights.

"The right to wake when others sleep;
The right to watch, the right to weep;
The right to comfort in distress;
The right to soothe, the right to bless;
The right the widow's heart to cheer;
The right to dry the orphan's tear;
The right to feed and clothe the poor;
The right to teach them to endure;
The right when other friends have flown,
And left the sufferer all alone,
To kneel that dying couch beside,
And meekly point to Him who died;
The right a happy home to make,
In any clime for Jesus' sake;
Rights, such as these, are all we crave,
Until our last, a peaceful grave."

For the Companion.

To the Young Soldiers of the Cross.

"I write unto you little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake"——"because ye have known the Father"——"because ye are strong, and the Word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one." 1 John 2: 12, 13, 14.

During the late rebellion the young and inexperienced were often persuaded to enlist under false representations of the true character of the service upon which they entered. The proper [illegible] possible. Any thing and every thing was put aded to induce enlistment but the honest presentation of the fearful facts which every recruit should know. This is the case with many would-be officers in the spiritual warfare. Religion is painted in all colors save those that are produced by the beams of the Sun of Righteousness. The trumpet gives an uncertain sound, preparation for the battle is impossible, and the enemy, instead of being repulsed, is only given so much more vantage-ground; and the young soldier—old one's too, for that matter—brandishing his worthless blade, hacks the Bible and the Cross into fragments, and holds them up before God and angels and men, as the evidence of his valor, and the Divinely-certified pledge of final victory and an unfading crown. But you we feel confident, have enlisted under different circumstances. You have been properly instructed before your enrollment. Your equipment is of Divine manufacture. From head to foot you stand accoutred in the whole armor of the Gospel. You stepped into the ranks knowing that you must "resist unto blood, striving against sin," and "endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ." Youhave been made acquainted, experimentally, with the enemy with whom you must maintain a life-long contest. You know the cost at which you have fled from Egypt, and you have been forwarned of the hazards and perils which you must encounter before you reach the promised inheritance. You have subjective and objective testimony to the forgiveness of sin have the consciousness of "little children," "know the Father," are strong in the power of his might, "have overcome the wicked one," walk in the sustaining, elevating sense of the abiding inbeing of the Word of God, and make no account of derision and persecution, and the sacrifice of life and substance, only so that you may successfully "fight the good fight," and "finish your course with joy."

Is this a faithful photograph of your life as a soldier of the Cross? If it is not in fact as here portrayed, or what you desire, is it in spirit and your salvation? and out of it are the issues of being, and if God is entempled there, every thing pertaining to the body, from the falling of a hair to the unlossing of a shoelatchet, will take character from God's dominion in the seat of the emotions and preferences. If you are what your profession advertises you, you everywhere evince the determination to cling to the condition of victory and salvation, so exultingly expressed by David in Psalm 57: 7, "My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed, I will sing and give praise." Alliance with the most distinguished family on earth, is a mere nothing, in point of honor, dignity, and benefit, compared with everlasting community of life and glory with the King of kings. Had some mighty monarch offered to any of you his name and fame and fortune, thousands of your fellow-mortals would have envied you, and deemed you specially favored. But when you went down into the stream to ratify your nuptials with the Infinite God, perhaps not a few of your acquaintances would not have been in your place for half a kingdom. Those who are invited to a king's wedding, esteem themselves highly honored. They take higher rank in society ever afterward. But when God himself even so condescends as to plead, with bleeding heart, for espousal with the sinner, instead of being regarded as an honor, it is looked upon as a most pitiful degradation. Such a step, intelligently taken, requires a fixed heart, and this demands a prior sense of sin as a dominant destructive power, which nothing but the Holy Spirit can produce. Transition from the consciousness of our proper self as a sinner, and under the sentence of Divine condemnation, to a state of consciousness in God as a partaker of his nature and heir of his kingdom, involves a process so full of hell and horror, that the strain of the Psalmist, as uttered from our hearts has a meaning that brings us, in a sense, soul to soul with Jesus in the darkest, most harrowing experiences of his earthly history. "To do thy will, O God," was only another way of saying, "my heart is fixed." "The whole world lieth in wickedness," and "God manifest in the flesh" most necessarily create a universal hostility from the world towards this mysteriously constituted Person, so achieve a work like that which Jesus proposed in his day, viz. to give the race an example of perfect righteousness, and redeem the world from all iniquity, required nothing less than Infinite holiness incarnate, and such a state of heart, as the result of such a union that could face the aggregate wickedness of earth and hell from first to last without once infringing, in thought, feeling, temper, word, or action, the perfect law of God. "My heart is fixed," is the great pivot on which turns the mighty scheme of redemption.

Singularity is a concomitant of oneness with Christ as certainly as respiration is of life, and as the spirit of the world is selfish and intolerant, nothing is more essential to the maintenance of our Heavenward relations, than a fixedness of purpose that submits to death in any form rather than barter the hope of eternal life in order to gain exemption from defamation, persecution or torture. The various sects that existed in the days of Christ, while contending with one another, united in common hostility to him.—It is the same to day. The Savior was offered earthly honor—a throne and a crown, but that which is so luring to our fallen nature had no power over him. Failing to lift him to a throne they impaled him on a cross. There the "fixed heart" was broken, but not unbent from its determination "to do Thy will O God:" "Let this mind be in you," as the only condition of your salvation, for "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." "Set your face like a flint" against all the allurements and assaults of Hell, whether they come in the form of wealth, honor, pleasure, contempt, fire, or sword. He that endureth unto the end shall be saved. There is no alternative but unswerving devotion to the truth, or "everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." None but Jesus, must be your response whatever betide. Singularity in the length and breadth of our being, "enduring the cross, despising the shame," will exalt us to a pitch of joy and a position of dignity which Hell itself knows is well worth suffering for while on probation. The angels that kept not this first estate, and are now weltering in the torments of perdition, have not forgotten the unutterable bliss of the Beatific Vision; and so great is their malignity to God and good, that they oppose every conceivable obstacle to those for whom Christ died. A fixed heart, a will, a purpose, that has in it the strength and endurance of God incarnate, and the volume of of Eternity, is the only plank that keeps us out of the fixed state of everlasting antagonism to God, and out of the bottomless vortex of unrest and woe. "Let him that standeth, take heed last he fall." "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation."

"Despised and rejected of men" was a feature in the history of Christ as essential as a redemption from sin was imperative. Such a Saviour or none. Such treatment from such beings, was of all things, most natural. Fixedness in good, and love of souls on His part, and fixedness in evil and hatred on theirs, was a foregone necessity. The reason that we suffer so little for Christ is, that there is so much conformity to the world in spirit and conduct. The world has not in these latter days fallen in love with Christ, nor does it evince respect to his followers on account of their allegiance to Him. Let us reproduce the Life of Jesus in a rigid, uncompromising manner, as we should and may, and we will soon raise a storm of persecution. It may not come in the form of faggots and gibbets, but it will come from the pulpit and the press, and from malignant hearts and slanderous tongues all around us. The "offence of the cross" and "the reproach of Christ" have not ceased. When we consider the innate hostility of the world to "pure and undefiled religion," we cannot but feel how deeply necessary to steady and fortify our every step and every undertaking with the immutable resolution, "my heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed." And unless we are sustained by this determination, born of the Holy Spirit, regulating the interior workings and outward expressions of our life as by a mainspring coiled out of the very heart of God, we will certainly, but perhaps insensibly, glide down the current, "mix with the people," and be as "a cake not turned." Hosea 7:8. There is a fearful tendency in the human heart to exercise its depraved elements, and become fixed in some form of self-pleasing. All the surroundings and influences of the world work toward that end. In our flesh there dwelleth no good thing, and as long as we are in the body, it is fight, fight, fight. Our bodies are temples of God, and our hearts incense breathing altars, yet, in our complex constitution, there is many a little waste spot not yet subjugated to the rightful owner, in which demons sit laughing, and gibing, and tempting. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," but Satan knows how to fashion anything into an idol, from the most magnificent endowment of Heaven down to a lap dog or domestic fowl. My face tingles with shame while I aver, as a matter almost too insignificant to mention, and yet significant enough to [illegible] known brethren who were more gentle and kind to their horses and dogs than to wife and children.—He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

In the enemy's territory, we must be all eye, all ear. On all sides are objects that wear the aspect of goodness, which are nothing but gins and traps of the wicked one. If we are off our guard but a moment, or become drowsy at our post, we are sure to slip a little, if not much, toward the seen and the temporal, away from the unseen and the eternal. The robe of Christ's righteousness is proof against all the weapons of the adversary, but sometimes a gust of passion, or some other temptation, will unbuckle our coat of mail, and then the arrows of Satan penetrate to the quick and wound our peace. Our vigilance must be constant and persistent. We do not find out all the devices of the Devil in a day. A lifetime will leave us much to learn. A heedless, dozing disciple is an easy prey to the destroyer of souls. "Therefore, let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober." 1st Thess. 5:6. The 7th verse shows that sleep and drunkenness go together. A professor but half awake is never sober. He lacks discernment, and may as easily swallow the Devil's opiate as the water of life. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it."—Jer. 17:9. The introspective gaze that true religion requires, oh how rare, because so difficult and painful. It is a fearful sight to look down into the dark, foul depths of the heart. So heavy and dense are the fogs of sin, that we need Divine illumination to see what a brood of hateful monsters are nestling in the very centre of our being. The crooked, wily serpent can wriggle himself into the Holy of holies, and look and speak like a very Gabriel. No lot in life is so exempt from temptation as to allow us to lay down our weapons, or forego self-examination. Not only in every relation but in every department of life, you will have your patience tried, and your faith tested. In the barn, in the house, in the field, sowing, reaping, washing, cooking, sweeping, and what not? Satan finds means in all to vex and weary the soul that strives for the mastery.—Perhaps when you come from secret communion with God, your heart aglow with devotion, you encounter some trial that stirs the very dregs of your evil nature. Whatever the form, or whatever the power, of your temptations, let this be the spirit in which you meet them, "my heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed." The soul that is fixed on God and in God, is on a Rock against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. It is under influences and in an element that impel it to a settled state in the majesty and blessedness of the Infinite. Nothing definite has ever entered into the conceptions of the wildest ambition in the unrenewed heart, that does not dwindle into insignificance alongside "the glory that shall be revealed in us." If you are "unstable as water, you shall not excel." Gen. 49:4. Be not as "clouds without water, carried about of winds," or "like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind, and tossed." "Let not that man think he shall with Christ [illegible]" [illegible] life be hid the blessed issue of stability in the everlasting principle of holiness. The heart thus fixed and centred, will be enabled, in time and in eternity, to "sing and give praise."

Power of Prayer.—A man well known on the London stage as a dramatic author, but as a man of high pre-eminence in the dramatic art and practice, and who, thirty years ago, was running an entire round of riot and revelry, told me after he had become a preacher of Christ's gospel, that through all those years of riot and revelry, in connection with the stage and the green room at Covent garden and other places, he always heard his mother's voice ringing in his ears. Her very words, and the tones of her voice, came to his recollection and he was fairly followed by his mother long after she had gone to heaven. It ended in his conversion; and he bade me tell all men that this life of his had been continually deteriorating his moral nature; and he also bade me tell all mothers never to despair of an ungodly son, even if he should take to the 'boards,' but to pray on, and hope and believe on.—Sunday School Treasury.

A Token of Love.

With thankfulness we acknowledge the receipt of one dozen of the Brethren's New Hymn Books which have been sent to us by some brethren for poor members of this the church in Richland county, Wis.

"Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days." Eccl. 11:1.

A kind word and a charitable act often produce happy effects. By kind entreaties the angry passion and base design of an enemy may be subdued. Solomon says: "If thine enemy hungers, give him bread to eat; if he thirsts give him water to drink; and the Lord shall reward thee." More so when we give to the poor. "He that hath pity on the poor lendeth unto the Lord, and that which he hath given will he pay him again." Prov. 19:17. And as it is written, Psalm 112:9, "He hath given to the poor, his righteousness endureth forever." Greater still the reward will be, for acts of kindness bestowed upon the poor members of the church of God. As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith. Gal. 6:10. At the great day of final retribution the Judge will say: "Whatsoever ye have done unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Yea, even as low down as "a cup of cold water" given to a disciple of the Lord, will be had in memorial by the just Judge. Matt. 10:42. Be encouraged, then. Brethren, "make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations. Then and there is when and where we may expect to find again the bread which we may now cast upon the waters; not in the shape we dispursed them; but in an immortal form. Those words of encouragement and tokens of love we administer to the poor, may be the means by which we may attain to a high station in the Kingdom of Glory. Yea, they will shine as diamonds in the "Crown of Righteousness" which we shall receive at the appearing of our Savior. Then, "they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many unto righteousness as the stars forever and ever." Dan. 12:3. "Be encouraged, brethren, proclaim the glad tidings of free salvation. According as we improve our talent, the reward will be. Luke 19:16, 17. And to you, my dear brethren, who are not favored with the privilege of holding forth the bread of life to a perishing world, by preaching the word, I would say be not discouraged: you too may win souls for the great Kingdom. God has blessed you, perhaps with great possessions of this world's goods, wherewith you may of your abundance, give to them who have need; and thus "Lay up for yourselves a treasure in heaven where moth and rust doth not corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."

There are others who are destitute, having neither the ability to extend the bread of life, to invite home the wandering sons and daughters of Adam, nor the means of relieving the wants of others. You perhaps think there is nothing that you can do to gain the divine approbation. To you is the precept as well as to others: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven.". You, by your chaste walk and holy conversation, may invite those around you who are without hope, and cause them to return to the Father, and seek the bread of life which came down from heaven. We all may be observing the precepts of our Savior; make to [illegible] this earthly tabernacle, convey us to "Abraham's bosom, in our Father's house," where we shall rest from all our labor. "Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given unto us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy," &c. Read Rom. 12:6–21.

The Sabbath.

"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

Said a Parishioner to his minister; "I never attend church on Sabbath but remain at home and post my accounts of the week's sales for settlement;" when the latter replied: "The day of judgment is coming; then there will be a day spent in settling accounts."

This little piece of literature came under my notice having been carefully placed between the leaves of a school-girl's book, and I thought what a day of settlement that will be! How many of the settlements of this world will be reversed? Will not the person who spends the hallowed hours of the Sabbath be there with his books for settlement? Will he be judged out of them? Yes he may; but the great statute-book of heaven will be opened also and he be judged out of that as to the keeping of God's law.

The Sabbath which has been given by God himself for holy meditation; for a dismissing of the labors of this world with all care and anxiety, and a time of holy devotion; a time to be spent more directly in the service of God; a time to attend to the administration of God's word, to the reading of his will and a hearing of the same. Hours! holy hours to be devoted to the working of the merits of the atonement; to be credited to us to balance the debt which is against us, and cancel it, so that it may not stand against us to the condemnation of our souls. Yet should any of my kind readers be so unfortunate as to waste the day of God in any way, and not improve it to the honor of its great author, there will be a debt to be paid that might well draw tears from the sealed eyes, and sympathy from the hardest heart; when there is nothing wherewith to pay and no kind Savior to plead the merits of his blood in behalf of the debtor; no righteousness of the Son of God to clothe us about that we do not appear destitute in his sight.

We are fearful that often things are done on the Sabbath which are not in the spirit of our holy religion nor in harmony with the fifth commandment. The day sanctified by the Creator of all things is too often profaned by doing things which are not strictly necessary, and are an evil in the sight of God, which might be a virtue if performed in their proper time and order. Too often instead of laying aside the thoughts of our daily calling and trying to confide our minds to the sacred things of God they are permitted to rove far and wide over the world leading us to [illegible] where we ought not to be. This is the reason why the faithful minister is often compelled to preach to the empty seats of his humble meeting-house instead of the faithful followers of the meek Messiah of God.

How often does the action of the master hinder the servant of the house from attending to the things of the Lord on his holy day! How often is the wife, the son or daughter hindered from going to the place dedicated to the solemn worship of our God, because the husband, and father has grown cold and become negligent in regard to things partaining to the kingdom of God's dear Son, and the salvation of his own soul, and the souls of those whom God has entrusted to his care, and will hold him responsible as to their training in life! We fear that too often does the alarmed sinner stumble over the formal professor of religion, who like the merchant is preparing his account for settlement, or writing business letters on the Sabbath day.

Dear brethren, or any who may read this humble article, be not offended at the liberty of your weak young brother, but let us one and all, try to remember the saying which calls loudly to "Remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy;" put your shoulder to the wheel and the work of the Lord will yet prosper in our midst, and we may yet be refreshed by his presence.

If we must handle books we have the Bible; blessed volume of truth! We hear and read glad tidings in it. If we must write let us write to one of our humble periodicals and thus we may encourage the fainting child of God.

Forgiving our Enemies.

If there is one act our Savior did while on earth that proved his Divinity more than another, I think it is the forbearance he had towards his enemies. Who but Christ, invested with supernatural power, could have borne the scoffs and persecutions he was subjected to, and not resent them, knowing as he did that he would have the power to destroy those wicked persons without any injury to himself. Now the thought might arise in some one's mind, that we are not able, with our weak human nature to forgive our enemies; but I think a little reflection would tell us our weak human nature has nothing to do with forgiving. We could not do it if we did not get the power from on high.

We are naturally prone to selfishness; and look where we will, we always find that when we do a good act we look for a reward. True, the christian does not often expect a reward in this world, but a far better compensation hereafter if able to overcome, or rather [illegible] better say, is willing, as Christ has promised to enable us to overcome all sin, if we put our trust in him.

We expect to dwell with Christ and enjoy everlasting happiness. But what reward had our dear Redeemer for all his sufferings? None here. He would have been no less the Son of God if he had never come on earth. But it pleased God to give his only-begotten Son to be a propitiation for our sins, and it pleased Christ to bow in humble submission to the will of the Father, and he drank the cup which none other was able to drink. He said to the two brothers, "ye shall indeed drink of the cup," but he himself drank the cup. O how should we poor fallen creatures humble ourselves to Almighty God for his loving-kindness toward us. Let us try to imitate Christ, and obey and serve him, that we may be among those to whom it will be said, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Matth. 25: 23.

Sin Against the Holy Ghost.

This is truly a serious sin,—a sin of great importance, and in which we are all more or less interested. We should begin now and ask, Is it I? Is it I? who has committed this great crime. In this, as well as other scriptures seemingly hard to be understood, we think the Divine record is sufficiently plain, so as not to be misunderstood. The context (Matth. 12: 22 to 32 inclusive) in which the text occurs, shows plainly what the unpardonable sin is, and how it may be committed.

We must consider first, the circumstances which caused our Lord to use the words in the text.

In reading the above chapter we find our Lord casting a demon, or devil, out of a blind and dumb man, and when the Pharisees heard and saw that the devil was cast out, and that the man spake and saw, &c., they, as usual, began immediately to vilify and accuse Christ falsely. But of all their false accusations, they had never made so bold and daring accusation as this: when Jesus was casting out devils by the Spirit of God, they turned and said he cast these demons out by Beelzebub, the prince of devils, which language was too intolerable to be borne, and high treason in the sight of heaven. Then Jesus said: "All manner of sin and blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiv-

As if he had said: You can say all manner of hard things against me and it will be forgiven you, as my past life has fully shown you, but in this case you have committed an unpardonable offense, by openly and shamefully accusing the Holy Ghost of doing the works of Satan, you have spoken against the Holy Spirit, and therefore there is no forgiveness for you in this world, neither in eternity, though you may seek it diligently with tears. That is to say then, the unpardonable sin, or sin against the Holy Ghost, is to speak irreverently of, or act disrespectfully to God's spirit, or to accuse it of doing the works of Satan. Ananias and Sapphira were struck dead for lying to the Holy Ghost.

The Holy Spirit has a very important part to perform in our salvation—that of conviction and sanctification. We will do well to look into this matter and examine ourselves and see if we have not grieved the Holy Ghost by words, or actions.

Does his spirit bear witness with our spirit that he is still with us, and not taken his everlasting flight?

Dear reader, there is such a thing as sinning our day of grace away, and by this means sin against the Holy Ghost. "My spirit shall not always shine with man." Gen. 6: 3. There is such a thing as to be a "partaker of the Holy Ghost and to taste the good things of God, and of the powers of the world to come," and then for us to fall away. Hebrew 6. It will be "impossible for us to be renewed again unto repentance." God says to such: "Let Ephriam alone: he is joined to his idols;" Hos. 4: 12; "that their heart will become seared as it were with a hot iron;" 1 Tim. 4: 2, & "that he has given them over to Satan that they might believe a lie and be damned. 2d Thess. 2: 11, 12.

These are awful denunciations of God against those who do wickedly and trifle with serious things.

In conclusion, then, let us who have named the name of Jesus, see that we have not a name to live, while we are dead in trespasses and in sins. Let us not dare to dissemble before God, for our sins will surely find us out. Let us "put on the whole armor of God" and fight bravely until death comes to our relief. It would be far better for us to have never been born, or a millstone were fastened to our necks and we cast into the sea than for us to grieve, or sin against this great Spirit of God. There is such a thing as falling from grace, or favor with God; and woe to that individual who experiences such a fall. May God have mercy on us and save us from such a state, is my hope and prayer.

Serious objections against Infant-baptism.

1. It is forbidden by the Word of God, the scriptures, which enjoins the worship of the one true God and really forbids the worship of idols. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Matth. 5: 24. So Christ commanded the apostles to baptize believers. This [illegible] them to baptize unbelievers, or infants who can neither believe nor disbelieve. Therefore infant baptism being forbidden it is a sin to practice it.

2. It begets a fleshly church. Christ designed that his church should be spiritual-composed of members led by his Spirit. Rom. 8: 9, Eph. 11: 19—22 1 Peter, 11: 5—9. But infant baptism fills the church with a fleshly membership.

3. It changes the order of the Gospel. It places baptism first in the plan of initiating members into the church; whereas, in Christ's appointment it is the last. He said, teach and then baptize. But Pedobaptists say, baptize and then teach. He said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but they say, he that is baptized and afterward believes, shall be saved. The order of the gospel is, 1st. Repentance. 2nd. Faith. 3rd. Baptism. Pedo-baptist order is, 1st. Baptism. 2nd. Perhaps faith. 3rd.—Peradventure repentance. Hence Pedo-baptism is not the gospel.

4. It makes void the command of Christ. Let infant baptism be universally practiced, and what will become of the command of Christ to baptize believers? It is made void—of none effect. There would not be a believer baptised. And such is generally true of all the old, established Pedobaptist churches; they very seldom or never baptize a believer. Well did Christ say of such, Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition? "But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matth. 9: 3, 9.

5. It licenses sin. Those sprinkled in infancy are none the less under obligation to submit to believers, baptism when they believe; but they are taught that their sprinkling in infancy is enough, and thus they are encouraged to neglect that which all believers are required to do, and so live, rejecting the authority of Christ as set forth in this requirement.

6. It binds the conscience. Many who have been sprinkled in infancy, by reading and hearing the truth are convinced that it is their duty to be immersed.—They go to their minister and freely unfold their convictions to him, and request him to immerse them.—No, says he, you were sprinkled in infancy, and we regard that as valid baptism; it would be sacrilege to repeat it; hence you must rest satisfied. We cannot baptize you again. Thus all such are instructed to go contrary to their consciences.

7. It deprives of the liberty of choice. No person sprinkled in infancy is permitted to obey Christ in the act of immersion. The right of choice is destroyed.—This is the established rule of the Pedo-baptist churches. They dare not say to their members, choose which ye will have, sprinkling or immersion.

8. If Pedo-baptist churches are the churches of Christ, many of their members have to leave them in order to obey him. It is a fact that cannot be denied that many of the members of these churches have to leave them, and join the various Baptist churches, just to have the privilege of obeying Christ in the act of baptism. Can such things be, and they be the churches of Christ? We think not. We honestly conclude that no man or woman can see that the Bible favors infant-baptism, unless they read it with the determination that it shall do so, and all such can read it to favor anything they imagine, however unreasonable. For "God will send them strong delusions to believe a lie and be damned." 2d Thess. 11: 7—12. I was brought up to such a ficticious faith and knowing the terror of the Lord, I will try to persuade my readers to obey Christ.

Dialogue on Feetwashing.

SECOND CONVERSATION.

M. Well brother J., I have thought a great deal about our talk the other day, and if you can remove one difficulty in my way, I will be about ready to adopt your view of the subject of Feet-washing, as we were considering it the other day.

J. Well brother M., what is that?

M. You said the mystical body, the Church, ought to represent the physical body of Christ. And as his two hands were employed, so there should also be two members of the Mystical Body employed at the same time. I have thought a great deal about that, and I think the fingers on the hands are also members of the physical body. Therefore your analogy does not hold good for two.

J. You know brother M., the Savior spoke of the hand in the singular number. "If thy hand offend thee cut it off &c. Now he certainly spoke of the hand, fingers and all, and yet he says "cut it off." The metaphor I consider represents a member of the church, as the hand, and "cut it off," signifies that the hand represents one member, then both hands represent two members.

M. That appears plausible. But still I think I have the advantage of the argument, considering the fingers members of the body.

J. Why, my dear brother, have I not given you the language of Christ? And if I understand the meaning of the metaphor, it, the hand, represents a member; and Christ speaks of it in the singular as I showed you before: and "cut it off," the member represented by the hand.—If, therefore, the hand will represent a member in the church in one case, it will in another.

M. Well that is true.

J. Certainly true. And now let us look at the case. Your theory presents one member as imitating two members of Christ's physical body or else it represents a member as the head; for Christ is "the head of the body, the church." My view of the subject gives a plurality of members in the church, to represent a plurality of the members of the physical body of Christ. Now it seems to me if "the unlearned or unbelieving, come among us" at our Love-feasts, and see the body of Christ represented as I have stated above, they must say, that is a fair representation of the performance, as required in John, 13th chapter.

M. Well brother J., that is satisfactory. I must say I am now satisfied that the general order of the church is right.

Yours for the truth.

The Church and the World.

That this is an age of wonderful improvement and progression is apparent to the most superficial observer. Individuals progress; nations progress; societies and churches progress.

In the religious world, we had the rigors of the Mosaic dispensation; then the more gentle teaching of Christ and his disciples; and now an almost entire freedom from ecclesiastical restraints; and perhaps this advancement is more marked, rapid and surprising among the so-called orthodox churches than in any other connection. But a few years ago we had all the horrors of Inquisition; more lately the "blue laws" of New England, forbidding a man to kiss his own wife on the Sabbath day: and now, church members luxuriating in the most extravagant of worldly amusements.

Formerly, the minister of the gospel—a shadow to the old and a ghost to the young—could be indentified at the farthest possible range of the human vision, by the simplicity of his dress and his style, and church-men were known by their "daily walk and conversation." Latterly, the lengthened visage of the minister has been contracted into a genial smile, and his enjoyment of an evening's entertainment with the people of the world is of the most superlative degree; and church-members, whether at a fashionable church festival or on a ride to a neighboring village, shake the light, fantastic toe with as much vigor as their unregenerated neighbors. And when we behold with wondering admiration, the strange (though not unfamiliar) phenomenon of the strong orthodox arm of some pretended follower of the lowly Nazarene, whirling the voluptuous form of a modern venus through the measured tread of the quadrille to the soul-stirring strains of the violin, we feel inclined to exclaim with one of old: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a christian."

In view of the fact that "revolutions never go backwards," is it not reasonable to suppose that this same spirit of generous progression will continue to disseminate itself until all mankind are united in one happy joyful family—the Jew and the Gentile, the saint and the sinner, the church and the world; and that the day is not far distant when the minister will be seen on Sabbath mornings going to his church with a Bible in one hand and a violin in the other, perhaps to vary the religious exercises of the day according to his own inclinations or the requirements of his congregation?

Lamentations of Jeremiah.

This short book of the Holy Bible has some peculiarities belonging to it of a very significant nature.—They are applicable to some period subsequent to the final calamities that befell the Jewish Nation, and were written doubtless to paint to the mind in pathetic terms the then existing calamities brought upon the inhabitants of Judah, because of their iniquity. They are also prophetic in their deep meaning, foreshadowing the great storm of God's wrath that was to come upon them. As an instance, see 4: 10. "The hands of the pitiful women have sodden their own children; they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people." Such was actually the case at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, if we are to credit history.

Those plaintive effusions of the prophet are full of sorrow and tenderness, manifestations of a holy, feeling heart, that so deeply lamented the fading glory of a great nation—a nation that God had a special care over and willing in his great mercy to entail continued happiness, "but they would not."

In the arrangement of the writings of the "Lamentations," we notice something peculiar. There are five chapters, and every chapter, except the third, has twenty-two verses: according to the learned, every verse commences with a different Hebrew letter. The first with the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet, thus: first Aleph, second Beth, and so on to Tau, the last.—There are but 22 letters in the alphabet (Hebrew). The third chapter contains sixty-six verses, the first three in the Hebrew commence with the first letter; the next three with the second, &c., consequently, three times the twenty-two letters make sixty-six. The 119th Psalm is arranged in a similar way. The first eight verses commence with the first letter, the next eight with the second, and so on through the whole alphabet. This acrostic style of versification was quite common with ancient writers, more particularly in their elegial poetry, doubtless as a means to assist their memory.

Where amidst the mass of poetry emanating from modern authors, can be found anything equal to those effusions accredited to the Prophet Jeremiah? Where find such variety, such grand imagery, such touching and pathetic outbursts of sorrow, such feelings of solemnity and holy reverence? Such demonstrations of the purity of the heart? Such confirmations of true philanthrophy? Such confessions of self-abasement? Such boldness in declaring the Lord the only true God, the only one to help in the time of trouble, the only source of true and lasting happiness?

Away then, with the vain and immoral writings of a Shakespeare and his many modern imitators. Study the poetry of the Bible as food for the mind handed down from Holy Angels, that the soul may be modelled and fully qualified to hold converse with the heavenly choir around the throne of the great Jehovah!

After the Funeral.

After all the returnings, that one "after the funeral" is the saddest. Who will say it is not so, who has followed one to the grave? While he was sick we went in and out, anxious, sorrowing, suffering. The solicitude to relieve, and care for and comfort him, engrossed us; the apprehension of our own dissolutions, in case he should be removed from us, almost drove us wild.

While he lay dead under the home roof, there was a hurry and bustle in preparation for the funeral rites. Friends are sent for neighbors are present, the funeral arrangements are discussed, the * * * * hospitalities of the house provided; all is excitement; the loss is not yet perceived in all its greatness.

But "after the funeral," after the business has subsided and things begin to move on as usual, then it is we begin to know what has befallen us. The house seems still and sepulchral though in the heart of the city; and though its threshold be trodden by friendly feet, it is as if empty. The apartments, how deserted! especially the room where he struggled in the last conflict. There are his clothes, there his books, there his hat and cane, there his ever vacant seat at the family board. During his sickness we had not so much noticed these things, for we hoped ever that he might use or occupy them. But now we know it can never be, and we see the dreadful vacuity every where. Oh how dark and cheerless the night shadows come down after the funeral! No moon or stars ever shone so dimly; no darkness seemed so utterly dark. The tickings of the clock resound like bell strokes all over the house.

No footstep now on the stairs or overhead in the sick chamber; no nurse and watchers to come and say, "he is not so well and asks for you." No, indeed, you may sleep on and take your rest, if you can. Ah poor heart! It will be long before the sweet rest you once knew will bring again the scenes through which you have just passed, and you will start from it but to find them all too real. God pity the mourner "after the funeral."

Social Meetings.

We have been thinking for some time upon the subject of social meetings amongst the brethren. When we speak of social meetings we have reference to meetings in which every brother and sister has the privilege to speak, by way of encouragement to the church. In meetings of this kind we not only enjoy the opportunities for speaking, but also for public prayer, by which means we become qualified to pray for all who may call upon us to pray for them. We are satisfied that we have many good members who, if called upon to pray for a sick neighbor, could not possibly do so. Why? because they lack the requisite qualifications. Go to those churches where they have social or prayer meetings, and you will find praying men and women. We mean, you will find those who are qualified to pray under almost any circumstance in this life.

Another good resulting from these meetings, is, they act as a stimulus to the reading of the scriptures, by which they may become better prepared to edify and encourage each other. Such meetings also exert a salutary influence over the lives of those engaged in them. By attending and participating in these meetings, we designate ourselves as followers of the Master; and in such meetings we find work for all to do. Let those speak who feel to do so, and let those pray who feel a spirit of prayer.

We are happy to know that our annual meetings have passed decisions favorable to such meetings, and that some of the branches of the church are exercising in them, no doubt to the advancement of the growth of their members in grace, and the knowledge of the truth, and the promotion of the cause of Christ. We can speak from experience in relation to such meetings. In the congregation where we lived until within the last year, they have a social or prayer meeting, in which we have enjoyed ourselves as well, we think, as it is possible for christians to do while encumbered with flesh and blood. And we feel very positive that where the brethren have meetings of this kind, that there is more vital piety than where such meetings are not encouraged; and we certainly think that wherever circumstances will permit, they ought to have a social meeting. These kind of social interviews have been tolerated by the Old Brethren for a number of years. It formed the nucleus of the brotherhood, and has been encouraged in localities where the brethren have no speakers, and we are convinced that it would be well, and meet the approbation of our common Master. The members in our western States hold meetings of this character for the reading of God's holy word, and for prayer and exhortation, and by so doing, build each other up in the most holy faith. And if it is well for them to do so, it certainly would be right for the brethren to have them everywhere. We know there are some objections among us to such enterprises, looking upon them as "new things;" but we think they are not. We find in reading the Bible that they who served the Lord met often, and spoke to each other, no doubt, words of encouragement.

We were well pleased with brother Forney's prayer-meeting talk. It certainly does strengthen love to speak of it to others, and it strengthens faith in the Lord to speak of it often. We feel like encouraging such meetings. We believe we ought to be more sociable with each other than we are; try to help each other along while we are permitted to remain in this world. And particularly, we ought to encourage our young members. It does a young member good for the older ones to be sociable with them when at meeting. A word or act of kindness, oh how good it is! Then let us always, at meeting, as elsewhere, treat our young members with kindness, never passing them without the proper salutation. I fear our laboring brethren are too cold and indifferent on this subject.

Dear reader, the above I submit for your consideration, and would love to read something on the same from other and abler pens.

Beauty.

How comparatively valueless is beauty! How it is regarded by God! He gives it to the lily, and in a day it fades and is gone. He gives it to the wings of the butterfly, and soon it dies and its beauty is forgotten. He gives it to the flowers of the Spring, soon to fall; to the leaves of the forest, soon to grow yellow and decay in the Autumn. How many flowers, lilies, and roses, does he cause to blossom in solitude, where no man is, where they waste their sweetness on the desert air.—How many streams ripple in the wilderness, and how many cataracts, age after age, have poured their thunders on the air, unheard and unseen by mortals! So little does God think of beauty. So the human form and "face divine." How soon is that beauty marred, and, like the lily, how soon is its last trace obliterated! In the cold grave, among the undistinguished multitude of the dead, who can tell which of all the mouldering host was blessed with a lovely set of features or complexion? Alas! all has faded like the morning flower. How vain then, to set the affections on so frail a treasure.

Conversation is the daughter of reasoning, the mother of knowledge, the breath of the soul, the commerce of hearts, the bond of friendship, the nourishment of content, and the occupation of men of wit.

POETRY.

Time and Eternity.

It is not Time that flies:
'Tis we, 'tis we, are flying:
It is not Life that dies:
'Tis we, 'tis we, are dying.
Time and eternity are one;
Time is eternity begun:
Life changes, yet without decay:
'Tis we alone who pass away.

It is not Truth that flies:
'Tis we, 'tis we, are flying:
It is not Faith that dies;
'Tis we, 'tis we, are dying.
O ever-during faith and truth,
Whose youth is age, whose age is youth!
Twin stars of immortality,
Ye cannot perish from our sky.

It is not Hope that flies;
'Tis we, 'tis we, are flying:
It is not Love that dies:
'Tis we, 'tis we, are dying.
Twin streams, that have in heaven your birth,
Ye glide in gentle joy through earth.
We fade like flowers beside you sown:
Ye are still flowing, flowing on.

Yet we but die to live:
It is from death we're flying:
For ever lives our life:
For us there is no dying.
We die but as the spring-bud dies,
In summer's golden glow to rise.
These be our days of April bloom;
Our July is beyond the tomb.

Selected by DANIEL SNOWBERGER.

What Might be Done.

What might be done, if men were wise—
What glorious deeds, my suffering brother,
Would they unite
In love and right,
And cease their scorn of one another!

Oppression's heart might be imbued
With purest drops of loving-kindness,
And knowledge pour
From shore to shore
Light on the eyes of mental blindness.

All Slavery, warfare, lies and wrongs—
All vice and crime might die together,
And wine and corn
To each man born
Be free as warmth in summer weather.

The meanest wretch that ever trod,
The deepest sunk in guilt and sorrow,
Might stand erect
In self respect,
And share the teeming world to-morrow.

What might be done? This might be done
And more than this, my suffering brother—
More than the tongue
Ever said and sung,
If men were wise, and loved each other.

Judge Not.

Judge not; the workings of his brain
And of his heart thou can't not see;
What looks to thy dim eyes a stain,
In God's pure light may only be
A scar brought from some well-won field.
Where thou would'st only faint and yield,

The look, the air, that frets thy sight,
May be a token that below
The soul has closed in deadly fight
With some internal fiery foe,
Whose glance would scorch thy smiling grace
And cast thee shuddering on thy face!

The fall thou darest to despise,
May be the slackened angel's hand
Has suffered it, that he may rise,
And take a firmer, surer stand;
Or, trusting less to earthly-things,
May henceforth learn to use his wings.

And judge none lost, but wait and see
With hopeful pity, not disdain;
The depth of the abyss may be
The measure of the height of pain
And love and glory that may raise
This soul to God in after days.

MISCELLANEOUS SELECTIONS.

BY JAMES A. SELL.

Sometime.

It is a sweet song flowing to and fro among the topmost bough of the heart, and filling the whole air with such joy and gladness as the birds do, when the summer morning comes out of the darkness, and the day is born on the mountains. We have all our possession in the future, which we call "sometime."

Beautiful and sweet singing birds are there, only our hands seldom grasp the one, or our ears hear, except in far off strains the other.—But, oh, reader, be of good cheer, for all the good there is a golden "sometime"! When the hills and valleys of time are all past, when the wear and the fever, the disappointment and the sorrow of life is over, then there is the peace and the rest appointed of God. Oh, homestead, over whose blessed roof falls no shadow of even clouds, across whose threshold the voice of sorrow is never heard; built upon the eternal hills, and standing with thy spires and pinnacles of celestial beauty among the palm trees of the city on high; those who love God shall rest under thy shadow, where there is no more sorrow, nor pain, nor the sound of weeping.

Our Cistern Almost Full.

There is in our house a central cistern, supplied from a spring yonder. From that cistern go many pipes, leading to all parts of the house, carrying water to supply all the family wants. If it be nearly full, and yet not filled to the top, so as to cover the mouth of the pipes, the pipes will remain dry, and none of the inmates will get any water. — The cistern is almost full—a little more would make it overflow—but for all practical purposes almost full is as bad as having it empty. Almost full, yet the family get none of it. It is not full enough to flow into the branching pipes and gurgle along to the most distant extremities, ready at a touch to pour forth its liquid treasures. In this image we see why many a christian is useless in the world. He is almost full, but not overflowing. He is concerned about the great things of eternity; but he is not so completely filled by the Spirit of Christ, that it flows into all the little channels of his daily life. These, alas, are dry.—And yet it is through these he chiefly touches others—through these that the currents of his influence overflow into the hands and hearts of those around him. Therefore, real Christian as he may be, he does very little good to others. Perhaps he does harm by thus misrepresenting Christ and himself likewise; for he seems more empty than he really is.—Though not dry, for all practical results he is so. Others are not watered and blessed by his influence.—Ah, Christian, keep the cistern full.

An Eastern African Custom.—In Senjero only females are sold into slavery, because once a wife cruelly murdered her husband at the request of the king of the country. At first the king is said to have desired the husband, who was of high rank, to kill his wife and bring him a piece of her flesh, which had been indicated by the soothsayers as a sure cure for the sick monarch.—The husband, fascinated by the beauty of his wife, was unwilling to obey the royal command. The king therefore commanded the wife to murder her husband, which she did without hesitating. Since that time it has been the custom to sell women into slavery into other countries: but when male slaves are transported beyond Senjero, they are said generally to commit suicide by hanging themselves.

We learn something even by failure.

Observations.

Some of our correspondents say they would have preferred to have each subscriber's name published, in order to obtain their addresses. We have no doubt that our old method gave better satisfaction to most all others interested than it did to ourself. It made us much labor to prepare the names for the press, and at a time when we had the least time to attend to such duties. We shall try the present system until all shall have had an opportunity of judging of it.

Owing to the late arrival of many of our largest lists of subscribers, we were much perplexed in mailing the first number of this volume, and have good reasons to fear that errors may have occured. If the first number has not come to hand when this issue arrives, we desire to be notified without delay. And if any should have received two copies, which will occur in several instances, we specially request that they be carefully preserved subject to our order.—We feel a desire to supply our patrons with the full complement of papers belonging to the volume, and in order to do so, we should be apprised of all errors while we have yet the power to correct them. Let the matter of this notice be remembered during the year.

We have been so extremely busy during the last two weeks, and so much annoyed by the delay of our issues, that we have no opportunity to collect our thoughts for editorial writings. The press of business is much greater than we had expected. We had hoped from the urgent manner in which we had requested the lists to be sent in early, that we would receive the heaviest of "letter business," previous to the first of January; but instead we found them coming in later than other years, and the consequence is an overflow of business, and we fear that errors may occur.

It would have given us pleasure to have gathered some of the fragments of correspondence scattered among our business letters, but we lacked that leisure necessary for compilation. If our correspondents would all observe the rules of writing they would greatly aid us in that part of our business.

Hence if our paper should lack in its variety and departments for a few weeks no other apology need be expected.

Business.

Fiana P. Bare. There was no paper published dated Dec. 29. The last No. of Vol. 4, No. 50, was dated D[illegible] 22.

Brother Samuel H. Myers, New Market, Va., wishes to know [illegible] Geo. [illegible] address. He [illegible] about one year, Dec. [illegible].

Isaac P. Worrell, Pa. [illegible]. To [illegible] cents on volume [illegible]. We [illegible] ordered it to be sent to you. The [illegible] ordered it also paid for one year.

John Stretch, Dowagiac, Mich. Where has Andrew Sneltne been getting his [illegible]? Then we can tell you whether he [illegible] or not.

H. L. Why do you not give your full name? We gave notice once before that we publish no marriage notices especially, unless endorsed by the full name of some responsible person. We do not know but we are being imposed upon, and at the expense of our friends. The marriage notice may be genuine, but the very fact that you do not give us your name casts about it a shade of suspicion. If you do not wish your name to appear as the informant, you can say so and we will withhold it.

Abraham Creeger, Dover, Me. [illegible] 75 cents on last year, or volume 4. $2.2[illegible] will pay to the end of this year, 1869.

William M. Bostetler, Boonsboro, Iowa.—Our books say you owe 75 cents on last year or volume 4.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be writ ten upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Holsinger; On account of my absence from home this fall and winter, I have not been able to act as agent for the Companion, until now. After I came home from Indiana brother Michael Bosserman wrote to me, requesting me to visit their church; that is, the church at Eagle Creek, Hancock Co., Ohio. I did so, and on the evening of the 5th Dec. I arrived at Dunkirk, Harden Co. Next day commenced a series of meetings in their meeting-house. Preached ten discourses there, and one in Dunkirk.

We had 5 accessions; the meeting was well attended, and had good order. Brother Daniel and sister Elizabeth Rodabaugh were the first members in that church. The first discourse was preached by brother Jacob Crist in 1835, some time in June. Their first Lovefeast was held in 1848. Elder J. Thomas preached for them at that time. At the same time they numbered only thirteen members. At the present time they number 107.—They have four ministers, namely, P. Freed, E. Beagle, D. Bosserman and E. Bosserman; and eight Deacons. Within the last two years they have had an increase of thirty-six members. The church appears to be in a very prosperous condition.

I also attended that series of meetings in Trumbull Co. Brother Brown and brother Murray had preached a few days before I got there. The meeting continued some nine days; had a very good meeting. May God bless the dear people with whom we have meet at those meetings and parted with. May he also bless every effort that is put forth for the saving of souls according to the Gospel.

JNO. NICHOLSON.

Moultrie, Ohio.

Dear Brother Henry; As I frequently notice in the Companion that you solicit church news, and as I have great pleasure in reading the same, and especially when I hear that souls have become willing to enlist under the banner of him whom we claim as our leader. We have had a refreshing season in our branch. Brother John Spanogle and James Lane have been laboring with and for us for a considerable length of time, with great power and we have reason to believe with success, as one precious soul has been made to feel the need of a Savior, and I hope that many more will not let the strong calls and hearty admonitions pass by unheeded. The brethren have planted and watered, and our prayers are that the Lord will give a bountiful increase, that his kingdom on earth may be multiplied and his name glorified. I sincerely hope that the blessed season we have enjoyed, in this series of meetings may not soon be forgotten, but may we all treasure them in our hearts for we feel assured that the Lord was with us. And may the dear brethren who have so faithfully labored with us, have their reward, both in time and in eternity. Let us all pray that the labors of God's people be not in vain.

On Christmas day we had an election for one speaker in the church. The result was a tie vote, and brother Joseph Snowberger and Thomas B. Maddocks were chosen. May the Lord be with them and aid and assist them in the work which is now laid upon them.

"They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

Brother Holsinger:—Another volume of the Companion is before its readers, and the time has fully come when old subscriptions must be renewed, and new ones solicited. To us who solicit subscriptions it is a pleasure when brethren are satisfied with the paper; but it is unpleasant when they find fault. And we cannot blame some very much, for they give as an excuse, that they do not read some of the articles because the writers use such words as they cannot understand. Could not the most expert make their writings a little more common? and yet the learned could understand. "A hint to the wise is sufficient."

BENJ. BENSHOOF.

To the Brethren and Sisters at Hatfield, Pa.; Dearly beloved; it is out of much love and respect I am prompted to pen a few lines to you. First I wish to inform you that we reached home from your place the next day after we left, and found our children all well and very glad to receive us. We thanked the Lord for his goodness. But we did not enjoy home as much as we would have under other circumstances, owing to our dear sister Beelman, whom we had to leave behind so much afflicted, and brother Adam in so be reaved a condition. But we feel thankful to our kind Preserver, that he has permitted our sister to enjoy a pleasant home for a little season. At the last account I had from her she was doing very well, and expressed a feeling of love and thankfulness to the sympathizing brethren and sisters at Hatfield, and especially to brother and sister Souder.—May the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob be our God, and we prove faithful servants, so that at the great day of resurrection we may arise and be with Christ. Amen.

ADAM HOLLINGER.

Brother Holsinger; Our little congregation here still seems to be in a healthy condition. Last Christmas day the brethren had a council meeting here, one long to be remembered. Brother William Sell was chosen to the ministry, and brother Daniel Peffly to the office of deacon. Brother Peter Overholser was present; also, cousin Daniel D. Sell.—On Christmas night there was preaching in the Baptist church; good order and attention. On Saturday the brethren went with brother Peffly, who lives in the settlement of Victoria, Davis county, to have a series of meetings there, commencing on Saturday night.

DANIEL B. SELL.

Brother Holsinger: Our little church here seems to be at a stand still. Have had no additions for a considerable length of time. I wish you could persuade some of your many speakers from the East, who come West and travel round in different parts of the country, to come as far as Panora, and try to stir up the dry bones, and get up a revival in this part of God's vineyard; that a little good might be done in the name of the Master.

B. E. PLAINE.

Panora, Iowa.

Sister Miranda Ecker, Walnut Bottom, Pa., says: "Eighteen hundred and sixty eight with its commingling of joys and sorrows has well nigh run its course and we are admonished by its flight once more to present our subscription for the approaching year. When the week goes around and the Companion fails to appear, we feel as though one of our little number, whose coming is anxiously awaited, and whose arrival is always greeted with joy, had staid away from home. We would not willingly forgo the pleasure its presence at all times imparts."

Dear Brethren and Sisters of the Southern District of Illinois: Agreeable to appointment of our last meeting, I left my home on the morning of the 16th of Nov. for Secor, our nearest station. Met Brother John Fitz on the train, on the Lagansport and Peoria R. R., thence east to Gilman, to the crossing of the Illinois C. Branch, thence south to Okaw, Coles county. Arrived about dark. Was met by Brother John Roberts, who took us to his home and kindly supplied our wants. We here had four meetings; attendance rather small, owing to bad weather. But attention good. Here is a good opening for a ministering brother, as they have no preaching only when brethren call. Left here on the 19th. Conveyed by brother J. R. 40 miles to the house of brother David Rothrock, Cumberland county. Here we had four meetings and one communion.

Wednesday, 25th, conveyed by brother D. R. to Crawford county, 30 miles, to the house of brother A. Hyre. We here met the members in council; organized a church; held an election which resulted in the choice of brother J. P. Horning for Speaker and brother Isaac Horning, Deacon. Had two meetings and one communion.

28th returned to Cumberland county. Had five meetings at West Union S. H. and three at brother Jas. McBride's. Baptised 3, held an election, and brother John Grim was chosen to the Ministry, and brother Jas. McBride for Deacon. May the Lord bless the little band of brethren and sisters here, and the brethren should assist them all they can.

Dec. 1st, left brother D. Rothrock's, traveled 22 miles in wagon to Charlestown, took the cars for home, arrived Wednesday evening. Out 17 days. We here would tender our thanks to the kind brethren and sisters for the love they manifested to us. Found all well. To the Lord be all the praise.

Among the extracts that we have been enabled to glean, we offer the following:

Sister Lucinda Mellinger, Columbia Pa. says: "I have taken the Companion for the last two years, and I obtained great encouragement in reading it. I do not get much away to meeting and so I will take the Companion another year. Oh! how good do I feel when I can hear from the dear brethren and sisters from far and near, that they still preach the gospel in its purity. If we only could all be linked together in true christian love, I do believe that the angels in heaven would be rejoiced."

Sister Catharine Frantz, North Hampton Ohio, sends us the following encouragement: "I enclose two dollars for the Companion. I know I am rather late, but could do no better. I cannot make the exact change but know you will give me credit for all I send which will pay part on the 6th volume, should I live to enjoy its pleasant company. I value it very highly and have taken it from its beginning. The more I read it the better I like it. It is particularly pleasant in winter time when I cannot get out to hear our brethren preach. I comfort myself in thinking that I have right good preaching at home every week when the dear Companion makes its appearance.

Sister Henrietta McNoughton, Newport, Pa., writes: "We are rather late but hope you will bear with us. I sent as soon as I could, and brother Pool is an aged brother and could not get to town or he would have sent sooner. We live in rather an out of the way place and only have preaching every eight weeks; and it often happens that during winter we do not have preaching for twice that time.—We are few in number in this neighborhood, but hope the time may soon come when many will turn to the Lord and ask what they shall do to be saved. We are still anxious to hear from our dear brothers and sisters through the Companion. Enclosed find $3 for brother Pool and myself."

Brother Martin Neher, Toledo, Ind., says: "Brethren Elias and John Cessler have been with us and have had several meetings in our district of the church. We hope the Lord will bless their labors to the saving of souls. They left for home the 30th of December, and we hope they found all well at home. May the Lord bless his church and people every where is our prayer. Amen."

House Burned.

The house of brother Strader, and all in it, was entirely destroyed by fire, on the 18th day of December last, leaving him in a distressed condition. Brother Strader is old and badly afflicted with breast complaint, but is a worthy brother and we appeal to the Brotherhood for aid for him. We are not able to help him enough in the way of furniture, but will try to build him another house.

Now brethren, you that are sitting around your fires with everything necessary to make you comfortable, think of brother Strader, who is houseless and homeless. He had a good house and was comfortably situated, but is now bereft.

We make this appeal especially to the brethren in Virginia. Brother Moomaw and brother John Brubaker are requested to aid in obtaining relief. Contributions may be sent to Peter Snuffer, Asa Spangler or the writer at Raleigh, West Va.

Notice.

The District Meeting for the Middle District of Indiana, will be held God willing, on the 2nd Friday after Good Friday, which will be on the 9th day of April next, if I have counted or reckoned correctly.—

It is to be held in the Eel River congregation, at their meeting-house 4 miles north of Manchester.

D. BECHTELHIMER.

Cor. Sec.

Brother B. S. Whitten, Liberty, Va., says:

May Providence bless your labors in spreading far and wide the glorious doctrine of a crucified Savior—the pure gospel of the Son of God—till all may be convinced of error and darkness, that each and every one will lay hold on the sacred words of Faith, obeying God in all His commandments, shunning all evil and cleaving unto all good, serving the Almighty Father in an acceptable and commendable manner, as is pleasing to him. May the love of Christ more abound in all our hearts, and may we also walk more as is becoming the followers of Jesus that all may see the good works—forsaken their evil ways thereby, and then joining with the family of God, in praises and thanksgivings to our Heavenly Father for his great mercy and kindness to the whole human family, in preparing the glorious mansion for us unprofitable beings. May the Lord bless us, each and every one.

Brother Holsinger:—I live in La-Fayette county, Mo. Myself and wife are the only members in the county as far as we know: the nearest brethren are in Johnson Co., some 22 miles from us. To them we handed our letter of recommendation. The congregation is composed of some fifty-six members.—So we have but little chance for meeting; no one to give us comfort or to build us up, but the blessed Bible, and the welcome messenger, the Companion, which brings our news from the church and brethren, which still kindles a flame of sacred love in our hearts. We see so many visits made by our beloved brethren to different places where they have meeting. O that they might think of Lafayette Co., and the many precious souls to whom the doctrine of the brethren is a stranger, and I believe only for the want of some one to come and to declare to them the whole counsel of God. May God grant that some brethren may come to seek after the "lost sheep of the house of Israel," is my prayer.

ABRAM CREEGER.

Dover, Mo.

Brother Holsinger; Through the protection of kind Providence I arrived safely home from my mission to the South, and found my family well. After parting with brother Good, whose society I enjoyed very much while visiting among the churches in Maryland, where we made many pleasant acquaintances. I was conveyed to the station by brother D. Wolf, when I embarked for Winchester. Went to brother Fanestock's, but they had not received my letter. Enjoyed their hospitality until Monday morning, when Peter Fanestock took me in a sleigh to brother Baker's, and next morning brother Baker brought me to brother Gabler's, and his son conveyed me to brother Sharer's. On my arrival there my letter had not yet been received. Tarried there until Friday, when I started on my journey southward. Arrived at Staunton too late for the train.—Found brother Kline in town who took me to his home four miles distant. Sunday morning went to meeting, and also attended evening meeting. Had a short but pleasant season. Monday morning, took the train for Tennessee, and arrived at my brother Samuel's, and brother Reif's, about noon. Found them and families all well. Found the country rolling; climate salubrious; soil medium; society moral; enterprise dull; plenty room for improvement.

Having spent so much time in reaching this point, I could spend but one week. Met with the brethren at appointments made by brother Molsbee. I was with them at 4 meetings. On Monday two were received by baptism. Spent the time very pleasantly. Took train at Russelville for the eastern shore of Maryland. Spent a few days viewing the country. I like that section very much. There are no brethren there. The gospel banner should be unfolded in that region. The people are very sociable. Took train for Philadelphia; enjoyed the hospitality of brother Spanogle.—Met with the brethren in worship on Crown street, in the evening.

Last day of the year reviewed the past; found we had come short in many respects, and formed new resolutions to try, the Lord being our helper, to spend the new year more devotedly in the service of the Master. May the Lord grant us all grace to keep this year to his praise; that though we may have to regret the little we have done, we may rejoice in having it well done.

The Lord be praised for his loving-kindness and tender mercy.

Queries.

Will some brother, or brethren give an explanation of Paul's instruction to Timothy, in the third chapter of his first epistle, concerning the qualifications of brethren selected to fill the offices of Bishops and Deacon. Did the Apostle means, that a brother must have a wife and children, as one of the qualifications for those officers? Or are we to understand that there were those in the church, in the Apostle's time, who had more than one wife?

JOHN McCLINTOCK.

Liberty, Ill.

We take pleasure in acknowledging the receipt of a fine turkey, ready for the griddle, for our New Year's roast, from sister Margaret Antelberger. Also, for sundry holiday extras from sisters Goodman and Henderson. Many thanks for their kind remembrance.

PUBLIC SALE OF ITALIAN BEES.—S. B. Replogle—near Martinsburg, Pa.,—will sell at public sale, on Monday, January 18th, 1869, at 1½ o'clock, P. M., about 20 colonies of Italian Bees, and 5 colonies of common bees.

MARRIED

On the 26th of November, 1868, by elde Peter Nininger, brother SAMUEL CRUMPACKER, of Montgomery congregation, to sister MARY C. MOOMAW, daughter of brother B. F. Moomaw, of the Valley congregation Botetourt county, Va.

D. C. MOOMAW.

D I E D .

We shall be pleased to receive obituaries in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all kindly, and we could not answer with all.

In the Upper Miami Church, Miami county, Ohio, Dec. 2nd, 1868, sister ANNA, wife of brother Isaac KARN, aged 33 years, 2 months and 1 day.

She has left a sorrowing husband and four children, also a loved circle of kind and affectionate companions and relatives to mourn their loss, of which one was only 10 days old at the time of her death; but we hope their loss is her eternal gain. Funeral occasion at the Spring Grove meeting-house, to a large congregation, by brethren Jesse Studabaker and John Frantz, from 1st Cor. 15: 22-58.

E. H. ARNOLD.

Visitor please copy.

In the Spring Run church, Pa., September 14th, 1868, sister SUSANNAH, daughter of elder Jos. R., and sister M. A. Hanawalt, and wife of friend Philip A. MURPHY, aged 38 years, 9 months, and 17 days. Sister was an acceptable member for a number of years, and at the time of her death, was one of the Superintendents in the Brethren's Sabbath School.—Funeral services by brother Peter S. Myers and others, from Rev. 12: 11, etc.

Also, at the same place, October 2nd, 1868, sister MARY ANN, wife of brother Jacob KINSEL, aged 38 years, 3 months, 6 days.—Sister was 19 years married on the day of her funeral. She left an infant of but a few hours, leaving an infant daughter and only a few hours. Funeral sermon by brethren John Snowberger and Jos. R. Hanawalt, from 1st Thess. 4: 15, to a very large concourse of people. She leaves a husband and 10 children.

Also, near Lewistown, Pa., Sept. 13th, 1868, HOWARD, son of brother Samuel L. and sister Elizabeth RUBLE, aged 6 months and 10 days. S. W. BOLLINGER.

In the Logan branch, Logan county, Ohio, December 14, 1868, our beloved sister, MAGDALENE KAYLOR, wife of brother Samuel Kaylor, whose obituary notice appeared some time since; aged 48 years, 5 months, and 5 days. She leaves 6 children, 2 grandchildren and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss. Occasion improved by elder Jos. N. Kaufman, Michael Swanger, and the writer, from Rev. 14: 13.

J. J. FRANTZ.

In the Sugar Creek church, Allen county, Ohio, December 1, 1868, brother ARTHER CRAYTON, formerly of the Valley of Va.

Also, in the same branch, December 10th, JOHN B. EVANS, son of brother and sister Evans, formerly of Rockingham county, Va., aged 20 years and 21 days.

Also, in the same branch, December 9th, dear sister JACOB DRIVER, in the 64th year of his age. Funerals of the above by the brethren.

DANIEL BROWN.

In the Carroll church, Carroll county, Ill., Dec. 14th, 1868, after a short but painful illness, sister MARY, wife of brother Simon ARNOLD, aged 47 years and 5 months. Funeral services from Hebrews 4: 9, by brethren Christian Long and Michael Bollinger.—Although sudden and long was intensely great, she bore it with Christian fortitude, and her last, yet consoling language, was "Weep not for me." She left an affectionate husband and many friends to mourn their loss.

[illegible]

On December 22d, 1868, in Beaver Run congregation, Mineral county, West Va., sister MARY ARNOLD, youngest daughter of Zachariah and Elizabeth Arnold, aged 25 years and 8 months. Her illness was tedious of the most excruciating nature sometimes, yet she bore up under her sufferings with much Christian fortitude. During her sickness she manifested a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better, and died in full triumph of a living hope. Funeral services by brother Solomon Long and others, from 119th Psalm, 96th and 97th verses. Text is the voice of the Master to death; this is a solemn warning to all, and especially to the young. S. L. LONG.

In the Cicero church, Hamilton county, Ind., November 14th, 1868, sister ELIZABETH, wife of brother Andrew ELLIS, aged 52 years, 4 months, and 4 days. She was a member in Israel, and respected by all who knew her. Death was by cancer of the breast. Funeral services by the writer. Rev. 14: 13.

Also, at the same place, Dec. 11th, 1868, sister ZELPHIA ANN, wife of William O. HILL, aged 32 years and 8 months. Funeral services by the writer.

ELDER ELIAS TAYLOR.

In the Jacobs Congregation, Westmoreland county, Pa., [illegible] brother JOHN SHAFFER; aged 71 years, and 23 days. Funeral services by the writer, from 1st Cor. 5: 8, 9.

In Fayette county, Pa., December 2d, 1868, JOHN HILL, aged [illegible] years. Funeral services by the writer, from 1st Kings 20: 40.

The latter death occurred by one of those appalling tragedies that sometimes cast a gloom over an entire community. We deeply deplore the loss of kindred friends and neighbors at all times, but to us this death is deeply heart-rending to all, especially when it occurs in families whose pecuniary circumstances are not the best, and still more, when the victim has never made provision for the riches of the eternal world.

Mr. Hill was, at the time of his death, employed as a miller in Smith and Masonman. By some means his left arm was caught between the crown wheel and the trundle-head, and was drawn between them, and literally cut to pieces. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn his untimely end.

JOS. I. COVER.

On the 8th of October, EDNA ANN, daughter of Samuel S. and Christina SHERFY, aged one year and 6 days. Funeral services by the [illegible]. M. M. PASHOR.

In the Middle Creek church, Somerset Co., Pa., November the 6th, sister CATHARINE FIKE, consort of brother John Fike, aged 64 years, 1 month, and 10 days.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

A Good Precept Well Told.

The following ingenious arrangement of a sentence is taken from The Carolina Sentinel, April 4, 1818. It is said that it may be read in over two thousand different ways without altering the original words, by beginning at the letter R, which will be found in the center of the diamond.

Plain Talk.

In examining the above significant language as emanating from the chief of apostles, we find we have a duty enjoined upon us by authority, no less in rank than the Third Person in the Divine Family, for Paul was the mouthpiece of the Comforter, the Holy Spirit. The text above shows the relative position that the taught believer sustains "to him that teaches in all good things," and sets forth the obligation that we are under to the watchmen on the walls of Zion. That we are to make the minister of the gospel (for such are referred to) the sharer of the temporal blessings that a benign Providence has so abundantly lavished upon us we hope no one in the brotherhood will deny. If words mean any thing then the word "communicate" in the connection that it stands in the quotation above, conveys to our minds the idea of giving to our ministers, who labor in word and doctrine a portion of our surplus, and thus make them the joint possessors of the common necessaries of life. To what extent this liberality of communicating to the wants of our christian ministry is to be carried is not in our province to dictate; but we know, and to our discredit we must confess that this duty is rarely carried into effect. Brethren how many miles have some of our preachers traveled this year? How many sermons have they preached, how much heat and cold and inclemency of weather endured, while some of us were in our easy chair enjoying the comforts of home and the endearments of the family circle? Look at the wear and tear while serving us.—What amounts of time devoted to the enriching of others in heavenly treasures which circumstances perhaps required in providing for their own families. Take into account the stationery, book, periodical and postage bills, and the sum of his hard earnings paid out in railroad fares attending to Macedonian calls, or how many such calls, from those wishing the gospel preached, have been neglected because the limited means of some of our gospel standard bearers would not enable them to answer the calls.—These are problems that we should not omit, but look into. Well has all this labor been bestowed, and these sacrifices of home, time and means been made for our fathers, mothers, brothers and sisters, our companions, our children our neighbors, and ourselves, while we through God's blessings have been permitted to replenish our ward-robes, our pantries, our cellars, barns and garners; our government securities and bank stock been redoubled, farm been added to farm and store house to store house. Though we may have these things and claim them justly too as the reward of our industry, yet he who sends his servant to us to break the bread of eternal life to us, and to unfold to us the imperishable and inexhaustible treasure of heaven, praying the Lord to fill our poor souls with the love of God, says in plain and emphatic language: "communicate to him that teaches in all good things." How many of our worthy, faithful ministering brethren's hearts have been made glad during this Christmas festival by our liberal giving of gifts? thus assuring them that we esteem them worthy of double honor?" Or have we withheld from giving and perhaps asked them the highest market price for things necessary to feast, even presented to them our subscription list for contributions to aid in building meeting houses and defraying church expenses generally. If your preacher is a money-making wealth-accumulating man, then we may have some excuse for asking such a competitor to bear his portion of our burdens in this respect. Should his circumstances, however be to the reverse, we think it would almost be base ingratitude to make any such demands. With eighteen texts from the infallible Word of God, urging the taught, baptized believer "to communicate" or give "to him that teaches in all good things," we think that it would only be "letting our lights shine if we were to help our faithful, christian ministers, and fill their ward-robes and pantries with the comforts and necessaries of life. What? withhold from giving him who "neglects not the gifts that is in him," who gives himself wholly and continually to prayer and the ministry of the word," "teaching in all good things!" To do so would force us to exclaim with Malachi, the last one of the long line of prophets, who stood at the very chasm of destruction to which the Jews were hastening: "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me!"—Wherein! "In tithes and offerings," (3rd chapter and 8th verse.) Nehemiah saw the terrible corruption that had befallen Israel and among the numerous abuses he undertook to correct, he answers Malachi's questions of robbery: "And I perceived that the portions of the Levites had not been given them; for the Levites and the singers that did the work were fled every one to his field." Neh. 13: 10. It is written: "It is more blessed to give than receive." Let us therefore give for God's blessings would not cease to flow into our basket and store, while our worthy preachers would feel that their labor was appreciated by us, and their companions and children feel remunerated for the oft and frequent absence of their parents; their hearts made to bless God, and constrained to hold the very memory of our names sacred for acts of christian kindness thus conferred; while thus we would be "bearing one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ." Gal. 6: 24.

I have not written this that it should be so done to me. I am engaged in a legitimate business; and by close application and a continuance of my brethren's patronage, I expect to make a comfortable livelihood for myself and family.

"Remember Lot's Wife."

Luke 17: 32.

This sentence in the New Testament was spoken by the Lord Jesus directly to the disciples. And although it is but a short one, it is one full of meaning, and one that just as much interests the disciple of the present day, as it did those on the very day and hour it was spoken. Speaking as he was to them in regard to his second coming, and also the destruction of the city of Jerusalem in which perhaps many of the disciples dwelt, and their city being doomed to be destroyed as was the city in which Lot dwelt, the Saviour gives his disciples all necessary warning, as was Lot, to escape the impending dangers, and then tells them in the language of the subject: "Remember Lot's wife." They had all the necessary precaution given unto them to make their escape sure and certain, as had Lot and his wife; but in our remembrance of her, what do we find?—Why she disobeyed the command of the angels when fleeing from the city, in looking back, and became a pillar of salt which is seen, we are told, unto the present day. God must be obeyed to the very letter.—God has put this inscription on all things here below: It "shall be burned up." And He has provided ample means for our deliverance: and while with Lot we are lingering he takes us by the hand and bids us to hasten to flee for our life to the city of refuge. Yes, he tells his servants to go out "into the highways and compel them to come in, that my house may be full."

Dear reader, are you making any effort to secure your salvation? Have you not made one step yet towards the city of refuge? If not it is certainly high time that you were. Perhaps the avenger of blood is close at your heels. Obedience unto all the requirements of the New Testament, (that mighty city of refuge,) is the only thing that is going to save you and I from the burning flame. No non-essentials there, depend upon it. "For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward: how shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?" Heb. 2:2-3. In regard to the destruction of the city of Jerusalem and the disciples' deliverance therefrom by adhering to the way given by the Saviour, establishes a fact which is hard for the deist to get over. "Pray that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto." Matth. 24:20; Luke 21:20. As much as we can learn by history their flight was not on the Sabbath day, neither in the winter season. I believe they prayed and their prayers were answered, and that they did flee from the city after it was besieged by the Roman General Cestius. "And when there was all hopes of him taking the city, he retired from it without any reason in the world," which I believe was so ordered by the providence of God that the disciples of Jesus might make their escape; for farther says the historian, "After this calamity had befallen Cestius, many of the most eminent of the Jews swam away from the city, as from a ship that was going to sink." Josephus' wars of the Jews, book 2, chapter 19, verse 7; also chapter 20, verse 1.

And now, dear brethren and sisters, let us take courage in remembering that the Lord will deliver them who put their whole trust in him and obey him to the letter. Let our whole object be to gain heaven. We certainly made a good profession when we were taken into the Church, and rest assured if we live up to it, we will meet inside the walls of the New Jerusalem, the walls of which no Roman General will be able to beat down. But on the other hand if we disgrace our profession by looking back to the beggarly elements of the world, as did Lot's wife, we will surely miss heaven.—"He that puts his hand to the plow and looks back, is not fit for the Kingdom of God." Dear brethren and sisters, pray for us that our faith fail not. The favor of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

Rest.

How sweet to the weary is rest. When by extreme physical exertion, or mental labor we are weary in body or mind, how pleasant and refreshing does rest come to us; how sweet the repose of a calm untroubled sleep when we are worn out by fatigue. In connection with this thought we notice that in order to enjoy and appreciate rest, we must be tired and weary, and that when we most need it the better are we enabled to enjoy it when we obtain it. This leads us to speak of another rest, a rest so much better, holier, and purer than the rest offorded to suffering humanity in this world, that a finite mind cannot form a just conception of it.

One of the first conditions to the obtaining of this rest is, that we must be "weary, and heavy laden."—Matt. 11 28. And oh what an inestimable boon is this rest to the weary heavy laden, sin-sick soul. Surrounded by darkness and death; overwhelmed with sorrow and dismay; born down to the earth with the burden of his sin: wearied in soul and body, how sweet to such an one are the words of him who suffered for us, who died that we might live, and that he might have power to say: "come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Only those who have felt the need of these words know how rapturous and soul thrilling is their power, when for the first time the promise contained in them is by faith verified and the sweet rest is felt. A freedom from the burden of sin, a conciousness of duty performed, gives us a rest and peace sweeter and holier than anything the world can give, or has ever known. Then commences the battle of a spiritual life. Like as the infant struggles for life in its earlier days, and is carefully watched over, by a fond, loving mother. So also the new born babe in Christ's kingdom is met by many difficulties, and is tried by many severe trials; but the Good Shepherd watcheth over it with tenderest care, and when weary and faint, and like Peter ready to sink and perish, behold! he taketh it to his bosom and giveth it rest and shelter until the storm be past. And thus all through life when we are faint and weary, he is ever ready to help us and give us the rest we so often need while "fighting the fight of faith." And at last when life's labor is ended, and we have done our duty, and have done it well, with what heartfelt, soul cheering joy shall we enter into our eternal home where we shall enjoy a glorious never ending rest:

"Where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

D. L. MILLER.

Polo, Ill.

Many a child goes astray, not because there is a want of prayer and virtue at home but simply because home lacks sunshine. A child needs smiles as much as flowers need sunbeams. Children look little beyond the present moment. If a thing displeases them they are prone to avoid it. If home is the place where faces and words are harsh, and fault-finding is over in the ascendant, they will spend as many hours as possible elsewhere. Let every father and mother try to be happy. Let them look happy. Let them talk to their children especially the little ones in such a way as to make them happy.

Every day is a little life; and our whole life is but a day repeated.

For the Companion.

To a very young Disciple.

"Hearest Thou what these say? And Jesus saith unto them, yea; have ye never read, Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings Thou hast perfected praise." Matt. 21: 16.

Although so young, Christ's approach as the King of saints, "meek, and sitting upon an ass," stirred the depths of your child-heart, so that in the ecstasy of new-born emotion you had to break out in the jubilant strain of the love-nurtured bride, "Hosanna to the Son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest." When the Prophet of Galilee enters the soul with a manifestation of his Kingly Glory, the sense of his presence and the quickening energy of his Love are so rapturous, that if the Christ-clinging heart were to hold its peace, "the stones would immediately cry out." The soul that is full of Christ must sing its Hosanna, let rebuke who will. It must wave its symbol of triumph, and lay its all at the feet of incarnate Deity. The Uncreated God, the Eternal Majesty, riding on an ass to carry his broken heart and streaming tears and pleading soul before a rebellious, stiff-necked, and murderous people, knowing that the weeping and pleading of Infinite Mercy will but aggrevate the sin and intensify the woe of many Hell-doomed souls, oh when this fact enters the conscience in all its dread significance, it feels that the awful alternative is now or never, although the stain of but a single sin mars the garb of innocence. When we consider that one sin "brought death into the world, and all our woe," and that the blighting curse of God fell on the race for but a solitary breach of fealty, we need not wonder that a sinner of twelve years old should have such a deep and damning sense of demerit. Had you not received the Savior when you did, your house might have remained unto you desolate, and the self-induced hardness of your heart forever debarred the ingress of Eternity's King. In the Sanctuary where I worship there is generally present a young lady whom Christ often pleaded to gather under his wings, and she would not. Often was her heart softened by the convicting grace of God, so that she could not restrain her tears. But she summoned all the energies of her nature in opposition to the Holy Spirit, and now she is so petrified in sin that she can without a blush mock the preacher to his face when entreating the sinner in the most pathetic manner to come to Jesus. God is not mocked, and no one can maltreat his ambassadors with impunity. The Master came and called you, and you gave submissive response, which had you not done, one more name would now be, and perhaps forever, on the records of Hell.

Dear before, to all who knew you, you are now a thousand fold dearer to these who love the Lord Jesus Christ. However amiable we may be in the development of the loveliest traits of human nature, we are yet not thereby raised above the curse and condemnation of sin. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh," and "they that are in the flesh cannot please God." John 3: 6.—Rom. 8: 8. God is a Being of Infinite Holiness and the pure in heart alone shall see him. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" in an unreconciled state, because he "is a consuming fire;" but to as many as believe on the Name of his Only-Begotten he gives "power to become his sons," and then it is a blessed thing to fall into his hands, for "we shall be like him," and "see him as he is." Heb. 10: 31. and 12: 29. John 1: 12. 1 John 3: 2. Although many might have regarded you as endowed with a disposition akin to the angels, and requiring no change but a self-determined direction of the will to religion as a supreme object, yet so alienated are we by nature from the self-renunciation which the gospel requires, that, had you been transferred to the judgment-bar of Infinite rectitude and purity, your soul would have been eternally blasted with the terrors of Divine wrath; but now, being "born again," of water, and of the Spirit, you enjoy "the peace of God which passeth all understanding," and look forward to death as the entrance into glory, and to the judgment as your great coronation day.

You have been broken from the quarry of sin, scorched by the fires of Sinai and malleated by the hammer of judgment, polished by the hand of God for his temple, and then placed in your niche in the sacred edifice by the hands of his ministers. You are now to be a living stone, transparent with holiness, not mingling with the God-hating multitude from any impulse to participate in their forbidden pleasures, ever watchful lest the "white stone" be fouled by contact with sin. A tremendous responsibility rests upon you. The eyes of Heaven and Hell and earth are scanning your motives and actions.—Your baptism has been a public avowal that henceforth you are not of the world, and that you will be a living and faithful witness for Jesus, in the face of all opposition and contumely. A more solemn and momentous step than you have taken no one is capable of on this side of Eternity. To live unto the world after being baptized into Christ's death, is to crucify Him afresh, put Him to an open shame, and draw down upon ourselves the unmitigated wrath of Jehovah.—The scriptures abound in most fearful declarations in relation to those who fall from grace after having "tasted the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost." Heb. 6 : 4, 5, 6. Guard every avenue of your soul, and allow yourself not a moments slumber, lest the enemy step his tares into the heaven-tilled soil, or ourselves rot with some evil in the guise of truth. "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly, in all wisdom," so that when the adversary plies you with his temptations, you may be able to repel him with Christ's weapon "It is written, it is written, it is written." Col. 3 : 16. Matt. 4 : 1—10. Wrestle with the All-wise for Divine illumination, and by a meek and self-denying, Christ-exalting life, help to answer your own prayers. Let it be your highest ambition and deepest concern to possess and exhibit the mind of Jesus. Let it be known to all that you have eaten "the little book" presented by your Heavenly Bridegroom, and that all that comes out of you, in word and deed, is but the unfolding of its leaves and the evolution of its mysteries. Be to the world, and to all, an open volume of grace in that many who never look inside the New Testament, may read in your life the beauty of holiness and the elevating power of the Cross.—Bear the broad seal of God in your forehead wherever you go, and be not ashamed to testify that you esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of earth, or the pleasures of sin, or the flatteries of the world. Let neither damsel nor devil frighten you into denial of your Lord. Be content with the crumbs under the table, rather than "fare sumptuously" with the world every day. Let it be your glory that what others barter soul and character to gain, you "count but dung." Always bear about you plenty of Heaven's currency, and see to it that the image and superscription of Jesus is unmutilated. You can do much good, if you but keep the filth of corruption from the mirror of holiness. If you discover a fibre of inbred sin reaching toward the world, bring down the sword of the Spirit with a resolute stroke, and amputate the offending member. Keep yourself in the love of God, and God will keep out the love of the world. "If any man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and We will come unto him, and make our abode with him." This is honor enough. By creation we are a "little lower than the angels," but by redemption higher. Let us gladly bear the Cross through a brief period of probation, so that we may eternally wear a crown of righteousness, and share the Throne of Jesus. The promise is ours, and the fruition will be, if we remain faithful unto death. C. H. BALSBAUGH.

Speechless Children.

I have been much interested in a deaf-mute, seven years of age, the son of a newly-elected Senator from one of the Southern States, who visited, not long since, one of the families of my congregation. He is a boy of uncommon natural intelligence, very quick to comprehend what is said to him as long as he cannot hear, and full of vivacity and sport. He became deaf the first year of his life, through sickness, before he had learned to speak. His father, with whom he was a special favorite, anxious to do everything for him that could be done, placed him, last year, in the Clark Institute for Deaf-Mutes, at Northampton. There, under the training of Miss Rogers, he soon learned to articulate quite a number of words. When he had been at the Institute a few months, the father called to see him. It happened to be the time of recess, and the boys were at play on the ample grounds about the building. The boy saw his father coming, and stretching out his arms ran to meet him saying at the same time, "Father."—It was the first word the father ever heard him speak, and it quite overcame him. He could scarcely refrain from tears. His heart overflowed with joy,—joy that it was permitted him to live to hear his dear dumb boy speak and call him father.

When I first heard the story in the presence of the boy himself, so bright and intelligent, so happy in the newly acquired power of articulate speech, I could not but think of the great Father in heaven, and the multitudes of mute children he has here on earth, mute at least so far as any acknowledgment of their relationship to him is concerned, children who have never called him by the endearing name of Father. And then I thought what must be the joy in that Father's heart when one of these dumb children of his, breaking through the guilty silence so long observed, lifts his eyes and heart toward heaven and says, "Father."—*N. A Dialogue on Feet-washing.

Brother A. I see there is much said of late, in the Companion on the subject of Feet-washing and I hope good may result therefrom.

Brother B. Yes such is the case and I am sorry to see such a firm stand taken by those who are opposed to the general practice of the Brethren; fearing strife and contention may be engendered thereby, so as to be detrimental to the cause of our blessed Master.

A. I hope better things; and that the seemingly opposing elements may be neutralized by a strict regard to God's word, and that union and harmony may characterize the entire Body.

B. God grant it may be so! If christian forbearance would not be lost sight of, and a strict adherence to the adapting principles of the gospel be our motto, rather than too much stress placed upon the incidental or attending circumstances of our ordinance, union and harmony would prevail, each individual member of the spiritual body would be strengthened—Christianity would blaze brighter and shed its genial rays farther and farther into the dark abodes of the world, and the cause of pure and undefiled religion receive such and impetus that the world would wonder, and angels rejoice.

A. That is true, but brother B., I must say I am convinced the "single mode" of observing the ordinance of Feet-washing comes nearer the word than any other, and I have arrived to this conclusion from an impartial and solemn investigation of the matter.

B. Well brother A., as I think you honest and willing to recant any principle when convinced of it, having no special claim on our religious tenets and is dangerous to the prosperity of Zion, I will debate the question with you in the fear of God and the love for truth.

A. By the word I shall stand or fall, so by the word I shall be governed.

B. Why do you favor the "single mode," so called?

A. Because our Savior, in the singular washed and wiped and said "if I then your Lord and Master have washed your feet ye also ought to wash one another's feet." Does not the turn "ye" mean each one of them should wash "another's" feet.

B. The meaning of the term is not necessarily confined to such a signification. The term "your Lord," in same verse, evidently means Lord of one as well as Lord of all; and "your feet" may apply to the feet of one or to all; in like manner "ye" may be rightfully applied to one as well as to all collectively. If each one of the number present wash the feet of another, they wash one another's feet; and if a number are washed by one and some of those that have been washed wash the feet of others do they not also wash one another's feet?

A. I must confess it would be so, but is it according to the Savior's example for one to wash and another to wipe, when he says I have given you an example? &c.

B. What do you understand by the term "example" in this instance?

A. Why to do as he done in all things connected with feet-washing.

B. Such as rising from supper, laying aside garments, girding with a towel, pouring water into a basin, washing and wiping, you mean I suppose.

A. Certainly I do.

B. And for doing it in an upper chamber alone with the followers of Christ?

A. No, I do not contend for that.

B. Where do you find the rule in God's word to go so far, in following the example of our Savior in his preparatory steps, and no farther?

A. I am not prepared to answer that question.

B. Should each member follow the literal example of our Savior.

A I think so.

B. Then it follows each one should pour water in a basin that has no water in each one lay aside "garments" male and female; &c., &c.

A. I do not contend for so much.

B. Don't you believe the Savior did so?

A. Yes.

B. You are beginning to see the inconsistency of trying to follow the incidental and necessary steps of the Savior, when making preparations to establish an ordinance to teach us humility, &c. Particularly when those things are not commands or binding on us to observe.

A. You do not mean to say we are not commanded to follow his example?

B. We are to follow his example just as far as He has commanded us to follow it.

A. How far is that?

B. Did you never notice the command is simply to do what he, Christ, did to the Apostles. He says: "I have given you an example that you should do as I have done to you." First, He commands: "ye also ought to wash one another's feet" and then "gives the example to do as he had done to them. Not an example that they should lay aside garments, gird themselves, pour water into a basin, but simply do as I have done to you. That is wash one another's feet and not every one his own as the ancient custom has. The full meaning of the command is concluded in that simple sentence "do as I have done to you."

A. I am really surprised I did not discover your mode of reasoning before this. You are right without a doubt. However you are not, I hope, opposed to the general custom and order of laying aside garments, pouring water into a basin, &c.

B. Not at all. Like the Savior, preparatory steps should be taken to have all in readiness and the ordinance should be attended to in order and with propriety. But we should not pin our faith to those incidental and literal acts of the Savior where we have no positive command to imitate, and forget the weightier matters such as "be of one mind," "avoid contentions," lay not a stumbling block in the way of our dear brethren and sisters: and many other commands that we are to prone to overlook.

A. If the general practice of the Church fulfils the command of the Savior I shall be content, be assured.

B. If the thing commanded is observed in the proper spirit of human obedience and the benefit intended is derived, what more can be desired? That the church has prospered and been blessed by the smiles of a gracious Providence (since the change, as some tell us of, was made,) no one can question, and now is prospering and will no doubt continue to prosper if only these questions of difference can be settled and buried forever.

A. You have given me a new mind on the subject and I hope to come to a knowledge of the whole truth soon.

B. I wish to make an illustration and show to your candid reasoning faculties that a command can be satisfactorily complied with, and all the benefits intended result, and the designs carried out, by a different way of procedure and all in harmony with the true intent and signification of the command.

A. That is just what I can not fully comprehend.

B. Well we will suppose a wealthy farmer is surrounded by several poor dependent neighbors. He cherishes the principle of charity and looks upon it as one of the essential christian graces without which no man can gain Heaven. That he may not become avaricious he has made it a rule to supply the wants of his poor neighbors at certain started times every year.—He carries the necessaries of life to his neighbors upon his shoulder; taking just enough at each time for one neighbor and so on until all are supplied. When he comes to die, as a last request and command to his children, he says, "forget not to be charitable to your neighbors. I have given you an example, and as I have done to them do ye also. Now do they understand that they can not fulfil the command in any other way than by carrying the necessary things on their shoulder just as he did, and to one at a time?—Would they not understand that they are to provide for the wants of their neighbors out of their abundance as he did? And owing to the increasing number of those requiring attention, one of them by the consent of all, goes with their team of horses and wagon, and delivers those things donated out of their abundance, probably making one or two trips answer the purpose. Now can it be supposed that those who did not actually engage in delivering those things to their needy neighbors, did not comply with the command of the father, and that he, if so permitted, would not give as loud a smile of approbation to one as the other, knowing that all were a thing in a spirit of united love and charity to give out of their abundance?

The Savior has recommended us to wash feet in the church, and as long as we do it as an act of humility, through love and a united spirit of obedience, and every member takes part either in washing or being washed may we not expect to be blessed and receive the approving smiles of our Heavenly Father. Though every individual member may not wash the feet of another at the same meeting, the will of the entire body is "brought into subjection to the will of God," as demonstrated by being willing to wash or be washed. Can any one rightly say this will not be washing one another's feet when all the members of CHRIST'S BODY are engaged in the work.

A. Your reasonings I must say are satisfactory to my mind. I now see no necessity of opposing the general order, it being the rule so long in practice by a large majority of the Brotherhood, and one that I think, will fulfil the command, and to oppose it, nothing can be gained but much may be lost. Oh! may we all strive for a more profit union of sentiment on this as well as on all other points of difference.

Anointing the Sick.

Brother Henry: I notice on page 426, of volume 4, an article upon the above subject which needs some explanation, as those do not seem to be the words that are now used. I suppose it was an oversight of yours; or perhaps you had not all the manuscript of the elder brethren, as the minutes of that time were not yet printed. See the Encyclopedia, page 17 and 18.

WM PANNEBAKER.

In addition to what we gave at the time above referred to, we quote also the following paragraph from the "Encyclopedia," which is certainly all that refers to that part of the question under consideration, viz: The words used:

"From manuscript accounts of elder brethren concerning the same, and examining it more particularly, we have the following: As regards the ANOINTING, it requires two brethren in order to perform it, according to the advice of the apostle, since he says, 'Let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him.' These words require more than one. Now when we are going to perform the same, the first we do after singing a few appropriate lines, and kindly exhorting us to turn to God unitedly, and to pray God for a blessing upon ourselves, upon the sick member and upon all, as we do in some things, and there is liberty to pray for all the brethren present. If time will permit, and strangers are present, the passage of James, chap. 5 may be read as far as relates this matter, and briefly commented upon. Then the sick member is raised to a sitting posture (if the state of the patient permits), and the elder brother receives it with his hand, and the other brother pours the oil upon it, which (the first) puts it upon the head of the sick, and thus three times saying the words of the apostle: 'Thou art anointed in the name of the Lord—unto the strengthening of thy faith—unto the comforting of thy conscience—and unto a full assurance of the remission of thy sins, or as the Lord may give utterance, and then the brethren both put their hands upon the sick, even as it is done when a brother is ordained, and pray briefly for the sick member. This is an example we have of the Savior, as we see in Mark 6: 13 16: 18. And this is the order the brethren have administered same. Brethren who are not ordained may administer it in cases of necessity." [Appendix to Min. 1841.]

For the Companion.

"Love your Neighbor as Yourself."

"Who is my neighbor?" Luke 10: 29.

Although the primary meaning of the word neighbor signifies a person living near by, or close at hand, there is a better and truer meaning of the term "my neighbor," given by Jesus, when he was asked "Who is my neighbor?" Our Lord then beautifully illustrates it by telling them of a man who fell among thieves, going from Jerusalem to Jericho. The thieves stripped him of his goods and left him half dead on the road side — After a while a priest came along and saw the poor, unfortunate man in a dying condition; doubtless the man thought surely if any person will help me, it is this priest; but the man's sufferings did not arouse any sympathy from this blank speck of humanity, and so he passed by on the other side. After a while a Levite came along. Now, peradventure, the poor sufferer will get attention, and this Levite may have mercy on him, and come to his relief. But see! he also passes him by, and the dying man is subject again to disappointment. Doubtless he now felt that the remaining spark of life which the thieves had left him, would be extinguished by the unkindness of these passers by.

But finally, a Samaritan came along and saw the man's wretched condition, and had mercy on him, by getting from his beast and dressing his wounds and pouring in oil and wine to restore in a measure his exhausted nature and drooping spirit. He then sat him on his beast and took him to the next inn and gave the host charge concerning him, that he would see him paid, &c.

Now the Savior asked who was neighbor to the man who fell among thieves? They said the man who had mercy on him,—this is a natural inference that the Samaritan was his friend and neighbor, notwithstanding they may have lived hundreds of miles apart. On the other hand the priest and Levite may have lived next door to this unfortunate man, and the Savior beautifully shows that they were not his neighbors, whether they lived close together, or far apart. We understand then that those who do us good, or wish us well, are our neighbors. Who then cannot love his neighbor as himself?

This subject can be further illustrated by one of Æsop's fables. A fox, having fallen into a well, made a shift by sticking his claws into the sides, to keep his head above water. Soon after, a wolf came and peeped over the brink, to whom the fox applied himself very earnestly for assistance; entreating that he would help him to a rope, or something of that kind, which might favor his escape. The wolf, moved with compassion at his misfortune, could not forbear expressing his concern: "Ah! poor Reynard," says he, "I am sorry for you with all my heart; how could you possibly come into this melancholy condition." "Nay prithee, friend," replies the fox, "if you wish me well, do not stand pitying of me, but lend me some succor as fast as you can; for pity is but cold comfort when one is up to the chin in cold water, and within a hair's breadth of starving or drowning."

APPLICATION.

Pity, indeed, is of itself poor comfort at any time; and unless it produces something more substantial, is rather impertinently troublesome, than agreeable. To stand bemoaning the misfortunes of our friends, without offering some expedient to alleviate them, is only echoing to their grief, and putting them in mind that they are miserable.

He is truly my friend "or neighbor" who, with ready presence of mind, supports me; not he who condoles with me upon my ill success, and says he is sorry for my loss. In short, a favor or obligation is doubled by being well-timed; and he is the best benefactor, who knows our necessities, and complies with our wishes, even before we ask him. ASA WARD.

Hoping and Waiting.

"It is a good thing that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord." Lam. 3: 26.

The tendency of the mind, when laboring under a feeling of depression, is, to hope for speedy relief or ultimate recovery, according to circumstances. This depression of mind is one of the results of having inherited a second or fallen nature. To this, we are all subject; and at times a state of mental depression seems unavoidable. There are many little things in this old, worn-out world which cause the humblest and holiest of Christ's dear flock to be depressed in soul.—And every one who has learned of the primeval creation of man, and has studied the cause of the corruption and distraction of the minds of men or mankind in general, can testify that in the beginning it was not so. After man became a living soul, "God saw everything that he had made: and behold, it was very good." The lovely pair were very good. But in all ages since, God has given testimony to the sad fact of human depravity. Sin unbalances man in his relations to God, and obedience adjusts him. Those who are "without hope and without God in the world," are unbalanced; and they that name the name of Christ, and do not "abstain from every appearance of evil," are unbalanced in their Christian character proportionately.—The sinner comes to God that he may be made holy. Holiness is a progressive work. The Christian must "follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." So it is written.

The prophet who is the author of the words quoted, was a man of God. In his time, Jerusalem was in a deplorable condition. The faithful were depressed in soul, and bewailed the calamities of the people because of their sins. The prophet complained to God, and in behalf of the faithful, prayed for deliverance. They believed that the Lord would deliver them. They had chosen the Lord as their portion, and therefore hoped in him. Their hope was stayed upon him who can deliver when all human help fails. And they not only set their hope in God, but were willing to wait for God's own time. They knew and confessed that "the Lord is good unto them that wait for Him, to the soul that seeketh Him." They expected a salvation from their calamitous state, and ceased not to "hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord." Thus it is with the Christian who mourns the condition of the world. On his left, he beholds sinners of every grade passing on to the sinner's dreadful doom; and on his right, Christians of every creed marching inconsiderately to the awful tribunal of God's inflexible justice. He who has at heart the salvation of the lost, the purity of the Church, and the promulgation of Apostolic truth, will give his influence to these ends by living before the world and the Church, a consistent and blameless life: and, if it is his part and position, will help, with the ability that God giveth, in the spreading and furtherance of that good work of which it is written: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature: he that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved." And in this will pray and look for glorious results; and if these will not come to pass at once, will realize and feel the truth of those well-spoken words: "It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord."

But these words are specially precious to every faithful believer in Christ. They contain a wholesome store of food for the righteous hungry. Some have hope, but in the day of adversity, fail. If God gives us sorrow here, we must hope in him for deliverance. If we must endure chastisements for Christ's sake, let us remember that "it is good that a man should hope," seeing that what we hope for is eternal, and surpasses all we are able to conceive. They who pass through tribulation now, will enjoy the fruition of their hope in the world to come. Ye who are persecuted for the sake of your devotion to the truth, remember, that if in this time some would make you ashamed of your peculiarity, you will not be ashamed of your hope. Rom. 5:5. And such trying scenes, your hope by faith will bring you all the nearer to Christ. Though your Christian warfare be long, despair not. We must wait, "quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord" as well as hope for it. We must persevere. Behind are foes and destruction; therefore keep "looking unto Jesus."—"Remember Lot's wife." Think not for a moment that you can identify yourselves with the world, God's enemies, and retain your friendship with Christ. Scoffs and jeers and false accusations may very painfully crucify the proclivities of our old nature and "the lusts of the flesh," but how shall all these things be compared with the incomparable reward which we "should both hope and quietly wait for?" That Christian who has no trials is on a dangerous state. Trial is the very ordeal through which we are made meet for heaven. If we are thus perfected, we are perfected with Christ.—Heb. 2:10.

A Severe Cold from being Baptized.

The paragraph in a late issue of the Watchman, relating to death by immersion, reminds me of an occurrence of some few years since in Boston, as follows:

My daughter had taken a severe cold, became very sick, and was attended by the well known late Dr. B., of this city, a kind, sympathizing physician, and a very prominent member of the Congregational church. The doctor was very attentive, and did his best for her comfort and recovery. Meeting the father of the sick girl one day, the doctor, with solemn gravity, expressed the sorrow for her sad case, and remarked:—

"I suppose you are aware how your daughter took her cold."

"No," said her father; "How?"

"By being immersed," said Dr. B.

"No, I think not," said the father.

"I can assure you," said Dr. B., "that such is the fact."

"It is not so, and I cannot for a moment suffer such an error to gain credit," said the father.

"But," said Dr. B., "I tell you as a professional man that such is the fact, and her sickness was caused in no other way. Everybody understands it so, and believes it."

"I am very sorry," said the father, "that such is the report. Do your people generally believe it?"

"Yes," said Dr. B., "all who speak of her sickness are convinced of the fact. It is too bad. It was very imprudent at this season of the year. She was a very delicate girl—I fear she will not survive her sickness."

The father took the doctor by the button of his coat, and remarked as follows: "Doctor, I am very, very sorry that such an impression prevails among your people, but doctor, your people believe a report of this kind very easily, and hold on to it very fast; still I can assure you, from my own personal knowledge, that my child did not take her cold from being baptized."

The doctor left, and the father closed the conference by stating the fact that, although his daughter had been admitted to the church, as yet she had not been baptized. "Mr. A.," said Dr. B., "you are too bad—is this so?"

"Yes, just so." The patient, however, survived the doctor and the erroneous report.—Chr. Watchman and Reflector.

If we fail on suitable occasions to declare what God has done for our souls, we shall be likely to offend our heavenly Father. But on the other hand, if we make such declarations, satan will be likely to be present, and tempt us to spiritual pride. Happy is the man who can relate and extol God's gracious dealings with him, with such meekness and humility as to furnish no entrance to evil.

For the Companion.

Close of Life.

When we look at the close of life, and the silence that now reigns among those who once enjoyed themselves with their friends and associates, but who, alas, have left this world, it makes us thoughtful. Who is it that has not a father or mother, a brother or sister, that has been called from time to eternity? How often do we come to the bedside of dying friends and hear their groans. Still there are thousands that do not think of the hour of death. They say that there is yet time to prepare for it; that they will obey God's commands when they have more time, but let me say to such, that death may come very soon, for he is no respecter of persons or ages. He takes young, old and middle-aged. We should therefore always be prepared to meet death, so that it may not be to us an hour of sorrow, but of joy. And to be prepared at any moment; we dare not put it off until to-morrow; for we do not know whether to-morrow will be ours. There is no time that belongs to us except the present. To prove this I need only refer you to the many that have been in the bloom of life, but were very soon laid on the bed of sickness and pain, and called upon to stand at the bar of God to give an account of the deeds done while on earth. And how hard it must be when the judge gives his sentence: "Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire!" Yet this will be our doom just as sure as we put off coming to God till it is too late. One day we carried along the coffin of the once smiling infant, and the next day that of a young man or young woman, just in the prime of life, to be laid in an untimely grave; the funeral being followed by a number of unconcerned persons, who do not think how soon they may follow in the same train. Yet they are still craving for this world's goods, and say that they have yet time, and put off coming to God till they have more time. Let me say that the devil tells you this, for he always will persuade you if he can to delay.—He will tell you there is still time, until it is too late. Do not heed his devices.

Let us all, therefore, prepare for a future world; so that we may not be afraid to die when death overtakes us, and that we may say with the poet:

"O, grave, where is thy victory?
O, death, where is thy sting?"

Secret Prayer.

"But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and, when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father who is in secret," &c.—Matt. 6.

The meaning of the Savior in the quoted verse is, that there should be some place where we may be in secret—where we may be alone with God. There should be some place to which we may resort where no ear will hear us but His ear, and no eye can see us but His eye. Unless there is such a place, secret prayer will not be long or strictly maintained. It is often said that we have no such place, and can secure none. We are away from home; we are traveling; we are among strangers; we are in stages and steamboats, and how can we find such places of retirement? I answer, the desire to pray, and the love of prayer, will create such places in abundance. The Savior had all the difficulties which we have, yet he lived in the practice of secret prayer. To be alone he rose up "a great while before day," and went into a solitary place and prayed. With Him, a grove, a mountain, a garden furnished such a place, and though a traveler, and among strangers, and without a house, he lived in the habit of secret prayer. What excuse have they who have a home, and who spend the precious hours of the morning in sleep, and who will practice no self-denial that they may be alone with God: O Christian, thy Savior would have broken in upon these hours, and would have trod his solitary way to the mountain or the grove that he might pray. He did do it. He did it to pray for thee, too indolent and too unconcerned about thy own salvation and that of the world, to practice the least self-denial in order to commune with God! How can religion live this? How can such a soul be saved? The Savior does not specify the times when we should pray in secret. He does not say how often it should be done. The reasons may have been, 1st, That he designed that his religion should be voluntary—and there is not a better test of true piety than a disposition to engage often in secret prayer. He designed to leave it to his people to show attachment to him by coming to God often—and as often as they choose. 2nd. An attempt to specify the times when this should be done would tend to make religion formal and heartless. 3rd. The periods are so numerous, and the seasons for secret prayer vary so much, that it would not be easy to fix rules when this should be done. Yet without giving rules—where the Saviour has given none—we may suggest the following as times when secret prayer is proper. 1st. In the morning. Nothing can be more appropriate when we have been preserved through the night, and when we are about to enter on the duties and dangers of another day, than to render Him thanks, and to commit ourselves to his fatherly care. 2nd. In the evening. When the day has closed—what more natural than to render thanks and to implore forgiveness for what we have said or done amiss, and to pray for a blessing on the close of the day; and when about to lie down again to sleep, not knowing but it may be our last sleep and that we may awake in eternity, what more proper than to commend ourselves to the care of Him "who never slumbers or sleeps."—3rd. We should pray in time of embarrassment and perplexity. Such times occur in every man's life, and it is then a privilege and a duty to go to God and seek his direction. In the most difficult and embarrassed time of the American revolution, Washington was seen to retire daily to a grove in the vicinity of the camp at Valley Forge. Curiosity led a man to observe him on one occasion, and the father of his country was seen on his knees supplicating the God of hosts in prayer. 4th. We should pray when we are beset with strong temptations. So the Saviour prayed in the garden of Gethsemane, and so we should pray when we are tempted. 5th. We should pray when the Spirit prompts us to pray; when we feel [illegible] praying; when nothing can satisfy the soul but prayer. Such times occur in the life of every Christian—and these are seeking times of piety—favorable gales to waft us on to heaven. Prayer, then, is the element of being; the breath; the vital air; and thus the Christian must and should pray. The heart is then full. The soul is tender. The sun of glory shines with unusual splendor. No cloud intervenes. The Christian rises from the earth and pants for glory. Then we may go alone with God. We may enter the closet, and breathe forth our warm desires into the ever-open ear of God, and he who sees in secret shall reward us openly.

Bible Illustration.

Joel, chap. ii.

The sublime representation in this chapter of the means employed by God for the punishment of a guilty people contains an exceedingly graphic description of the devastating march of an army of locusts. The literal accuracy of this description is confirmed by the observation of travelers and others, and by the instances recorded of the ravages of these insects. In the year 591, an infinite army of locusts ravaged a part of Italy; and being cast into the sea created such a stench that a pestilence arose which carried off a million of men and beasts. In the Venetian territory, also, in 1478, more than thirty thousand persons are said to have perished in a famine occasioned by the terrific scourges. In 1650 a cloud of them entered Russia and passed over into Poland and Lithuania, where the air was darkened by their numbers. In some places they were seen lying dead, heaped one upon another to the depth of four feet, the trees bent down with their weight, and the damage done by them exceeded all computation. In 1747, vast swarms did great damage in Wallachia, Moldavia, Transylvania, Hungary and Poland. One at Vienna was three miles in breadth, and another extended to so great a length as to be four hours in passing over a given point, and such was its density, that it totally intercepted the light of the sun, so that when they flew low one person could not see another at the distance of twenty paces.

Moor, when at Poonah, was witness to an immense army of locusts which was stated to extend [illegible] hundred miles, and so compact, that, when on the wing, like an eclipse, it completely hid the sun, so that no shadow was cast by any object, and some boys to rob, distant from his residence not more than two hundred yards, were rendered quite invisible. Mr. Barrow states a still more striking view of the ravages of the locust in the southern parts of Africa; he states that an area of nearly two thousand square miles might be said to be literally covered with them. When they were driven into the sea by a northwest wind, they formed upon the shore a bank nearly four feet high, and when the wind was southeast the stench was so great as to be smelt at the distance of one hundred and fifty miles. From 1778 to 1780, the empire of Morocco was terribly devastated by locusts; every green thing was eaten up, not even the bitter bark of the orange and the pomegranate escaping. A most fearful famine ensued. The poor were seen to wander over the country, deriving a miserable existence from the roots of plants; and the women and children followed the camels, from whose dung they picked the undigested grains of barley, which they devoured with avidity.—In consequence, vast numbers perished, and the roads and streets exhibited the unburied carcasses of the dead! On this occasion, fathers sold their children, and husbands their wives!

The noise which the locusts make when engaged in the work of destruction, has been compared to the flame of fire driven by the wind, and the effect of their bite to that of fire. Southey has thus strikingly described the noise produced by their flight, and approach of the swarms of locusts:

> "Onward they came, a dark continuous cloud
> Of [illegible]
> The rustling of whose wings was as the sound
> Of a broad river heard [illegible]
> Flight from a mountain [illegible]
> [illegible]
> [illegible]"

But this, however poetic, falls far short in correctness and sublimity to the description of the prophet Joel.

The Lost Child.

A wealthy family in the aristocratic boulevard Malesherbes were amusing themselves in seeking the king's portion, or the ring in the festival cake, when a lady of the company says to the hostess, "I wish my portion to be given to the poorest little boy who can be found in the streets." The servant was despatched on this freezing night, and not far from the house he found a ragged urchin trembling with cold and hunger. He brought him up, was ordered into the gay saloon, where a thousand lights glittered, and a sparkling fire gladdened and surprised. He drew his portion which the benevolent lady had promised, and as luck would have it, the little fellow found the ring (beans they use in Paris instead,) and of course he was "king."—They all shouted out that being a king he must choose a queen. He was asked so to do, and looking round the company he chose the very lady who had proposed to cede her portion of the cake. He was asked why he chose her. He said, "I don't know, she looks the most like mother." "Mother, whose mother?" "My mother. I never knew her, but was stolen away from her, and here is her portrait!" With this he drew from out his ragged coat a likeness, which proved to be that of the very lady herself, who in Italy had had her child stolen from her.

Let God Speak.

In the "march of intellect," men are apt to look too favorably upon the claims of a new theory in its antagonism to an old opinion, especially if the new view is the offspring of a brilliant brain, whose influence is great in the world of science and letters. It is not strange that apparent conflicts between the inspired record and these later expositions are developed. The last two centuries have brought out facts which have revolutionized the theories and thinking of the wise.—The philosophies have been modified, and new ones have been born. Divine truth of course, is ever the same, but man's conception of it may be varied; and his preception of it can not be more perfect than the clearness of its revelation. The natural heart of a man, the most distinguished in science and philosophy, is still enmity against God; and it is not strange if this enmity improves every opportunity to attack God's word. That word should stand upon the sure vantage-ground secured by a translation as accurate in form and sense as is practicable. A moment's thought will suffice to verify this position; and further examination will convince that there are now facilities for the attainment of much greater accuracy in rendering the thought from the dead languages that those enjoyed by the revisers of living tongues.

The mental activity of the age has pushed investigation in every direction, and many materials for definite conclusions have been obtained which until recently, were wanting. Theories, which in 1611 would have subjected their authors to the imputation and restraint of heresy, are not fully substantiated and accepted. Philosophy, falsely so called," attempts to use to the disadvantage of divine truth the disparities that are brought to light between this increased knowledge of the nineteenth century and the statements of the translation made in the early part of the seventeenth century. The falsely developed doctrines are run in a new mould of thought and technicality, and upon the antiquated phraseology of the Bible a charge is brought of antagonism to established facts. Here is a snare for the unlearned and the unwary. One well acquainted with the original, and fully posted in genuine science, discoveries, can answer these sophistic flings; but the common man, with his Common Version, is at their mercy.

But the word of the Lord endureth forever; and He who has always cared for his word has provided for the elucidation of dark points, the removal of difficulties, and the triumph of the light of revelation over every foe. Glance at some of the aids already furnished. The channels opened by commerce, erudition, and statesmanship have been used to gather contributions for developing and illustrating the true meaning of the Book of books. The sources, structure, and power of languages have been revealed: the land of the Hebrew people has been thoroughly explored, and has furnished information through its customs and monuments which materially helps to clear away the mystery which formerly enveloped it; manuscripts, covered since the dust of centuries, have been examined, and subjected to the severest tests of comparent criticism (furnished data for the solution of passages before in doubt, and the correction of positive errors.)

In a word, profound investigations, by the best minds in Christendom, have established facts and principles never thought of by those who worked under the rule of Hampton Court Conference.

Can these accumulations of the past two centuries and the accessions of the present be made available? Certainly. Will it be done by a general waiting for a universal movement of Christendom in that direction? No. That is not in accordance with the previous history of truth's triumphs. The individual truth-lover must use his own influence, combine it with the few or many who think with him, and by spreading the sentiment and helping the work truth conquers.

Is there any activity in this direction? Yes.—While the scholars and divines of Continental Europe have discussed the subject in its relations to the languages spoken by them, men of distinction in England both in Church and State, have recognized the need of thorough revision. The same subject has been much talked of here; and the talk among us has produced results. For eighteen years a body of men have been working, "through evil and good report." on the New Testament. That Testament has been for several years before the public, and has had an immense circulation, which continues. These same men (connected with the American Bible Union) are vigorously pushing forward the Old Testament. Their peculiar facilities are remarkable. With a valuable library, the accumulations of many years, containing treasures of the centuries which could not be replaced, if destroyed; and having secured the services of some of the best qualified men in the world, they deserve the sympathy and co-operation of all who wish to see the Bible shining in a purity and power that will dissipate the mists of error. Why should not the English reader enjoy these advantages, which now belong to scholars? How unfair that the common Christian should be compelled to listen to the Rationalists who proclaim, in the language of the people, their fallacies and insinuations, designed to overturn the divine record; while, for his defense, he is obliged to fall back upon the defective rendering of the forty-seven men, who themselves never wrote some of the most effective weapons now used by the friends of revelation.

HENRICUS.

Prayer is a religious representing of our will, and pouring out our hearts before God; it is the soul's pulse, and shows the state of the heart; if spiritual life be weak in us our prayers will be so too. Prayer is, in all ordinary cases, and it always ought to be, a calm and peaceful exercise, not an agitating one.

POETRY.

By Request.

Jesus Died on Calvary.

Jesus died on Calvary's consecrated Lonely Cross for me;
And we should remember constantly
How Jesus bled.

Oh! it is a token of Jesus' love
Jesus's way.
Being persuaded
Nor principalities nor powers of darkness
Jesus conquered.
Now a day of reckoning awaiteth
Sinners to Hell.

Jesus Christ, our Saviour,
Now reigns on high,
Jesus is [illegible] his goodness
And power great.

Pleading us unto the day evermore,
Jesus Lord of hosts
Soon appointed Second coming
Is nigh at hand.

Christians on your guard and watching
A band of Heroes
Watching for your Lord's returning
At midnight hour.

When the trumpet in Glory Heaven
Shall sound the day
Then is found of Christ
Oh! what an awful sight.

For the Companion.

Hymn.

My wayward heart, my wayward heart!
All wickedness with thee is rife;
Passion, thou from Heaven apart,
Thy self-destroying curse is life.

My heart, repent! I will repent!
The sinful thing I am no more!
Ignoble passion's sway;
Jesus Christ the Lord is near;
From [illegible] away.

Thou [illegible] not;
[illegible] Lord's will
With [illegible] my heart.

The Prospects.

Our readers are aware that we proposed to continue to publish our paper in its enlarged form if we could secure 3000 paying subscribers. In the last No. of volume 4 we said we would continue to issue a full sheet unless compelled to reduce it from lack of patronage; by which we meant that we would even do it for less than 3000 if we could afford it.—But we find that we shall be compelled to economize. Unless a revival takes place among our patrons we shall not obtain the 3000 by several hundreds. In many places we have a large increase, while in others we have lost. This is almost altogether attributable to the efforts of our agents, and friends. Of course there are places where there were other hinderances. One brother says he could overcome every other obstacle but the scarcity of money. We have reason to believe that money is scarce throughout the country; and although a dollar and a half is not a large amount we know that there are many good people in the United States who do not have so much for months and when they do get it, they have half a dozen places for it, and hence there are only the most zealous who will bestow it upon the soul. We know a little about these things by experience. We have been down the "valley of poverty" just far enough to appreciate the circumstances or the most needy; and what we have failed to realize by experience, we apprehended through sympathy.

But we are admonished that "charity should begin at home." However liberally we may feel disposed, we are limited by our means. Our expenses must not exceed our income. If the latter fails we must reduce the former as a natural consequence.

Subscriptions are still being received daily, and we may yet attain the desired number. At all events we shall continue to publish the full sheet until we see certainly what our circulation will be.

Those Premiums.

There appears to be some misunderstanding regarding our offer of premiums. We offered to a copy of Smith's Bible Dictionary to the person sending us the largest number of subscribers. To the person sending the next largest list a copy of Companion, volume 3, neatly bound. For the third largest list a copy of "Debate on Immersion." Some appear to have understood that we give these premiums to send a club of over 15 names. This we could not afford. We have two copies of the Dictionary, and felt willing to give it as a slight remuneration to the person who would be the most successful in laboring for our interests. And lest other successful competitors, who could nearly have won the first prize, should become discouraged, we offered several smaller rewards. And we now offer to exchange them. If volume 3, bound, is not wanted we will send Revised New Testament, worth $2.50; and if Debate on Immersion is not wanted we will send Nead's Theology or any other book in our office of about the same value.

We have heretofore neglected to state the time for closing competition. We now give that time as the first of March next. This will give timely notice to all concerned. The highest now stand at 61, & 58; and each agent thinks he can add more names to his list.

Business.

Wm. K. Moore, Millinburg, Pa. You have already a credit of $1.50 on Vol. 5: and now send 30 cents and say you would subscribe for the full volume only that you expect to move. What do you mean by this?

Daniel S. Cripe, Warsaw, Ind. We have no account of having received a letter from you containing $1.50. It is only a wonder that the one before us ever made the landing, with such an address. You should do your very best when you address a letter, and especially when it contains money.

G. W. Burkhart, Nolo, Pa. You may send recipe with particulars, for inspection, and if found genuine, will insert one year for $30.

D. H. Longnecker, Knobnoster, Mo.—Should be pleased to hear from you, especially in regard to the church, &c.

B. F. Kessler, Nachusa, Ill. Seventy-five cents will pay your indebtedness on Vol. 4.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

To the officers, teachers and Friends of the Crown St. G. B. Sabbath School.

Greetings:—God having in great mercy permitted us to meet once again to celebrate the anniversary of our Sabbath School, we beg leave to submit our very brief report.—We feel a sense of deep and heart-felt gratitude to our Creator for the many blessings he has poured upon us during the year past and gone. We find officers, teachers, and scholars living monuments of God's unbounded love and mercy. None have passed to that bourne, from whence no traveler returns. We are all here on this side of the grave and never-ending eternity.

Number of scholars now attached to the school, as follow: Males 56. Females 75; Total 131: Average attendance; 71. Admitted; 50. Stricken from roll; 37. Boy's Contributions: 11.48. Girls: 14. 20. Total $25. 77.

By the good management of our worthy Librarian, brother Eisenhower, we report the Library in good order and very systematically arranged, numbering 643 volumes, with fair prospects of adding 100 additional volumes, if we possibly can raise the funds.

We are glad to notice our teachers (with perhaps a few exceptions) manifest a warm desire and lively interest to promote the cause. True we labor under disadvantages, retarding the progress of our little band, which are different discouragings. The principal obstruction to our more perfect success we made mention of in our last annual report, namely, the gallaries in which we are obliged to assemble. But we cease to agitate it and think it unnecessary to do so, there being but little disposition and no effort made by the Church officers to furnish us with more comfortable quarters. Although discouraged, we will not give up in despair and will hopefully look forward to the time, when this congregation will purchase a more convenient building in a more retired portion of our city, where the walls of Zion may be built up: the gospel light shine brighter and shed its glorious rays to all around.

Before closing our report we wish to express our very humble thanks for the beautiful wreath of flowers presented to us by the little girls of the Infant class, in memory of little Ida.

God grant their precious hearts may be joined with Christ, and may their names in the Spirit Land be as pure and white as those fair flowers of remembrance.

J. S. THOMAS, Sup't.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Brother Holsinger: I am happy to be able to say that we have had another series of meetings in this, Washington, branch, which resulted in much good. This little branch has again been made to rejoice at seeing sinners come flocking home to Christ. Brother Jacob Cripe was with us as a recruiting officer in the army of the Lord, soliciting men and women to enlist. The result was, sinners sorry were and joining came out from among the world and commenced their march under the blood-stained banner of King Jesus. We hope that they will continue their march in such a manner that all men may know who is their Captain. Although, while acting as soldiers in the kingdom of this world men are required to use the glittering sword of steel, when they commence this warfare in the army of the Lord they are required to use a more powerful weapon, viz. the sword of God: and in the kingdom of the world, men who enlist in the army are required to be clad in a peculiar suit of clothing in order that they may be known by each other, but the soldier of the cross must be known by Love.

Brother D. H. Longenecker, Knobnoster, Mo., under date of Jan. 6th, writes: "The Church has increased pretty rapidly here. At the close of the war, I believe there were only six members; now there are about fifty. Some of these were added by baptism, but most of them had been members in other States."

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We receive all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

[illegible] friends to mourn for him. Occasion improved by brethren C. Long and R. Brege, from Psalm 23: 1—4. ALLEN BOYER.

[illegible] Brother Peter MILLER; aged 51 years, 2 months and 28 days. He was a kind and affectionate husband, and many friends and relatives. She was confined to her bed upwards of two months. She was a member of the Church about 25 years. Funeral services by Elder Gill, Hostetler and others, from Rev. 14: 12, 13.

THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Origin of the Bench.

Lately, while on a mission of love through Dauphin and Lebanon counties, Pa., a brother handed me a copy of the AMERICAN CHRISTIAN REVIEW, dated Dec. 29th 1868, published in Cincinnati, Ohio, in which an article under the above heading, written by W. C. Winter, which I was earnestly requested by brethren to copy and send to the Companion for publication, as it may throw some light on the subject of anxious bench religion. It speaks for itself:

"I have in my possession the "Life and Labors of James Quinn," as published in 1851, by John F. Wright. Mr. Quinn was born in Washington Co., Pa., in 1775; was received into the itinerant ministry of the M. E. Church in 1799, the year of the origin of "Camp-meetings" in America. Mr. Wright the biographer of Mr. Quinn, was also a distinguished minister in the same church. He says (page 205) "about this time (1849) the question was agitated as to the distinguished individual who first introduced the practice of inviting penitent persons to the "mourner's bench." Without attempting to give his own opinion upon the subject, Mr. Wright says, on the same page, "Hear Mr. Quinn on this subject;" and then makes the following quotation from Mr. Quinn's manuscript: "Something has been said, in a late number of the Christian Advocate and Journal, on the subject of inviting mourners to the vacated seat, or railing around the communion table—for I dislike the term altar, or altar for prayer, on such occasions. A Jew or Catholic may use that term consistently with his faith on the subject of altar and sacrifice, but an enlightened protestant believer, when he thinks, speaks, sings, or worships, extends his views beyond temples made with hands. By faith he dwells on the scenes of Gethsemane and Calvary, and thence ascends with the ascending Captain of salvation —now made perfect through suffering—to the right hand of the throne of the Majesty Eternal in the heavens, joyfully exclaiming: "We have an altar of which they have no right to eat who serve the tabernacle." "But" says Mr. Quinn, "to return: The writer seems to think that Lorenzo Dow first introduced the practice in 1802-3; but the first I ever saw or heard of it was in 1795 or '6, at a watch-night held at the house of that mother in our land, the widow Mary Hentham, near Uniontown, Pa. The person who conducted the meeting was that holy, heavenly minded man, Rev. Valentine Cook." Thus it appears from the testimony of Mr. Quinn (& I know of none more authentic,) the mourner's bench did not originate with Christ or his apostles; nor yet with eccentric Dow, but with that great champion of Methodism, Valentine Cook.

Although introduced in 1795 or '6, the practice did not generally prevail among Methodists for a number of years, as we also learn from Mr. Quinn. On page 120, in speaking of how the exercises of the early camp-meetings were conducted, he says: "They were called no mourner's benches, no anxious seats, in those days nor were any invitations given to seekers of salvation to present themselves for the prayers of the Church."

Although Mr. Quinn, in later days sometimes tried the experiment himself, he bore testimony (page 207) that with it he had "not always been suited." And on the same page he expresses his doubts of its utility in these words: "We may have seen, as well as read of, sparks of our own kindling."

THE GIRLS.—Can we not—since, while the power of the world is with men, the influence lies with woman—can we not bring up our girls more usefully, less slowily, less dependent on luxury and wealth? Can we not teach these from babyhood that to labor is a higher thing than merely to enjoy; that even enjoyment itself is never so sweet as when it is earned?—Can we not put it into their minds, whatever be their station, principles of truth, simplicity of taste, hopefulness, hatred of waste, and these being firmly rooted, trust to their blossoming up in whatever destiny the young maiden may be called?

The bad Half Crown.

This bad half crown makes as good and bright an appearance as the genuine, and yet it contains no silver; but there are few that detect it, and it will pass through many hands as pure coin. Finally it will fall into the hands of a judge, and by its ring on the counter, he knows that it is spurious, or a hypocrite. He nails it upon his counter, determined that it shall go no further.

Dear brethren and sisters; there will be the end of all hypocrites, and of such that obey not God. They will at last be nailed down under the awful judgment of God. Now we look upon that half crown, a nail driven through it, fixed to one spot, and exposed to public condemnation. Every one sees that it is a detected hypocrite, and is exhibited there as a warning to others. Now mark, such will be the end of all who make a profession of religion, but who have not Christ in their heart. Like that half crown they may deceive many for a time, but they cannot deceive God. That half crown may have passed through a good many hands before it was detected, but at last it fell into the hands of a judge, who knew that it was not real; and so he condemned it. God will at last ring, as it were, every professor on his counter—his judgment seat—and every one that is counterfeit, not real, will then be detected, condemned, and nailed to the place of judgment forever. So every time that we think of this bad half crown we should be reminded of the awful end of those who are not right in heart with God. Under such circumstances the heart must seek relief in pouring out its burning pent-up love into the bosom of God. The icy indifference of the deceived, perishing sinner, forms a contrast to the genial, sustaining presence of God. Cast thy burden upon the Lord and he shall sustain thee. Let your requests be made known to God, and the peace of God which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.

Most in our day, and perhaps all, who read this, know that no man can stand approved before God in his own righteousness. He may have been, touching the outward letter of the law, blameless, but when tried by God's hand he will be found deficient, disapproved, and rejected. Enter not into judgment with thy servant, said David, for in thy sight shall no living man be justified. "All our righteousness," says Isaiah, "is as filthy rags." These truths are absolute. We have not to wait till we reach the judgment seat to know God's estimate of man's righteousness. It is something peculiarly offensive to him. Not only is it as rags compared with a perfect garment, but as filthy rags compared with the spotless white. Such a condition of soul is most loathsome to the holiness of God, and must be judged by his righteousness. Woe, woe, eternal woe, must be the sinner's portion who appears before the judgment seat in such a state. Had scripture said all our wickednesses are as filthy rags, there might have been some hope for our righteousness, but when it says all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags, all hope is cut off. The best things we have or can be produced are totally rejected, as utterly unfit for God and for the place of his holiness. Fair appearances there may be, and that which will pass among men as genuine enough for any one; but God looks at the heart; he has but one standard; he looks for Christ; he tests the heart's estimate by him. If that dear name be found engraven on its tablets as its all in all, it will surely pass as the genuine current coin of the realm of heaven. But oh where Christ is not the stamp of the heart, all is utterly worthless to God. If he fills it not it must be empty indeed, whatever else may be in it.—If there be no Christ in the heart there can be no pardon, no peace, no salvation, no eternal life. It remains and all its direful and never-ending consequences. What will, and what can God say to a Christless soul at the judgment seat? "Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." Matt. 25: 41. This must be the fearful and inevitable doom of all who live and die without a personal interest in Christ, whatever their appearances or professions may have been in this world Nothing but the blood of Christ can save a soul from the lake of fire; nothing but the preciousness of Christ can stamp a soul for the rank of heaven. His precious blood alone cleanseth from all sin, and he himself is the "righteousness of God to every one that believeth." Eph. 1: 7, Rom. 10: 13.

ABRAHAM HENRY

Helping Children to Lie.

That lying is bound up in the heart of children it would not become me to deny. But certainly it is often untied. Indeed, there are few children who will not tell lies—the testimony of their parents to the contrary notwithstanding. But of two facts I am reasonably sure. First, that children's falsehoods are often as much their parent's as their own; and secondly, that children do not lie as much as grown-up people do, and seem to do so only from the want of skill and practice. Lies are instruments of attack or defense, and so may be classed as offensive or defensive. Children's lies are almost always defensive, and for the most part are employed in defending themselves against parents, nurses, brothers, and sisters, and schoolmasters. Being weak and helpless, concealment is in their case, as in the animal kingdom, the only means of defense. Children's lies are in multitudes of instances mere attempts to hide themselves from the sharper censure or sharper whipping.

Take a case from life. Master Henry is sent to the mill one day in winter, but with strict injunctions not to stop and skate. But the pond is so inviting, and the boys are so merry, they so persuasively coax him, that it is not in his social little heart to refuse. Of course he skates longer than he intended. On reaching home he is questioned:

"Why have you been so long, Harry?"

"O, the grist was not ground, and I had to wait."

"Did you go on the pond?"

"No, sir, I did n't."

Here is a pretty tangle of lies! The old gentleman runs his hand into the bag, and finds the meal stone cold. He rides over to the mill to inquire about matters; and finds that the grist was ground the day before; he rides home and calls up the urchin, who knows that a grist is to be ground that will be hot enough.—Here is disobedience first; then a lie; and then upon cross questioning, a second lie, explanatory and dispensory of the first. Of course punishment was earned and deserved. But the boy did not lie because he liked to, or because he was indifferent to the truth.—He was suborned by fear. He shrank from punishment, and tried to hide behind a lie. The refuge proved treacherous, as it ought to have done.

But, now is there no lesson to parents in this thing? Shall they hastily place their children between such unequal motives as conscience and fears. The lower instincts in children are relatively far stronger than moral sentiment. Conscience is weak and unpracticed, while fear is powerful, and, at times, literally irresistible. The fear of pain, the fear of shame, the fear of ridicule drives children into falsehood. Those who govern them might at least remember how it was in their own cases, and so manage as to help conscience against fear, rather than by threats and sternness make the temptation irresistible.

Children are very delicate instruments. Their minds are undeveloped, ungoverned, and acutely sensitive. Men play upon them as if they were tough as drums, and, like drums, they were made for beating. They are to be more than blamed. One in sympathy with their little souls will lead them along safely amid the temptations to falsehood, where a rude and impetuous nature will plunge them headlong into wrong.—The one element of real manhood, above all others, is truth. A child should not be left to learn how to be true, how to resist temptations, how to give judgment in favor of right and virtue. Here is the very place where help is needed—patience, sympathy, counsel, encouragement. Instead of these, the one motive, too often, is the whip!—Beecher.

"If she have washed the Saints' Feet."

These words are found in the 10th verse of the 5th chapter of Paul's 1st letter to Timothy.

There has been much said about feetwashing of late, through the Companion, and I do not wish to agitate the subject, but only wish to give a thought on the above scripture. If the apostles would have practiced feetwashing by one washing and wiping, and that only one as some brethren contend, how could the widow of such an age as the Apostle speaks of have evaded feetwashing. The only way that I can see would have been never to have been present on such occasions; but the way the brethren practice it now, she may have been present on many such occasions and never have washed her sisters' feet, and consequently she had not done her duty; as we understand the Apostle that she must wash feet before she can be supported by the church.

I do not understand the scriptures that it is necessary that every brother and sister should wash on every such occasion, but I think the scripture teaches that we should seek opportunities to do good and if we seek we shall find.—So if a brother or sister has been connected with the Church any length of time and has not washed they have not sought for an opportunity, and therefore it is their own neglect.

I hope the brethren will be able to get the ideas I have been hinting at.

Yours in christian love.

Marrying in the Lord.

While persuing the pages of Companion, (volume five number first.) I noticed a certain query thereon that attracted my attention, which was as follows "Since Paul teaches in 1st Cor. 7th chapter 39th verse that the wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth, but if her husband be dead she is at liberty to marry whom she will, only in the Lord." The question seems to be what is a marriage in the Lord? All marriages are in the Lord, when the interests, affections, and feelings of both sexes happily coincide; and the negative of the above assertion which are for instance riches, avariciousness, carnal pleasure and appetite, marriage of relations, &c., are out of the Lord.

Yours truly.

Consult duty, not events. We have nothing to do but to mind our duty. Oh how quiet, as well as holy, would our lives be, had we learned that single lesson, to be careful for nothing, but to do our duty, and leave all consequences to God.

"If need Be." 1 Pet. 1 : 6.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

This incomprehensible "if" was a condition in all Christ's doings for us, and is no less so in all his dealings with us. "It is not for us to know the times or the seasons," and just as little to know the means and the modes. It is not necessary to see the purport of the Divine procedure, nor know more than this, "So it seemeth good in Thy sight." Whether we are on the Mount of Transfiguration, entranced with "The Excellent Glory," or in stripes and chains, there is a "need be." If we are "called according to his purpose," "all things will work together for our good." The love of God keeps us in the purpose of God, and the wheel within a wheel in the Divine Providence will revolve in our interest no less than in that of the Great First Cause, and every revolution will promote our meetness for Heaven as it advances the purpose of Infinite Wisdom and Righteousness. We are not endowed with the judgment requisite to the selection of what is best, nor with the skill to determine the issues of such causes and agencies that are essential to our transformation into the image of him whose life is bliss and whose Presence is Heaven; but we are endowed with a sense of right, and power to choose it, and faith to believe in the rectitude, power and faithfulness of him who hath promised. Where the knowledge of right is poised by an enlightened conscience, and this supported by a Heaven-directed will, and the whole buttressed by faith in God, it matters not how smarting our chastisements, or how impenetrable the mystery that veils God's dealings, we are swaying in the direction of our "call," and that is "according to the purpose" of God, which leaves us ever free to sing our midnight harmonies, with streaming eyes it may be, but "with joy unspeakable," "when neither moon nor stars in many days appear." "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter," is spoken to to everybeliever as emphatically as it was to the dictating disciple. To God there is nothing mysterious, nothing inscrutable; "but all things are naked to the eyes of him with whom we have to do." A profound and awful mystery himself, he would have us no more stumble at mystery in his ways and purposes, than in his Infinite Being. "Ye believe in God, believe also in Me," is meant to complement the comforting admonition, "Let not your heart be troubled," and thus "increase our faith" so as to take in, without wavering or questioning, the dark and perplexing in God's dealings with us as individuals, as we do the inscrutable in God's Eternity. If we believe in God, as one who cannot err, and who notes every falling hair, and who cannot be surprised by any event small or great,—if we believe this, not simply with the intellect, but with a vital unity of the life of Deity, we will also believe in Christ, the manifested God, who had, for one object of his incarnation, the settlement of the mind in "peace that passeth all understanding," through faith, in circumstances which to the most towering intellect seem full of contradition, confusion, and incongruity. The Cross of Christ was to "the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness," because to the minds of both, the incarnation of God, and the crucifixion of the God-man were not only above reason, but a manifest contradiction, of it. So incomprehensible a mystery reason cannot suggest, nor compass when revealed; but faith has no more trouble in dealing with it, than has a child with the announcement that it is the parents purpose to present it with a toy. If we would not practically question the faithfulness and omnipotence of God, and the reality of very God manifest in the flesh let us not be unbelieving in the matter of our Heavenly Father's dealings with us, however painful, and however dark and spectral the shadow that lies on the spirit. There is a "need be." God knows all its complications, its tendencies, and how to meet it, and we may rest assured that he will not give us one stroke of the rod more than our case requires. If our aching hearts are forced to exclaim, "Thy judgments are a great deep," let us bear in mind that they all come from his tender hand in the vehicle of a deeper love. When he sees the objective condition of chastisement, "if need be," we may confidently rely on the subjection of a sanctifying administration of the necessary corrective, "As many as I LOVE."

If we could shape every thing according to to our wishes, we would utterly perish in our own corruption. Without a yoking to the Omnipotent Will, our tendency is downward and our destiny endless ruin, as inevitably as dews fall and sparks rise. The evidence of Divine sonship lies in unreserved subjection to the Divine counsels. "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt," is the definition of true discipleship. To confer with flesh and blood is virtually saying, "get Thou behind me, Jesus." When Jacob was bereaved of his children, he uttered the heart-broken plaint, "all these things are against me," not dreaming of the possibility that the destruction of his peace was caused by events that were the ground-work, in a sense, of his future sustenance, and the instrument of the Divine purpose in the exaltation of Israel. If we trusted God as we might and should, we would reap our most golden harvests of joy from fields that are barren to reason, have the loftiest reach of wisdom where mystery presses us on all sides, and be most consciously secure where the soul can touch no support but what may be grasped by simple faith. God's "ways are past finding out," and the perplexity arising from this fact is generally owing to the officiousness of reason, robbing us in a measure, if not entirely, of the beatitude which God designs as the home-element of the soul through trust. "There is none good but God," and "the Judge of all the earth must do right," and if we believe this, and are consciously and persistently bent on such a life as allows us to believe it, we may repeat the strain of David's lyre: "though a host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear; though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident." Ps. 27: 3. It is as true now, and as inspiriting to the weary, burdened heart, as in the days of the "Sweet Psalmist of Israel," "In the time of trouble He shall hide me in His Pavilion; in the secret of His Tabernacle shall He hide me; He shall set me upon a rock." 27: 5. So slow of heart are we to believe, and so full of the subtile poison of self, that we should be thankful for any providence that makes us aware of its existence and power. Heaven is a mansion for Christ-knowing and self-knowing souls only, and we know Christ only by having our eyes opened to the woeful fact of our degradation and impotence; and here afflictions, disappointments, breakings of heart, and lacerations of spirit, come in with their gracious mission, grasping our whole being as with holy violence, and whirling us round as by compulsion and yet with ultimate consent of the will, setting us thus in the liberty and peace of God by shaking and scourging us out of ourselves. Such discipline is certainly not in itself joyous but grievous, yet it has, in its aims, untold compensating joys, and covers the soul with the verdure of the Evergreen Realms, and loads it with "the peaceable fruits of righteousness."

That we are overwhelmed, and see no outlet from the impenetrable gloom and threatening clouds that envelop us, is no evidence that God is not tossing us with His own winds and waves nearer Himself. When He bids us launch out upon the deep, and sends the tempest after us, He may well rebuke our want of faith if we fail to recognize His voice amid the raging elements. When He withers our gourd, He has a momentous lesson to impress, without which we would have less of the Godlike in our character. "That we might be partakers of His holiness," is the ultimate end of all the milling, and grinding, and emptying, and probing, and purging and pruning through which we pass under His hand while on probation. Jeremiah had to wear a wooden yoke around his own neck to intimate the approaching bondage of Israel under the king of Babylon, and "Isaiah walked naked and barefoot three years for a sign and wonder upon Egypt and Ethiopia." Jer. 27: 2. Is. 20: 3. So God may lay burdens on us whose chief significance is in relation to others, while the benefit we derive from them is no less than if their end and meaning were wholly restricted to ourselves. "None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself;" and we may add, none suffereth to himself. "In our flesh dwelleth no good thing," and nothing but the furnace of affliction, in some form, will do for a smelting-place, and nothing but the blessed alchemy of God can transmute us into gold for the garnishment of his Heavenly Temple. "Only believe." Here is the secret of tranquillity in every scene of trial and sorrow. Let us be sorry for nothing that wounds our pride, and humbles the dominant desire to be somewhat, but let us glory in whatever brings us nearer that altitude of grace that blessed elevation in God, which enables us to say, "I am determined not to know any thing save Jesus Christ, and him crucified."

Our Heavenly Father's care for his Children.

Ye are of more value than many sparrows. Luke 12 : 7.

When our blessed Savior was among men and orally teaching them the way of salvation, he brought to light many beautifully Divine truths by natural parables; that is, illustrating something Divine by comparing it with some natural process of operation, or some event or occurrence, which could easily be understood by those to whom he spoke, or by us as it is recorded on the pages of the New Testament. It is generally easy for us to comprehend natural exemplifications. The Divine impress upon the soul is so much obliterated by sin that our spiritual comprehension is not only limited, but slow to make the right kind of progress. It is often the case, that instead of counting our comprehension and understanding limited in extent, and fallible in conclusion, we tenaciously and even obstinately contend with those with whom all things else declare we should be of "the same mind," and upon subjects on which all the followers of the Lamb should be of "the same judgment," "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" So says the Psalmist. And what is more to be desired than unity? What can more aptly and beautifully represent the nature of the Holy Trinity than the union of Gospel believers? If we are followers of Christ, we are God's dear children. He cares for us; and O how warm, and long-suffering is his care for us! We are bought with blood—"the precious blood of Christ." We belong to God, and to one another, hence we should care for one another. In all that we do, we should guard against offending the least of Christ's disciples, for "he is not ashamed to call them Brethren." We should seek the welfare of one another, and endeavor to build each other up, in faith and love, in holiness and godliness, and in unity and consistency.

"Ye are of more value than many sparrows," is the Redeemer's valuation of those who fear God and keep his commandments. The Elect of God are held in the highest possible estimation by their Heavenly Father. If the sparrows and ravens which live in the air are not forgotten before God, surely he will not forget them who trust in him. And if the lilies of the field which are but for a day, are clothed by the Omnipotent Hand with an array of beauty exceeding that of Solomon in all his glory, will not your Master, O ye of little faith, support and nourish you even in seasons of the most crushing adversity? Ye are of more value than sparrows or ravens or lilies. These are God's creation, and they answer creation's design, but are not the noblest of God's work. As man was the last of the work of creation, so is he the greatest and most superior. Of all the orders of created things, man is the highest. "When the morning stars sang together," and the echo of their joyous song echoed along and over the newly-created world, man was as the angels, pure and perfect before God. And we this day are man's offspring. We are God's by creation; but from the beginning, "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God;" but we should rejoice that "when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly." This is he who was promised as the mighty Deliverer to deliver us, and all who have sinned, from the bondage of sin; and he is the effectual Restorer to restore us to the state of holy purity before God. "Ye are clean through the Word which I have spoken unto you.—Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine: no more can ye, except ye abide in me." From this it is apparent that we can depart from him, or become dead branches. Abide in him, O ye who have vowed allegiance to the Truth. Obey and defend God's commandments, and bring every thought, word, and action, into "the obedience of Christ," and he will lead you in the narrow path of his own treading, from which you will observe wonderful things. If ye cast all your care upon him, he will care for you abundantly, "for ye are of more value than many sparrows." And yet he careth for these. If God thus cares for his unintelligent creatures which naturally depend upon his arrangements for their sustenance, much more will he care for his intelligent creatures that trust in him. Take courage, ye fainting ones. Do you struggle with temporal difficulties? trust you Heavenly Father, for he has promised assistance. Do you hunger for bread that satisfieth the soul? seek "the bread of God." John 6: 33.

Feet-Washing.

The double mode of practising this ordinance is sometimes defended upon the ground, that the use of the towel was not intended by Christ to be a part of the rite, but, that it is merely a natural consequence of washing, and therefore not binding upon the church. Do the brethren, who use this argument, not perceive that they are thereby conceding the point at issue to those who practise the single mode? and, that the matter is thus narrowed down to the question, whether wiping is, or is not, a part of this ordinance? Admitting, for a moment, that the use of the towel is not made binding by the teaching of the Master, illustrated by his "example," why does the brother who wipes gird himself in imitation of the Savior. Why not merely take a towel and perform the act, or, hand it to each brother, who has had his feet washed, and let him use it himself? Either of these methods would be as convenient; certainly more consistent; because, if wiping is not a constituent part of the ordinance, neither is girding with a towel. The words of the Lord Jesus, however, not only make it clear that the use of the towel is included in this rite; but, that he intended Feet-Washing should be practised strictly in accordance with his precept and example. Let us turn to "the law and testimony," and copy the 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th and 17th verses of the 13th chapter of the Gospel according to St. John:

"Ye call me Master and Lord, and ye say well for so I am. If I then your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet; (for I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you.) Verily, verily I say unto you, the servant is not greater than his Lord; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him. If ye know these thing, happy are ye if ye do them."

I have placed the language of the 15th verse in brackets, so that it may be easily omitted in reading; and, also emphasized, to show more clearly its importance. If the Savior had not intended his example should be implicitly followed, why interpolate the command with the strong and explicit injunction to that effect, contained in that verse? In the language past:

"He never once spake unadvisedly with his lips."—Omit the 15th verse, and he plainly institutes Feet Washing in the remainder of the passage copied, but not the mode, including the use of the towell, with that lucid distinctness, which was his purpose; and, which cannot be misunderstood.

The "example" of Christ consists in what he did to his disciples, which was the two-fold act of washing and wiping their feet; for he says, "Do as I have done to you." He did not gird them, or pour water upon their feet; hence girding with a towel and pouring water into a vessel, are not parts of the ordinance, but preparatory acts. The unavoidable and logical conclusions therefore, as stated, resulting from an examination of this passage of scripture, are, that wiping is a constituent part of the ordinance in question, and that to obey the command of Christ, to follow his "example," and to administer this rite to "one another," the same one who washes his brother's feet must also wipe them.

In a dialogue lately published in the Companion it is assumed, that because Christ used two members, both the hands of his physical body to wash his disciples' feet, he intended to signify that two members of his mystical body, the church, should be engaged in the administration of this ordinance. It is not easy to conceive, how he could have washed feet with one hand, if it had been his purpose, by the same method, to establish the single mode. He did, however, not by an unexplained device, but by the distinct words one another, institute that mode, and would, no doubt, have ordained the double mode, in equally unmistakable language, if it had been in accordance with the Divine will.

These things have been written, not in a spirit of controversy, but at the request of some of the brethren, in defence of the contiguous churches at Germantown, Philadelphia, Upper Dublin and Pine Run; and of all others that practice the single mode of Feet Washing. The truth will not suffer in the light of free discussion, conducted in a forbearing, Christian spirit, for "the light maketh manifest." The apostle exhorts us to "contend earnestly for the Faith once delivered to the saints." We believe we are acting consistently with this exhortation in defending our practice in this matter, and we know we "keep this ordinance, as the brethren, who have long since gone to their rewards, delivered it to us." All the records on this point, which are in existence, from the earliest settlement at Germantown, prove this: and we have living witnesses in sister Douglas and others, who remember distinctly that, when they were children, they saw Alexander Mack, and the brethren of his day, administer Feet Washing by the single mode.

The motto of the brethren in regard to this difference of practice of the ordinance of Feet Washing, has generally hitherto been mutual forbearance. It is to be hoped that the exercise of this blessed Christian virtue may continue; for, if intolerance should take its place, there can be but one result, from which may the Lord in his mercy preserve the Brotherhood.

The Lord takes pleasure in those who fear him.—They rest in his love, they are his children, and as their persons, so their services are accepted in the beloved; their prayer is his delight, and their alms are the odor of a sweet smell; he views their motives, and passes by their mistakes; he regards their wishes and desires, and says in their failures, "It is well that it was in thine heart."

A City Destroyed by a Storm.

The city of Almos, situated in the southern portion of the State of Sonora, has been swept out of existence by a fierce storm occuring on the 15th of November and lasting until the 18th. A private letter from an American gentleman, gives the following particulars:

"You have have heard ere this that the city of Almos is in ruins. On the 15th it commenced to rain and continued to increase in violence until the evening of the 18th. During its continuance it appeared as if no human being could live within its reach. The Almos River was swollen to a great height, and in its wild, headlong course carried everything before it.—Houses were swept away like so many straws, and whole blocks of buildings were thrown down like so many rotten trees.

The wind was no less terrible than the water.—Houses were unroofed and blown to shatters, tiles and like material were scattered through the air like chaff, and trees were uprooted as if they had been cornstalks. The best part of the city is totally destroyed. The loss of life has been quite large. Sixty dead bodies have been picked up, some of them mangled fearfully, and could scarcely be recognized. Many of the bodies were found miles down the river. Undoubtedly the number found will be largely increased by other untortunate ones. I have written to you these few lines hurriedly, but do not attempt to describe or explain this extraordinary phenomenon of seventy two hours' whirlwind and deluge.

The ruined city of Almos was the Athens of Northwestern Mexico. Its women were reputed to be the loveliest and most intelligent throughout the republic, and it citizens were highly spoken of as contrasted with those of other populations. There was a great deal of wealth, refinement and luxury among the better classes. It was a sort of sanctified Jerusalem, where the proud Spanish blood and brain held ascendancy, and would not be poisoned by Indian and Negro mix tures. Almas as a city, had fame before the great metropolis of New York was known. It is old among the many old towns of Mexico. Surrounding it have been some of the richest mines in the world, and from which the city had its chief support. At the time of its destruction it had a population of 7,000 souls, though geographical dictionaries place the number at 10,000, which is at least 3,000 too many. Unhappily for its people, the number is lessened through a terrible misfortune, and the city of Poplar Groves has fallen to the dust (even as man falls) in its strength."

"The Unpardonable Sin."

As several of our dear brethren have favored the readers of the Companion with their views of the unpardonable sin, and in perusing them I felt inwardly moved to give publicity to the sentiments I entertain concerning the matter: trusting that fraternal affection may thereby become confirmed, and truth exemplified. I understand them to say that all sins wilfully committed after regeneration are unpardonable, which in my estimation is a little ahead of scripture, which explicitly declares, "All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men. And whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor in that which is to come."

The above passage I consider sufficient proof that but one sin is unpardonable and which also may be committed by any one, whether believer or skeptic, for mark the expression, WHOSOEVER! consequently this conviction forces itself upon my mind that if we were eye-witnesses to some special work of God's Spirit amongst the children of men convincing them of righteousness and of a judgment, and would, after due time, take up his abode in their hearts, purify them, and assure them of pardon and acceptance, and we through malignity of spirit, would ascribe such a work of grace to Beelzebub, the prince of the devils, as did those incorrigible Jews, and which drew from the Son of God the solemn denunciation: "Whosoever shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness but is in danger of eternal damnation. Because they said he hath an unclean spirit," we too would become guilty of the unpardonable sin. But as long as we believe in the Divine mission of the Son of God, we will have but little inclination to blaspheme his wonder-working power; and though we should apostatize until we become lukewarm, wretched, miserable, poor, blind and naked, there would still be an abundant pardon, for what saith the Spirit to such an one? "I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayst be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayst be clothed, &c." For "Behold, I stand at the door and knock.—If any man hear my voice." And do you not learn it ye doubting ones who are troubled from day to day on account of having committed the unpardonable sin; hear His voice to-day; open the door of your hearts; admit this heavenly guest and enjoy his feast of love; and your doubts and fears will soon take wings and fly away.

I have now given my honest convictions concerning the matter in question, permit me therefore in conclusion, to say a word in reference to the oft quoted passage in Hebrews which says, "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, &c., if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance, seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame. Now said passage, I think, has no reference at all to a backsliding soul, in the common view, though it may sin grievously as did King David, or be joined to his idols as was Ephraim; yet the Divine message to such is, "I also have put thy sin away; I will surely have mercy upon thee." But they (the characters in the text) publicly renounced Christ and put him to an open shame, (according to history,) and avoided all intercourse with the disciples afterwards which made it impossible for man to renew them again unto repentance; but not for God, for with him all things are possible. "Big Words."

I observe many of our brethren use large words in writing for the Companion, so much so, that we would be compelled to refer to our dictionary if we thought it worth the trouble. There are plenty of simple words in our language, to describe any thought that may arise in our minds, and if brethren can't use this simplicity of language in writing or speaking, they are not worthy of attention, for the Apostle says (1st Cor. 2): "And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom declaring unto you the testimony of God." "And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." "Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God, which things we also speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth," &c. And 2nd Peter, 2nd chap. says: "To speak great swelling words of vanity, allures the lust of the flesh," &c. And 1 Cor. 14: 19, "yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue." Many of our dear brethren have no dictionary to refer to, and when brethren come to them through the Companion or otherwise, with their big words, it is like Latin, or an unknown tongue, sure enough. Selected by JOSEPH B. SELL.

Imaginary Dialogue between Joseph and his Brethren.

Enter Joseph. (He soliloquizes.) How mysterious are the dealings of God! My brothers envied me, because my dear father loved me best, and gave me that beautiful coat of many colors. In their cruel hatred they sold me for a slave. Thus I came to Egypt a miserable bond-servant. But I soon found a friend in my master, and was happy until my wicked mistress caused me to be sent in disgrace to prison. That prison was however a sweet place to me, for I found God there. I would rather be God's servant in a prison, than live in a palace without his love. How strangely Pharaoh's wondrous dreams brought me out of the dungeon, and led me to the high office I now fill! Yes! the slave boy is lord of all Egypt. How strange! Yet I feel these things have not changed me. I have the heart of Joseph still. And now my brothers are come to me for corn! How glad I am that I can save them and my dear old father from starvation. And they have brought little Benjamin with them. How I long to embrace the dear boy! What sweet revenge it is on my brothers, to heap these gifts upon them! They think that I am dead. They meant to destroy me, but now I can repay their hatred with love. How delicious is the luxury of doing good to one's enemies! But I must contrive a little plan to trouble them, and see if they feel any sorrwo for their conduct to me—what! ho! there!

(Enter Potiphar, a steward, bowing to Joseph.)

Joseph. Fill the strangers, sacks with corn; but put every man's money in the mouth of his sack!

Potiphar. (Bowing reverently.) Yes, sire, I hear and obey.

Joseph. Stop! Take this silver cup and put it in the sack of Benjamin, the youngest of the men. Tomorrow morning you may send them away.

Potiphar. I hear, sire, and obey! (Exit.)

Joseph. (Soliloquizes again.) They are gone from me again. O my brothers, how I long to embrace you all, to tell you I forgive the past, and to send the joyful tidings that I am yet alive, to my dear old father! What will he say? How his aged spirit will leap with joy, when they tell him his Joseph is yet alive! My very heart swells at the thought of seeing his well-remembered face once more! What dignity! what patriarchal grace sat on his spacious brow! How beautifully-gray were his silver hairs. I wonder if time has changed him much. I love him! My father! my dear old father, when shall I embrace thee? But I will call my brothers back. What! ho! there! my steward.

(Enter Potiphar, bowing.)

Joseph. Are the men gone?

Potiphar. They left at early dawn, my lord.

Joseph. 'Tis well. Now speed thee quickly after them. Ask them for my silver cup! charge them with its theft, and bring them back to show why they have acted thus. Up, follow them! Begone with speed.

Potiphar. I hear and obey, my lord. (Exit Potiphar.)

Joseph. (Soliloquizes.) And now they will return, and I will make myself known. How my heart throbs! Peace, beating heart! let me still thee by the force of lonely prayer. (Joseph retires.)

(Enter Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar, Zebulon, Gad, Asher, Benjamin, Dan, Naphtali, looking wildly at each other, and accompanied by Potiphar, the steward.)

Potiphar. My lord Joseph bids you wait his pleasure in this hall.

Reuben. We obey your lord's wishes, and are ready to show our innocence of this crime. (Exit Potiphar.)

Simeon. Trouble pursues us everywhere. God is visiting the blood of our Joseph upon us.

Levi. It is surely so. I would give all my silver and gold if I could unsay those guilty words by which I advised his death. O Joseph! Joseph! why did I hate thee for thine innocent dreams!

Issachar. I have never forgotten that sweet, beseeching look he gave me, when I bound his arms; nor the tender voice with which he said, "Don't hurt me, my brothers," as we lowered him into that horrible pit.—Many a night has that dear figure haunted me as I have watched my sheep on Dothan's plains.

Zebulon. It is terrible to have a brother's blood upon the soul. I feel it now. O how eloquently his looks plead for liberty when the accursed Ishmælites bound him to the slavechain!

Gad. Yes, and how touching was that cry he uttered, as they drove him away! "O my brothers!" were his last words to us, and they have been ringing in my ears ever since. Verily, we are guilty, and God is just.

Asher. And I, who dipped his coat in blood, and carried it with a base lie to our noble father, have never felt peace since. I have grown old fast at the sight of father's grief. He has never smiled since!

Dan. I thought my heart would break when our father saw the bloody coat, and said, "It is my son's coat." O how he wept! and often since have I seen the tears coursing down his venerable cheeks. In destroying our brother, we have well-nigh killed our father. I wonder not that the hand of God is upon us for evil.

Reuben. Brothers! I wash my hands of our Joseph's blood. I begged his life; I had him placed in a pit, intending to save him from your rage, when, unknown to me, you sold him to the Ishmælites.

Judah. That was my crime. My guilty tongue proposed that unnatural sale. The thought of it is more bitter than gall or wormwood to the taste. Truly it is a fearful thing to endure the pangs of guilt.

Benjamin. I am young, but I must speak. Is it possible that ye are the murderers of my lost brother? O cruel hands—O hard hearts of stone! to destroy so beautiful a lad. I have heard my dear father speak of Joseph's piety, of his wondrous dreams, of his many-colored coat, and of his death by wild beasts, until my heart swelled to bursting. O had he known that these beasts lived around his own tent! Had he seen in you the murderers of his son, his broken heart had died long, long ago. O ye sons of Jacob, how could ye stain your hands with Joseph's blood!

All, except Reuben and Benjamin. We are verily guilty of our brother's blood. Woe to us! Woe to us!

Enter Potiphar. My lord Joseph is coming. (Enter Joseph with attendants. They all bow before him with reverence.)

Joseph. (Aside.) My boyish dream is fulfilled today. Their sheaves bow down to mine. (To his brethren.) What deed is this ye have done! Ye have stolen my silver cup! Did ye not know that I can divine secrets?

Judah. We are not guilty of this, my lord; only God, for a former iniquity, hath brought us into this strait. But since the cup is found upon us we submit and will be your slaves.

Joseph. Nay! I will take him only, upon whom my cup was found.

Judah. O my lord, let me speak and be not angry. We have a father, an old man, and this little one, Benjamin, is the child of his old age. Now if we return without him, thy servant, our father will die: for he said when we brought Benjamin away, "Ye know that my Rachel gave me two sons; Joseph went out from me and I saw him not since, and if mischief befall Benjamin, ye shall bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave." Now, therefore, let me be thy slave, and let Benjamin go; for I cannot bear that evil come upon my father.

Joseph. Let all go out from our presence but these strangers. (Exit Potiphar and attendants of Joseph.)

Joseph, to his brethren. I am Joseph! Doth my father yet live? (The brethren look at each other as if terrified, while Joseph passes through excess of feeling.)

Joseph. Come near to me, my brothers. (They approach him wondering—a pause.)

Joseph. I am Joseph, your brother, whom you sold into Egypt. Be not grieved with yourselves, my brothers; God made your evil promote my good. He hath made me next to Pharaoh, and I am here to preserve your lives through this famine. Haste, then, to my father; tell him Joseph lives and waits to see his face in Egypt.

Reuben. Can this be our brother Joseph?

Judah. God be praised, Joseph lives!

Simeon. Now will our father smile again!

Gad. A burden has left my spirit!

Asher. Peace be to thee, most noble brother!

Benjamin. Are you indeed my brother Joseph?—I have often dreamed of you since you left our home! O happy hour that brings me to my lost brother!

Joseph. (Embracing him.) Yes, Benjamin, I am thy lost brother. Dear, innocent boy, God alone knows how often I have thought of thee, and how often I have longed for this bright hour. But haste, I want to see my father. Go bring him down to Egypt. Till then, adieu. (Joseph retires.)

The brothers. Till then farewell.

The First Sabbath-School.

There has been a great deal said about the first Sunday School in the world, and especially the first one in our own land. We have heard that Robert Raikes in London held the first one; and that Bishop Asbury of the Methodist church in American, did; and that an Episcopal Rector in Philadelphia did; and that Mr. Slater, in Pawtucket, R. I. did. Our worthy "grandpa Dexter" lately deceased, was one of Slater's scholars.

But now we have an account of another first one.—It is given by Rev. A. B. Grosh, of Washington, in the Guiding Star, a new and beautiful Sabbath-school paper, edited by Mrs. C. A. Soule in New York. In this account we find that this school was commenced at Ephrata, Lancaster Co., Pa., among the Dunkers, a Baptist denomination. A gentleman of that place writes thus on the subject to Grosh: "Sabbath-School instruction was commenced at Ephrata by Ludwig Hacker, a man devoted to the cause of juvenile instruction. He came to Ephrata in 1739, and shortly, on his arrival, was appointed teacher of the common school. In a short time he also opened a school on Sunday afternoons for poor persons whose employments did not permit school attendance during the week, and for the religious instruction of others. He was aided in this by several brethren, and this school flourished for many years."

Thus there is no doubt that, to use the words of another record, "Sunday-Schools existed in Ephrata, Lancaster Co., Pa., several years before Robert Raikes established them in England." Let us give wherever it is due. Whoever established the Sunday-School was a benefactor to his race. Let those who now enjoy the institution as it is improved, thank God for the blessing and seek to extend its benefits wider and wider, for the good of the little ones of the Lord's family.—The Myrtle.

The Opera.

When I think that music too is condemned to be mad, and to burn herself upon such a funeral pile, your celestial opera-house grows dark and infernal to me. Behind its glitter stalks the shadow of eternal death. Through it, too, I look not up into the divine eye, as Richter has it, but down into the bottomless eye-socket; not upward toward God, heaven, and the home of truth, but too truly downward, towards falsity, vanity, and the dwelling-place of everlasting despair.—Carlyle.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Only.

Only one drop of water at a time that had found its way from the mighty ocean through the dyke, and was slowly wearing a little channel. Only one drop! Yet if that little child in her morning rambles had not noticed it, who can tell what the terrible results might have been?

Only a stray sunbeam! Yet perchance it hath pierced some wretched abode, gladdened some stricken heart, or its golden light found its way through the leafy branches of some wildwood, kissed the moss-covered bank where the tiny violet grew, and caused a rich shade of beauty to adorn its lovely form.

Only a gentle breeze! But how many aching brows hath it fanned, how many hearts cheered by its gentle touch!

Only one stray bullet that pierced the noble soldier-boy as he trod the lonely midnight-round, faithfully guarding the precious lives intrusted to his keeping; yet the life-blood slowly ebbed out, and the morning sunbeam fell upon the cold face of the dead.

Only a sentinel! And yet one soul more had passed from its earthly tenement to meet its reward at the hands of a merciful God.

Only a drop of ink! And yet it carried the news of death to anxious ones at home, and caused the tear of anguish to trickle down the furrowed cheek of a widowed mother.

Only a frown! But it left a sad, dreary ache in that child's heart, and the quivering lips and tearful eyes told how keenly he felt it.

Only a smile! But ah! how it cheered the broken heart, engendered a ray of hope, and cast a halo of light around the unhappy present; made the bed-ridden one forget its present agony for a moment as it dwelt in sunshine of joy, and lived in the warmth of that smile.

Only a word! But it carried the poisonous breath of slander, assailing the character. O how it pierced the lonely heart!

Only one glass! And how many have filled a drunkard's grave thro' its influence! How many homes made desolate! How many bright anticipations of a glad and happy future blasted by its blighting influence!

Only a mound in the quiet churchyard, and yet it speaks volumes to the stricken ones. Some home has lost a light! Some home-circle has a vacant chair!

Only a child, perhaps, yet "of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Only a cup of cold water given in the name of a disciple, but it is not forgotten. Then toil on, christian; yours is a glorious work; hope on, ever, for yours is a bright reward.

One soul snatched from the ways of sin and degradation through your feeble efforts, coupled with the grace of God, will add lustre to your crown of glory, and speak more for your happiness hereafter, than a life of selfish works.

Only a prayer! And yet it calls to you for help. It calls for good raiment and food; and, Christians, shall not we, through the grace of God, answer that prayer? God grant it in his mercy.

Only a lifetime! A short day in which to prepare for death, for "as death overtakes us, so judgment will find us." Let us, then, gird on the armor anew, and press on, the hope of a brighter hereafter being our talisman, using the weapons of prayer, lest we enter into temptation, and lose the rich reward of him who is faithful even unto death.

THE NUMBER SEVEN. The number 7 has always been supposed of some peculiar virtue. Somebody has been laborious enough to hunt up the following facts from the Bible in relation to it which we give for the benefit of the curious of our readers:

On the 7th day God ended his work, the 7th month Noah's ark touched the ground and in 7 days a dove was sent out.

Abraham pleaded 7 times for Sodom, Jacob served 7 years for Rachael, mourned 7 days for Joseph and was pursued a 7 day's journey by Laban.

A plenty of 7 years and a famine of 7 years were foretold in Pharoah's dream, by 7 fat and 7 lean beasts, and 7 ears of full and 7 ears of blasted corn. On the 7th day of the 7th month the children of Israel fasted 7 days, and remained 7 days in tents. Every 7 years the land rested; every 7th year all bondmen were free, and the law was read to the people.

In the destruction of Jericho, 7 priests bore 7 trumpets 7 days; on the 7th day they surrounded the walls 7 times; and at the end of the 7th round the walls fell.

Solomon was 7 years building the temple and fasted 7 days at its dedication. In the tabernacle were 7 lamps, and the golden candlestick had 7 branches. Naaman washed 7 times in Jordan.

Job's friends sat with him 7 days and nights, and offered 7 bullocks and 7 rams as an atonement.

Our Savior spoke 7 times from the cross on which he hung 7 hours, and after his resurrection appeared 7 times. In the Lord's prayer are 7 petitions, containing 7 times 7 words.

In the Revelations we read of 7 churches, 7 candlesticks, 7 stars, 7 trumpets, 7 plagues, 7 thunders, 7 wells, 7 angels, and a 7 headed monster.

On Time.

I saw the temple reared by the hand of man, standing with its high pinnacle in the distant plain. The streams beat upon it—the God of nature hurled her thunderbolts against it, yet it stood firm as adamant. Revelry was in the halls, the gay, the happy, the young, the beautiful were there. I returned—and lo!—the temple was no more.—Its high walls lay in scattered ruin; moss and grass grew rankly there, and at the midnight hour the owl's long cry added to the deep solitude. The young and gay who had reveled there had passed away.

I saw a child rejoicing in his youth, the idol of his mother, and the pride of his father. I returned, and that child had become old.—Trembling with the weight of years, he stood the last of his generation —a stranger amidst the desolation around him.

I saw an old oak standing in all its pride upon the mountain: the birds were caroling in its boughs.—I returned, and the oak was leafless and sapless, the winds were playing at their pastimes through its branches.

"Who is the destroyer?" said I to my guardian angel.

"It is time," said he. "When the morning stars sang together for joy over the new-made world, he commenced his course; and when he has destroyed all that is beautiful on earth, plucked the sun from his sphere, veiled the moon in blood, yea, when he shall have rolled the heavens and earth away as a scroll, then shall an angel from the throne of God come forth, with one foot upon the sea and one upon the land, lift up his hand towards heaven and swear, by Heaven's Eternal: Time is, Time was, but Time shall be no longer!"—Publisher.

EVERY hour, life's sands are sliding from beneath incautious feet, and with sin's fatal flower in the incautious hand, the trifler goes to his doom. The requiem of each departure is an echo of the Saviour's question: What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

ANGER.—Anger in many instances arises from a cowardly fear of seeing or being told our own faults. When apparently enraged at others we are really enraged with ourselves for being enraged at all. For further confirmation, consult your own soul after a fit of passion.

A HIDDEN light soon becomes dim and if it be entirely covered up, will expire for want of air. So it is with hidden religion. It must go out.—There cannot be a Christian whose light in some aspects does not shine.

Be pure, but not stern; have moral excellences, but don't bristle with them.

Great hearts, like the ocean, never congeal.—Bacon

"Big Words."

Elsewhere in to-day's paper will be found an essay under the above heading from brother Asa Ward, which we think is most too sarcastic to pass without a notice. Sarcastic—perhaps that will be called a "big word," and yet it would be hard to avoid it, and still express our opinion in regard to the matter before us. We might have said "too severe," but that would not have exactly answered.—We wish to convey the idea that he scorns, and that too severely, which we have in the one word "sarcastic."

We think there is too much prejudice—prejudice, may be, is another big word: it means—"previous bent of mind." That is to set one's self against a thing without having a proper understanding of it. We were about to say there is too much prejudice against the using of words proper and common to the writer, but strange to the reader. The same is true in regard to speakers and hearers.—It is the duty of the writer to express himself clearly in such words as may most readily occur to his mind. It is the only way in which one can write or speak easily and freely. If one must seek for words of a lower grade the composition will be strained and irregular; if the author aspires to higher language than he can readily command, it will be like bone without marrow; like chaff without grain.

What is a big word? Is it a polysyllable?—a word of many syllables. If so, then the scripture writers—or at least the translators—are guilty of using big words. Paul says his preaching was not with "enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and of power." Demonstration contains 13 letters and 4 syllables, while the little word proof has but one syllable, and only five letters, and yet is in every way as good. Why not say in proof of the spirit and of power?" But we hope it will not be attempted to maintain that a long word is a big word. And yet while we are upon this point it would perhaps not be unprofitable to meditate a little farther.

We have made use of the word "polysyllable," and before we used it we inquired into its signification—meaning. While the word itself contains just 12 letters, the words employed in its definition require 20. The scriptures do not forbid big words, long words, but they admonish against many words.—Multiplication is a long word, so is misunderstanding—nevertheless we could not easily do without them.

We think the principal cause of dissatisfaction is not the fault of our contributors, but is mainly to be attributed to the prejudices of the reader. This we think is set forth in the language of brother Ward: "We would be compelled to refer to our dictionary "if we thot' it worth the trouble."

A man must either be very learned or very bigoted who does not think it worth the trouble of getting his dictionary in order to make the acquaintance of one more word.

We should rather thank than censure an author for introdu-ing to our notice a new word, of which we otherwise perhaps would have remained ignorant. If we really wish to learn we will be pleased with every opportunity afforded us of getting a new word or idea. It is not the childlike spirit that riles up at every difficulty in its way up the hill of knowledge. The child applies to its parent or teacher for light.

As to many of our brethren having no dictionary we think is either a great mistake or a sad misfortune. A christian family without a dictionary is as great an object of pity as a heathen family without a Bible. We are never without one at our side. We carry one in our vest pocket. It only cost us 75 cents, and if we were to do without another ten times the money would not buy it. A good chewer or smoker could save the price of one in a month.

But says one, we don't need a Dictionary to understand the Bible, and if brethren can't use the same "simplicity of language in writing or speaking, they are not worthy of attention." We of course do not expect to make ourself a standard, but we confess we still need the dictionary for an assistant to the Bible. We have had it in our company for many years; have pursued professional callings for the last twelve years, and yet there are many words in the Bible of which we cannot give a lucid definition. We have just taken a lesson.—Assistant has been catechising us. Below we give our first lesson. Those of our readers who can give the meaning of all the words without a dictionary will apply for lesson No. II.

We have frequently given place to our brethren to offer their reproof to our correspondents for using high sounding words, because the principles upon which our periodical is based require us to do so. Not that we thought such reproof was deserved. We do not think that the standard of our literature has been too high; it is within the reach of all except those who wilfully debar themselves. It is a cherished expression "that the feed should not be placed so high in the rack that the lambs cannot reach it." But we have thought that some lambs are content to eat off the ground until their necks become so stiff that they can never reach the rack. Not quite so beautiful an illustration but just as true. The low must be brought up, and the high must be brought down. Brethren let us meet midway. Let not the speaker close his mouth, nor the hearer stop his ears.

Correction.

Brother S. Thomas wishes to correct the last sentence of his answer to brother Hummer, as follows: "St. Paul designates Christ the head of the Church, and the Church the body of Christ." The article is found on page 550, of Vol. 4, and the correction is in the last sentence.

Business.

D. H. Brumbaugh, Centre, Ohio. The $1.50 has been received.

Jacob Trout, Gratis, Ohio. The money has been received for Sol. Stoner, and the paper is being sent.

W. E. Roberts, Pottstown, Pa. Your credit on subscription expired with No. 20, of Vol. 4; hence your indebtedness on last year is 90 cents. $2.40 will pay to end of present year.

Jacob K. Byerly, Fletcher, Ohio. Your letter containing 33 has not come to hand.—Your names have been entered on the books.

A. S. Beightel, Williamsburg, Pa. We have examined our books according to your request, and find you owe us 50 cents on Volume 3. Do you think that is right?

Mary Wogaman, Dayton, Ohio. Your paper is being sent.

Noah B. Blough, St. Clairsville, Pa. The money has been received. You will hereafter get your papers regularly. An error occurred on our part.

George Lint, Buena Vista, Ohio. What do you mean by "Apocryphal New Testament?" And what price book do you want?

Geo. W. Shaffer, (does not give his address) says the church desires Elder Graybill Myers to visit them and hold a series of meetings after his return from present appointments. Meetings to be held at his place and at Plum Creek.

Henry Herr, Sen., Millersville, Pa. It is enough for this year.

E. B. Shaver, Maurertown, Va. What was Joel Spigle's address last year that we may credit him with the 75 cts. He did not get his paper at Maurertown.

Wm. S. Shepherd, Bull's Gap, Tenn.—Your subscription expired with Vol. 4, hence the paper was discontinued. We cannot tell why your paper comes from the west. We mail it eastward. We have been notified by the mail messengers to ship our Tennessee mail matter westward, against which we have remonstrated.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Notice.

Brother William A. Powers left this vicinity about the 8th or 10th day of June last, with a certificate of membership, signed by D. B. Sell, Wm. B. Sell, Jacob Spahn, C. Spahn, the writer and others; stating when he left that he was going to Illinois on a visit and would return shortly; also promising to write to the brethren at Hamilton, in relation to his returning, &c. We have not heard from him since, and have also found it necessary to expel him from Church fellowship for bad conduct. We therefore advise the brethren not to receive him with his letter, as he cannot be held any longer as a member until he returns and renders satisfaction to the Church and the world.

Signed in behalf of the Church.

GEO. WITMER.
WM. B. SELL.

Information Wanted.

Brother David Rupel, North Liberty, Ind., after saying that a visit to Michigan of five weeks length delayed renewing his subscription, writes: "Information is wanted of whereabouts in Pennsylvania, Magdalene and Sarah Sider lived, who are now both deceased, but left an estate to the heirs of brother Jacob Sider who moved from Pa. to Canada about 70 years ago, and whose son is now living in Michigan and wishes to know where these Aunts of his lived, so as to get his share of the estate, if any there be, as he is in need. The information is to be sent to Martin Sider, Grandville, Kent Co., Mich."

Brother Jacob Mack, Vermont, Ills., under date of January 13th writes an interesting letter of which, though not intended for publication, we give the following:

"We are still on the land and among the living, with the blessings of life strewn in our pathway by the hand of our benevolent and bountiful Benefactor, by whom we live, move, and have our being, and to whom belongeth glory, honor, dominion, and majesty now in the Church Militant and ultimately in the Church Triumphant, there to unite with the four and twenty elders, and that innumerable company which no man can number, who unitedly raise their voices, saying, "Salvation to our God that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb." Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.

"I will not say much at present though I could if I were so disposed. But one thing I must say, and that is this: What a pity it is that there are so many brethren who cannot write without contradicting some one, and thus contradict each other. Verily, these things ought not to be.

Of all the periodicals that make their appearance on my table, the "Companion" is by far the most welcome. W. G. SCHROCK.

Berlin, Pa.

Thank you. A very short communication but speaks volumes in the way of encouragement.—Ed.

Queries.

I would like to have an explanation of Hebrews 7 : 3 through the Companion.

We shall not publish poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

On the 14th inst., brother GEORGE WELTY, aged 20 years, 9 months, and 14 days. Funeral services by Elder J. F. Brother and the writer.

D. F. GOOD.

In Lower Conewago branch, York county, Pa., November 19th, 1868, SUSANNA YOUSE, aged 4 months.

In Upper Conewago branch, Adams Co., Pa., Dec. 10th, 1868, Sister MARY HARBOLA: aged 21 years, 9 months and 15 days.

In the same branch, January 4th, 1869, our friend GEORGE CHRONISTER, of Typhoid Fever, aged about 30 years.

ADAM HOLLINGER.

In Germany Valley, Huntingdon county, Pa., January 6th, BRUCE, son of friend Reuben and Louisa MYERS, aged 6 years, 2 months and 1 day.

His death was caused by Hydrophobia.—About 8 weeks previous to his death he was at his Grand-father's, (Michael Myers,) well as usual. He was about the outbuildings hunting for eggs, and in reaching his hand under the building, was caught and badly bitten by a cat. He, of course, had no idea of the cat being mad, but so it proved to be. He worked in spasms three days, when death ended his suffering. He was an interesting little boy, and loved by all who knew him.—Funeral services by Elder John Spanogle and James R. Lane. KATE S. MYERS.

In Conemaugh branch, Cambria county, Pa., November 19, 1867, ALICE BLOUGH, infant daughter of friend Levi C., and sister Caroline Bloug[illegible] aged 1 year, 2 months and 14 days. Funeral services by the brethren.

Also in the same place, September 7, 1868, Brother LEVI C. BLOUGH, father of the above, aged 28 years, 6 months and 26 days. He had a short notice of his death. While engaged in coupling cars at Cambria Iron Works, the bumpers being out of order, he was severely pressed at the lower part of the body. At first he did not think to get well to prepare for eternity, but finding he must depart, he called for a preacher. One person thought to send for one who would baptize in the house, because he was so weak. His answer was: "Parents often cause their children to put off the Lord too long." He then requested to have Elder Stutzman sent for, whom he requested to baptize him. Accordingly he was carried to Stony Creek, where his wish was satisfied in the presence of many witnesses. He then said he would rather die than recover for then he would [illegible] He lived a short time after. His remains were consigned to their last resting place in Elder C. Lehman's burying-ground. He leaves a sorrowing widow and many relatives to mourn their loss. Funeral services from John 5, by Elder A. Stutzman, and others.

Also, December 25, 1868, in Shade branch, Somerset county, Pa., our beloved brother (English) DANIEL BLACKLEY, aged 72 years, 1 month, and some days. He bore his sickness in great patience. He was a consistent member for many years, and a faithful deacon a great part of the time, but his seat is now vacant. Dear reader reflect that mine and yours may soon be vacant too. Then let us all live as if we were on the verge of our departure to the judgment seat. His remains were buried at the Brethren's big meeting-house. He leaves an aged sister, nine children, and many grand-children to mourn their loss. But we need not sorrow as those who have no hope. Funeral services from Rev. 13 : 14, by the brethren, to an unusual large congregation. JACOB HOLSOPPLE.

Visitor please copy.

In the Hudson branch, McLean county, Ill., January 12, AMANDA JANE, daughter of brother Moses Y., and sister Sally SNAVELY: aged 1 year, 8 months and 28 days. Funeral services by brother Lyons and J. Michles, from Rev. 14 : 13. Disease, Lung Fever.

Parents, remember that your little jewel has only gone to mingle with the many that deck "our Savior's coronet." If faithful, you shall meet her in that home, where you can bask in the sunshine of God's presence. MELISSA FORNEY.

In the Woodstock branch, Shenandoah Co., Va., Jan. 8th, sister ANN, wife of brother Joseph SMUCKER, aged 50 years, 4 months and 19 days.

She suffered over three years, and for the last twelve months was entirely helpless.—She bore her affliction with christian fortitude. We hope she has gone to join the happy saints in the paradise of God. She was consigned to her last resting place on the 10th, in the presence of a large concourse of people. She leaves a husband and four children, all members of the church. Funeral services by Eld. George Shaver, from 2nd Thes. 1 : 6, 7, 8.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

VOLUME V. TYRONE, PA. TUESDAY, FEB. 2, 1869. NUMBER 5.

God.

O Thou! eternal one! whose presence bright
All space doth occupy, all motion guide,—
Unchanged through time's all-devastating flight,
Thou only God! there is no God beside!
Being above all beings! Mighty One!
Whom none can comprehend and none explore,
Who fill'st existence with thyself alone;
Embracing all, supporting, ruling o'er,—
Being whom we call God, and know no more!

In its sublime research, Philosophy
May measure out the ocean deep, may count
The sands or the sun's rays; but God! for thee
There is no weight nor measure; none can mount
Up to thy mysteries; Reason's brightest spark,
Though kindled by thy light, in vain would try
To trace thy counsels, infinite and dark;
And thought is lost ere thought can soar so high,
Even like past moments in Eternity.

Thou from primeval nothingness didst call
First chaos, then existence: Lord, on thee
Eternity had its foundation; all
Spring forth from thee,—of light, joy, harmony,
Sole origin: all life, all beauty, thine.
Thy word created all, and doth create;
Thy splendor fills all space with rays divine.
Thou art, and wert, and shalt be, glorious, great,
Life-giving, life-sustaining Potentate!
Thy chains the unbounded universe surround,
Upheld by thee, by thee inspired with breath:
Thou the beginning with the end hast bound,
And beautifully mingled life and death!
As sparks mount upward from the fiery blaze,
So suns are born, so worlds spring forth from thee;
And as the spangles in the sunny rays
Shine round the silver snow, the pageantry
Of heaven's bright army glitters in thy praise.

A million torches, lighted by thy hand,
Wander unwearied through the blue abyss;
They own thy power, accomplish thy command,
All gay with life, all eloquent with bliss.
What shall we call them? Piles of crystal light?
A glorious company of golden streams?
Lamps of celestial ether burning bright?
Suns lighting systems with their joyous beams?
But thou to these art as the noon to night.

Yes! as a drop of water in the sea,
All this magnificence in thee is lost;
What are ten thousand worlds compared to thee?
And what am I, then?—Heaven's unnumbered host,
Though multiplied by myriads, and arrayed
In all the glory of sublimest thought,
Is but an atom in the balance, weighed Against thy greatness,—is a cipher brought Against infinity! O, what am I, then?—Naught.

Naught! But the effluence of thy light divine,
Pervading worlds, hath reached my bosom too;
Yes, in my spirit doth thy spirit shine,
As shines a sunbeam in a drop of dew.
Naught!—but I live, and on hope's pinions fly
Eager toward thy presence; for in thee
I live, and breathe, and dwell; aspiring high,
Even to the throne of thy divinity.
I am, O God, and surely Thou must be!

Thou art! directing, guiding all. Thou art!
Direct my understanding, then, thee;
Control my spirit, guide my wandering heart:
Though but an atom 'mid immensity,
Still I am something fashioned by thy hand!
I hold a middle rank 'twixt heaven and earth.
On the last verge of mortal being stand,
Close to the realms where angels have their birth,
Just on the boundary of the spirit land.

The chain of being is complete in me;
In me is matter's last gradation lost;
And the next step is spirit,—Deity!
I can command the lightning, and am dust!
A monarch, and a slave! a worm, a god!
Whence came I here, and how? so marvellously
Constructed and conceived! Unknown?—This clod
Lives surely through some higher energy!
For from itself alone it could not be!

Creator, yes! thy wisdom and thy word
Created me! thou source of life and good!
Thou spirit of my spirit, and my Lord!
Thy light, thy love, in their bright plenitude,
Filled me with an immortal soul, to spring
O'er the abyss of death, and bade it wear
The garments of eternal day, and wing
Its heavenly flight beyond this little sphere,
Even to its Source—to thee—its Author, there.

O thoughts ineffable! O visions blest!
Though worthless our conceptions all of thee,
Yet shall thy shadowed image fill our breast,
And waft its homage to thy Deity.
God! thus alone my lowly thoughts can soar;
Thus seek thy presence, Being wise and good!
'Midst thy vast works admire, obey, adore.

God's Will and the Heart of Man.

"Unto the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled. They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate." Tit. 1 · 15, 16.

The holy apostle while addressing his son Titus, relative to those characters whom, notwithstanding their loud profession, he classes among the impure and disobedient, whether he referred to those who should exist in later times or not, has drawn a vivid picture of the majority of christian professors of this late age of the world.—Those who read the above quotation with a view of acquiring information therefrom, if they are in possession of a judgment equal to that of the common school-boy, will naturally learn that there is work for the Christian; and that a neglect on their part of performing that work will rob them of their title to an inheritance of a home in the regions of immortal glory by disrobing them of their christian name and classing them among the abominable and disobedient. Indeed we think that when they fail to see these things, after carefully perusing the word of God, it is because "unto them nothing is pure; but even the mind and the conscience is defiled.

How many men and women there are in the world who say that we must know by experience that we are in possession of the spirit of Christ and that this experience consists in a feeling of happiness in the heart! This doctrine seems to be of the same character of that which the serpent preached to the mother of all the world, and is destined to produce a fall much more dreadful than the fall in Eden. That we must know by experience whether we are in possession of the spirit of Christ or not, is as true as the fact that partaking of the forbidden fruit would enable our mother Eve to discern the difference between good and evil; but that this experience consists in a feeling of happiness in the heart, unless produced by a sense of obedience to Christ and his apostles, in conjunction with a sense of an upright walk and conversation with our fellow-men, is an error. Solomon the wisest man that ever lived has truly said: "He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool."—We believe that the experience by which we know that we are christians consists in knowing how to obey Christ and his apostles, and act toward each other and the world in a just manner as christians should do. When we possess this kind of faith and it bursts forth into a living faith which will grow stronger and stronger as we advance in life, we will be just such beings as our Father in Heaven desires us to be.

Feetwashing.

In the first two numbers of the Companion present Vol. I read a "conversation" on feetwashing which I have no doubt, those of like mind consider incontrovertible; most especially because it came from the pen of one of the leading Bishops in the Church. But after all the ambiguous explanations on feet-washing that I have yet read, there is nothing so plain as the words of our Savior, when he says "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." But I will admit that the aforesaid Conversation presents new ideas, even such as were strange to us before. Though I have frequently read in the Companion about a Mystical Body, yet I do not recollect of seeing such words in the New Testament.

By that conversation the author tries to make it appear that because the two hands of Christ were engaged in washing and wiping his disciples feet, there should be two members of the Church engaged in washing and wiping the saints feet. We will readily admit to that, if the author will prove to us that our Savior washed his disciples feet with one hand, and wiped them with the other hand. But if he washed feet with both hands and wiped them with both hands, then, according to his own argument, there should be two members of the church engaged in washing, and two in wiping the saints feet. And consequently it would require four brethren to wash and wipe one brother's feet.—Whereas, according to the example of Christ, it will require only one brother to wash and wipe another's feet. But the brethren tell us that feet-washing and baptism are closely connected, because when Peter wanted not only his feet: but his hands and his head washed, "Jesus saith to him, He that is washed needeth not save to wash [illegible]." Now, if washing and baptism are so closely connected, why do some of the brethren go hundreds of miles and hold debates, defending the manner of performing baptism to the very letter which Christ has nowhere told us so plainly how to baptise, as he has how to wash and wipe feet? But when they come to feet-washing and wiping they will have arbitrary explanations as in the foregoing Conversation. Our Lord could only have given his disciples command, saying. Ye shall wash and wipe each others feet. And under such circumstances almost any way of washing and wiping each others feet would be admissible. But to avoid all misunderstanding, he gave them an example showing them how he wished them to perform, telling them, they should do to each other as he had done to them. Can any thing be plainer?

I do not see how any person can still persistingly contend that the way the brethren practice, is according to the command and example of Christ. And yet if the Lord is satisfied with the brethren's practice, I am too; but I do believe "if ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." Ever since the change has been made, from the single to the double mode, there have always been some members not well satisfied with the change, and many even now would like to reform the single mode; but it appears the old Bishops take the responsibility upon themselves, which is all the time causing dissatisfaction among the members. If they would give way that each branch of the church might practice as a majority of its members would see proper, the dissatisfaction would soon be removed. By allowing a change, would not be making a disturbance; as some say it would be ceasing the disturbance. I have not written for controversy, but because I love to obey the commandments of God.

No Sickness There.

Disease of every form and shade is the offspring of sin. Paul says: "By sin came death." So, also, by sin came infirmity, weakness, disease, pain. As a consequence, pain is the fruit of sin. And, oh! what streams of sufferings flow out from this one fountain—sickness! Dear [illegible] and behold, in one view, and [illegible] mountain infirmaries, and chambers of affliction, like Moses on Mt. Nebo, beheld the glorious land of Canaan; and could you hear the sighs, the groans, and the deep hollow wails of sorrow there, your heart would sicken, your head would become faint, and you would ardently long to be gone! Would you not? Look at it! What is this world? What is it as to its sorrows? A big almshouse, in which millions of Adam's race are lodged, pale, sickly, dying, afflicted with a thousand diseases, an infirmary full of suffering mortals. Who, day and night, send out their sad, mournful cries of sorrow all around! Affliction! Where is it? Like the spider, it is everywhere. It meets every man. It finds its way into every house. It visits the king's royal court, as well as the peasant's lowly cabin.—It fastens its teeth in the flesh of every inhabitor of earth. It throws its ensnaring cord around every mortal. Its death chains clank around every neck. It respects no man, no age, no sex, no tribe, no nation, no circumstances. See! See! the wasting consumption! See.

> That sad, yet bright sparkling eye,
> How fast fading, like a twilight sky!
> See on those cheeks the deep'ning red
> That [illegible]

Hear that deep sigh, he would express
Of dying nature's feebleness!
See that pale corpse—all gone its charms!
'Tis death with his bride in his arms!

See! the burning inflammation, the raging fever, the suffocating asthma, the shivering ague, with all their ills and woes and pains, find their way into every home, and cast a deep, dark mantle of gloom o'er all our world! Surely there is "a vale of tears" a world of sorrow of sickness, of pain, of cryings, of death! No wonder that the Christian desires to be gone! No wonder that he longs for a better clime! No wonder that he is oft weary of life, and seeks some peaceful bower, where sickness and sorrow, pain and death, are felt and feared no more! No wonder that he dwells here in solitude and sadness.

> "Like a lonely bird,
> That sadly sings,
> Brooding upon its nest, unheard
> With folded wings!"

But is there no better world? Is there no shelter from sickness, pain and death? Is there no healthful habitation? Yes, in heaven! There sickness is unknown. There pain is unrealized. [illegible] sorrow is unfelt. There death is a stranger.

> "[illegible]
> Shall mourn his power no more.
> There, clothed in spotless purity,
> Redeeming love adore."

Yes. Heaven is a healthy habitation. Afflictions never come there. There pains distress no more. There tears never flow from weeping eyes, nor sighs heave from sorrowing hearts.—There none are sick. There none are sorrowing. There none are sighing. There none are dying.

Dear reader, have you a desire for this healthful clime? Have you a fitness for it? Do you long to breathe its pure air, to drink its freshing waters, to live its endless life? With one of old, do you oft cry out in the earnestness of your soul, "Oh that I had wings like a dove, for then could I fly away, and be at rest!"—Lutheran Observer.

In the depths of the sea the waters are still, the heaviest grief is that borne in silence; the deepest love flows through the eye and touch; the purest joy is unspeakable; the most impressive preacher at a funeral is the silent one whose lips are cold.

For the Companion.

On Matthew 11:11.

"Among them that are born of women there has not arisen a greater than John the Baptist, nevertheless I say unto you that he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he."

This expression of the Son of God has been the cause of as much speculation, and diversity of opinion probably as any one expression found in the volume of inspiration. And as I, in common with others, have formed an opinion and constructed a theory upon the subject, I hereby purpose to give them publicity.

I have studied this subject very closely of late, from the fact that I was likely to get into a debate (and probably will yet) upon an issue therein contained. The issue to which I allude does not affect us, as a Church, in the least, because we have nothing to lose either way, but it completely saps the foundation of the Baptist Church, which claims John the Baptist as its founder.

I was very much pleased to find an article in the Companion, over the signature of brother Moomaw, in asking the forbearance of the brethren while he was discussing the proposition of gradation in the different kingdoms of Nature, from the fact that I knew that the idea of successive gradation was as old as the world itself.

This system of gradation begins with the smallest atom of inanimate matter, and advances upwards in the scale of perfection, until it arrives at the highest order of intelligences, even to the great "I AM." But what system of gradation, and the result to which he attained, and the conclusion to which he arrived. And I would here remark that, with all due deference to the opinion of brother Moomaw, and also to all brethren who may entertain a like opinion, that I beg leave to differ upon this proposition.

And I do assure you, dear brethren, that I am not writing this article for the purpose of controversy or criticism, but alone for the purpose of eliciting truth and dissipating error.

I, for one, hold the doctrine that the best way to arrive at the truth of any proposition, is by a fair and impartial discussion and examination of the same in a Christian and brotherly manner.

Now I want to examine this question of Gradation for a few moments. I remark, first, that we find a complete system in the arrangement, beginning with the smallest atom of inanimate matter, up to the highest order of intelligences. For example: we will begin with the vegetable kingdom; we behold the most imperfectly formed vegetable substance, as certain species of plants and mosses which adhere to the rocks, logs, &c., which approximate very nearly to earth, and which differ very little from it. But we pursue the scale in its ascending mode, until we arrive at the tallest oaks, and giants of the forest. And yet we find that the bulk, or size has nothing to do with the approximation toward the connecting link which binds them to the next order above them in the economy of God's creation. These are all objects without animal life. But we turn our attention to the smaller objects again, and we discover a curious little creature known in Natural History as "the Walking Leaf." This curious little creature, although possessing animal life, can scarcely be distinguished from the vegetable matter, and yet it is one grade higher in the scale of perfection; and hence we believe it to be the connecting link between the vegetable and the animal kingdoms.

We have now advanced one step, and have got into the scale of insects, which is the most imperfectly formed grade in the animal kingdom. And yet, this is a part of that kingdom, it being sub-divided into a great many divisions, and which we will not have time to notice in detail.

I must here ask the indulgence of the reader while I follow this subject of gradation still farther, because I am conscious that I cannot do anything like justice to the proposition without pursuing this course. And although perhaps it will make this article rather lengthy and irksome, yet I am satisfied that it is absolutely necessary to a full explanation of the subject. I shall therefore be compelled to follow this law of gradation through its various phases.

In the next place then, we will notice that class of animal and vegetable matter which subsist entirely in the water. We find certain species of vegetation which live and flourish in this element exclusively, [illegible] imperfectly formed vegetable substance, up to the most imperfect of that possessing animal life, and we find the sponge as the connecting link between them, and which is quite small and insignificant when compared with the great monsters of the deep, such as the whale, the shark, the porpoise, the dolphin, &c. The sponge then, the smallest and most insignificant of them all, seems to be the connecting link between the two kingdoms. But there are also another species of animals, called amphibious, which subsist both in air and water, the larger of which are the hippopotamus, the walrus, the seal, the sea serpent, &c., all of which are vast and mighty in their proportions. But here again we are disappointed while looking amongst the mighty, and the great, and the most perfectly developed for the connecting link, until we turn our attention down to the most insignificant of them all,—to the smallest atom of a Tadpole.

We now come to examine that class of animals which exist entirely in air, and which cannot subsist in the water. This then brings us to an examination of the feathery tribe—and again, as heretofore, we look in vain for the connecting link amongst the larger and most perfectly developed of this class, even the fabled Roe of "Sinbad, the sailor," of the Isle of Bagdad, which was so ponderous in its dimensions that its eggs were several yards in circumference. Also the mighty ostrich, which is able to carry a man upon its back with perfect ease, or also the swan, the vulture, the stork, the eagle, the crane; until at last we trace down the scale till we come to the most imperfectly developed, and most insignificant of them all, "the flying fish," which seems to be the connecting link in this direction. But in tracing this class of animals in the direction of the quadruped species, we begin with the huge Mastodon, or Mammoth which is the largest animal of the quadruped species known in Natural History, and following the line downwards we find the elephant, the camel, the lion, &c., which are all perfect monsters of this species of animals; but here again we are doomed to disappointment while looking amongst the tall and the great, and the most perfectly developed, for that connecting link which connects between them and the feathery tribe,—but when we come to look among the most insignificant and the most imperfectly developed of them all, we discover the BAT which we at once recognize as that link for which we are seeking.

But now we begin to search for that link which connects this species of animals, (viz. the quadrupeds) to our own species; that connects the Brute creation with that of Mankind.

Again we would search in vain amongst the tall and the mighty, monsters of the forest, and are compelled to come down to one of comparative insignificance so far as proportions are concerned—"the orang outang" —which animal approximates very closely to our species, and hence we believe it to form the connecting link between them.

We have now considered nearly all of the most important links which connect between the creatures of God. We come now to consider the last, but not the least of the terrestrial creatures, and to try if we can find the link which connects them with the Heavenly, or Divine.

The mere statement of this proposition, we think, will at once suggest to every reflecting mind, upon a moment's consideration, the certain result of our investigation of this part of the subject.

We would think it almost an unnecessary waste of time to enter upon a very elaborate discussion of this part of the subject, were it not for the fact, that according to what brother Moomaw has written, I am satisfied that he, at least, entertains contrary views upon this subject. And as I have before remarked in this article, I am not writing for criticism, but for the sole purpose of eliciting truth, and dissipating error.

In considering the subject under consideration at present, we shall treat it as we have all the others, and therefore shall begin at the highest order, or at the very fountain head, the great source of all things, or at the great "I AM," himself.

It is a conceded fact by all intelligent human beings that Jehovah or God, is the very embodiment of perfection itself, and consequently stands at the very head of the highest order of intelligences. Next in order in the descending scale, we find Lucifer, who was called the "son of the morning" which signifies light, and who from the superior excellency of his position was second only to the Most High. Next in order we find Gabriel who stands before the throne of God continually, and seems to be his special messenger, and who was sent to our earth on two of the most important occasions that the world has ever witnessed, viz. to announce the birth of "John, the Baptist," and of "Jesus Christ."

But time fails me to follow this subject farther. Suffice it to say, that among all those tall angels which vie with each other around the throne of God, we fail to find that connecting link which connects Divinity with Humanity. But when we, as in the preceding cases, begin to look among the lowest, and most insignificant, so far as appearances are concerned, we discover this connecting link, not in the person of John the Baptist, but in the lowly Babe of Bethlehem in Judea. Here we see Jesus Christ who was made of a woman, made under the law, and "Who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor, that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man." Hence we see that Jesus was made a little lower than those celestial beings, but a little higher than man. For the Apostle Paul says "that He hath given Him to be the Head over all things, unto the Church, which is His Body." For He hath given Him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that He might reconcile us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened in the Spirit, by which also He went and preached to the spirits in prison, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah while the ark was preparing, wherein whereunto baptism doth also now save us, &c. &c.

We have shown conclusively we think that John the Baptist nor any of the angelic choir, neither any of the celestial beings which surround the throne of Jehovah, form the connecting link between God himself, as the head, and also all those glorified beings which compose the Kingdom of Heaven, or of ultimate glory, and the Kingdom of this world. But that link is certainly and truly found in the Person of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, the lowly Babe of Bethlehem.

In the next place I shall endeavor to show who John the Baptist really was, in doing which, I think that the reason of the language of the Savior which stands at the head of this article, and which is the subject of the present treatise, will appear at once obvious and perfectly clear to the mind of the most casual observer.

In the last chapter of the book or prophecy of Malachi, we find the following remarkable announcement from Jehovah himself, speaking through the medium of the prophet Malachi; "Behold I will send you Elijah, the Prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord."

Now I wish the reader to note particularly the language of "the Lord" by the prophet in the above declaration that he makes use of the definite article "the." The use of articles according to the genius of our language, is to limit nouns in their signification. There are two articles in the English language—A or An, and

The—A or An, limits the noun to one of a kind, but to no particular one. 'The' points out a particular or definite object. Here then we have "the Lord" positively declaring by the mouth of the prophet Malachi that he would send to his people Elijah the Prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord.—Now let me here ask, has this promise of God been fulfilled? Or is it yet in the future? If it has been fulfilled, when, and where, and how was it done?—These questions are precisely what we are now considering, and what we are endeavoring to answer, and in answering which, I think, we will be able to see how "John the Baptist" is less than the least in the Kingdom of Heaven.

I must again call your attention to the definite article The, which occupies a very conspicuous place in the solution of this problem. Now, if in the foregoing declaration of Jehovah, He had said, behold I will send you Elijah, a Prophet, making use of the indefinite article, then the people would have understood, that there would arise in future, a prophet whose name should be called Elijah; but inasmuch as He makes use of the definite article, The, they of course understand the prediction to have reference to a particular person. Hence their minds at once revert back to the old prophet Elijah who had once lived upon the earth, and who had never died, but had been taken up from the earth in a chariot of fire. Therefore, we see the people from the time of this declaration anxiously looking for the return of the prophet Elijah to the earth. We learn this fact from several circumstances. The Jews sent to ask John who he was; whether he was Elijah—probably it will be necessary at this point to explain to any one who may not already know the fact that the name Elias in the New Testament, is the same as that of Elijah in the old; so also with regard to the names Esaias, and Isaiah; Jonas, and Jonah; Noe, and Noah; so that whenever we find the name Elias in the New Testament we may properly read it Elijah. With this explanation we will therefore proceed with the subject. I had remarked that the people were expecting Elijah to return to the earth—another proof of this we gather from the circumstances of the transfiguration of our Savior upon the Mount, when there appeared unto him Moses and Elijah. The disciples asked him on that occasion, "why the scribes say that Elijah should first come;" and again at the crucifixion when the Savior cried out, "Eloi, Eloi," they say, "let alone, let alone, let us see whether Elijah will come to take him down." From all these circumstances we gather the idea, that the people were confidently expecting the return of Elijah to the earth. Now upon what had they based such a conclusion? Most assuredly upon the positive declaration of God Himself, that He would send them Elijah the prophet. And they had confidence in the veracity of Him who could not lie, and understood the import of words, and saw that He has made use of the definite article the, which specified a particular personage, and not a vague or ambiguous term which might mean any one of the many prophets which have lived, or might hereafter live in the world. This undoubtedly had forced convictions upon their minds that Elijah should again visit the earth. There are some things in the economy of heaven which are entirely mysterious and inexplacable to us; and this subject, I hold to be one of those things. We cannot comprehend how God was manifest in the flesh: how it was possible for Him to come down from heaven and be born of a woman; yet we know such was really the case. Neither can we comprehend how Elijah the prophet could be born of Elizabeth and be here in the person of John the Baptist; yet we find by an examination of the scriptures that such was the case. The birth of John was of itself very extraordinary; and he was also a very extraordinary being, even from his conception. Being "filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb, a circumstance which we find recorded in the birth of no other being that ever lived upon this earth, save Jesus only. This circumstance taken in connection with many others in the character of John the Baptist, forces the conviction upon my mind at least, that John the Baptist, and Elijah the prophet were identical. But as this article is growing rather long for one issue of the Companion, I shall leave off at this point for the present; but will resume the subject again in the future, and shall endeavor in the sequel to prove by scripture all that has been asserted in this treatise.

Life.

Is it stationary? Is it substantial? Is it abiding, and at our command and control? Can we live as long as we please, and add month and years to human life? Can we call to-morrow or next year ours; or can we tell what a day will bring forth? Life is a "vapor that appeareth for a little time and then vanishes away."—What is there in a vapor? Is there strength, riches, wisdom, or power in a vapor? Is there anything tangible in a vapor? It is certainly fleeting, and we should not risk much in such an uncertain thing.

"As for man, his days are as grass; as the flower of the field, so he flourisheth." A wise man will not place all his dependence in grass, and gaze his all away at a flower which so easily fades; but look at the circumstances and dangers by which his life is surrounded. Behold the rapid motion, with the winds and waves beating upon us! Is it not astonishing that we live? With many, human life has a mournful story to relate. "Man that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble." Grace and Bible happiness has but little to do with the lives of many. Sad it is be that we shall live without evangelical repentance and divine forgiveness, and die and lose our souls! This thought should make us up and bring us to candid reflection.—A preparation and meetness are requisite to happiness on earth and a home in heaven. Human life is short. "The days of our years are threescore years and ten, and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow, for it is soon cut off, and fly away." Life is compared to a day, a watch in the night; and if so, we should not idle a moment away but "redeem the time," by giving all diligence to make our calling sure. How much depends on a moment! In a moment we may be called away; and if unprepared, that moment would be rendered more valuable that the whole earth.—Religious Telescope.

The Death place of Pontius Pilate.

Long Prayers and Repetitions of Words.

Kind brethren, this is a subject that I have been made to reflect upon; and the more I view the subject, the more wrong I see in it, which has caused me to drop a few lines for the Companion. Long prayers, and repetitions, should be avoided; and why is it that the brethren, do not divest themselves of this habit so contradictory to the Gospel? The way that many conduct, or deliver their prayers, is, in our opinion, quite contrary to that which Christ taught his disciples.

We frequently hear brethren making use of many unnecessary words: repeet the same or nearly the same over different times; and at the same time all they have petitioned for might have been with half the words.

Christ said unto his disciples: "But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathens do; for they think they that shall be heard for their much speaking; after this manner, therefore, pray ye: Our Father, which art in heaven. &c." Read Matth. 6: 7—13. Now I can tell you, that I have taken the pains to note down some of the words that seem to be repeated the most, and I have gotten the number of 20 to 28 times in one prayer [illegible] "Our Heavenly Father." Now brethren, I ask you to take up your papers, and write the words, "O Lord our Heavenly Father," 28 times, and see what a catalogue of repetitions you have. I think, one or two times calling these words would be sufficient for all purposes. Now we will leave the subject for your own consideration.

E. G. Zug's Query.

I will offer a few thoughts on the subject of brother Z.'s query. The passage cited to is one that has caused much criticism among the learned. Some claiming the Savior had allusion to a low gate through which footmen passed in and out the city of Jerusalem, called the "Needle's eye," and through which it was difficult for a camel to pass,—and could not pass at all when loaded or burdened with anything. Others claim the term "camel" should be rendered "cable"—a large rope. These ideas are unreliable conjectures, and we think the text, just as it reads in our version, is sufficiently plain and authentic, meaning just what it says. It is a figurative term, doubtless of frequent use by the ancients; as an instance, we are informed by reliable testimony that in the Jewish Talmud occurs the following passage: "Rabbi Shesheth answered Rabbi Amram, who had advanced an absurdity. Perhaps thou art one of the Pambidithians, who can make an elephant pass through the eye of a needle," that is, "speak things impossible." The Mahommedan Bible, it is said, has the following: "The impious, who in his arrogancy shall accuse our doctrine of falsity, shall find the gates of heaven shut; nor shall he enter there till a camel shall pass through the eye of a needle. It is thus we shall recompense the wicked." This will suffice to show it was a familiar term in use among the Oriental nations, and well suited to make an impression on the minds of the disciples as touching the state of all souls as that one who inquired what he should do to inherit eternal life. The Savior well knows his heart, and when fully tested, he was found wanting.—The love of his riches is stronger than the love to obey him whom he called Master. So it is with every one that loves the riches of this world's goods more than the commands of God. Mary, in speaking of the goodness of God, declares: "the rich he hath sent empty away." Luke 1:53. The Savior says, "woe unto you that are rich." Luke 6: 24. We think the scriptures teach it is impossible for the rich to enter into eternal life; that is those who have their supreme affections centered on this world's wealth, like the rich man who said to his soul: "Take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry." God said unto him: "Thou fool — [illegible] treasure for himself and is not rich toward God." Luke 12: 21.

He who is willing to suffer the loss of all things, though it be millions of worldly wealth, rather than disobey the commands of God, is not a "rich man." He buys as though he "possessed not," using the world as not abusing it. Such a man possesses a soul rich toward God. Nothing is impossible with God and though it be hard for the rich to enter the kingdom, the grace of God may so mollify the sinful affections of the avaricious heart as to enable them to lay up "treasures in heaven." Or he can give to their riches "wings" that they may pass away as a vapor, and thus awake them to the uncertainty of riches, and thereby create a thirst for eternal wealth. "With God all things are possible."

The Danger of Evil Habits.

He who follows the downward course of those who have made shipwreck of themselves, will find in their course a fearful warning against the very beginnings of evil. It is not the immediate injury that may result from one act of disobedience which constitutes its criminality and its danger. But one such act brings on other acts, and thus perpetuates the career of transgression and of woe. Evil habits produce a moral certainty of continued wrong doing. He who yields once to anger, not only destroys his peace at the moment, but helps to form a hot temper which may render his whole life miserable. Here then is our danger. We cannot go to a certain point in sin, and then stop. We lose our self control, and find when it is perhaps too late, that we have awakened a power that it is most difficult to resist. Hence it is that so few men become religious in middle life, and fewer still in old age.—Their habits are too strongly fixed. They cannot change their way of thinking and feeling. Their unchecked impulses have settled into habits, and their habits have hardened by pride.

What folly and madness is it then to postpone repentance to a future year, or to the bed of death. We do not say that a change of character, even at the last hour is impossible. But certainly it is a thing not to be expected. The chances are almost beyond computation against it. We might as well hope to make that wrinkled, skinny hand turn again and become as the flesh of a little child, as to bring to the breast of an old hardened sinner, the sensibility of youth.

It will be asked if we are thus completely under the control of habit, where is human responsibility? We cannot be blamed for doing wrong, if we have no power to do right.

Answer—We have power. We can resist evil. We can form good habits at first, and even when we have contracted bad ones, we may change them. It would be preaching the language of despair to say that evil habits cannot be broken. There is a power in God's grace, and in earnest repentance and prayer, even to conquer nature. The law of habit does not discourage a wicked man at reformation. It only shows him the difficulties in his way, and that he has a long and toilsome work before him. His power to change his nature is only indirect and gradual. He must fight long, and often, when he thought his enemy dead he will find it revive. He can break off at once deliberate sins. He can turn his eyes in another direction. He can begin to travel another road. But he cannot at once eradicate old tastes. He cannot prevent their coming back, at times, with terrible violence. A drunkard may break his bottle, and swear never to touch another drop. And he may keep his oath. But he cannot prevent hankering after the fiery stimulant And he will at times almost have to chain himself, to prevent giving way to the burning thirst. It will be years before his reformation will be complete.

So, whatever bad habit a man desires to overcome, he has a deadly struggle before him; and the more inveterate the habit has become the greater the necessity for vigilance and activity. Does a man start with horror to find that he is going to destruction? Let his own shriek of despair awaken him to a last effort for his salvation. Could we speak to a drunkard who is almost over the precipice, we would implore him to stop, to check his swift career, and put forth one more struggle for life. His only safety is in immediate repentance. Let him break off his sins at once, and turn to the Lord No matter how far gone he may be, if he be truly penitent, there is hope for him, for it shows that all sensibility is not gone from his bosom. As soon as the tears begin to flow, the heart is melted, and often from that moment a new life begins.

But he will have need of all the energy and courage of which he is master, not to fall back into his old ways. Such a victory is not achieved without the most heroic resistance. But he must remember that it is a struggle for life, and let this make him determined. He must trample down his imperious passion. But then let him not trust alone to his own courage and resolution, but fly to God for protection. When the storm of passion bursts upon him, let him hide under the shadow of His wings until it be over-past.

To those then who are bound in the chains of vicious habit, and who struggle to be free, the word of the Gospel is, there is hope for you, but it is only by the great effort on your part, and by the assistance of heaven. The permanence of any reformation will depend, not only on old habits being broken up, but on their being supplanted by new habits, new principles, and new associations. We have little faith, for instance, in the reformation of a drunkard, unless he becomes a religious man. Let him seek the support of religion. Let him turn his footsteps to the house of God. Let him strengthen himself by the society of the good, cultivating associations of purity. Let him have done with that miserable cant about the power of his own will, and his ability to stand alone. Let him confess that he is as weak as a child, and pray to God to support him. Let him lean on the Almighty arm, and then he may stand.

The Voyage of Life.

Life bears us on like the stream of a mighty river. Our boat first glides down the mighty channel, through the playful murmurings of the little brook, and the windings of its grassy borders. The trees shed their blossoms over our young heads; the flowers seem to offer themselves to the young hands; we are happy in hope, and grasp eagerly at the beauties around us; but the stream hurries on and still our hands are empty. Our course, in youth and manhood, is along a deeper and wider flood, among objects more striking and magnificent.—We are animated at the moving pictures and enjoyment and industry all around us; we are excited at some short-lived disappointment. The stream bears us on, and our joys and our griefs are alike behind us. We may be shipwrecked, but we cannot be delayed; whether rough or smooth the river hastens on till the roar of the ocean is in our ears, and the tossing of the waves is beneath our feet, and the floods are lifted up around us, and we take our leave of earth and its inhabitants.—Heber.

Passing Onward.

BY D. B. MENTZER.

Borne on the tide of time, we glide
Toward the goal of life;
Soon, ah! soon, but beyond the tide,
We'll cease the Christian strife.

All who the Savior's yoke have tak'n
And have the strife begun,—
They shall by error's winds be shak'n
Until their work is done.

Beset we are with countless snares,
And foes in ambush lie;
And these in guise of earthly cares,
May blast the blissful sigh.

Thro' many toils and trials here
We press our onward way;
Oh may we walk without a fear,
Nor ever court dismay.

Fast fleeting are the years of time—
Life seems but one short day:
Then may we strive to make sublime
Our years of earthly stay.

For the Companion.

A Lesson for Young Readers.

My dear young friends: This is the first time that I address you.—It is my desire to do you good, and to give you such advice as will aid you in becoming moral in your habits, and useful when you grow up to be men and women in society.—How many lessons of this character I shall be able to give you, I know not. For the present, I shall say something on the subject of RESPECT. You know how happy you feel when others respect you, and how disheartened when they disrespect you. When you respect others, you expect them to respect you; but when you meet persons, as we often do, and you offer your manners of respect to them, and they pass as though they did not notice you, do you not feel somewhat strange? This you would call disrespect, would you not? And if you should do the same to those who would respect you, then you would disrespect them. You see then how good and how pleasant it is for young people to respect each other, in this way, and in other ways of which we will try to think. I trust my language will be so plain and simple that all who have learned to read, can understand.

There lived a very good man about 900 years before our Savior came into the world, or more than 2700 years ago. His name you would like to know. It was Elisha. If you take your Bible and turn to the second chapter of second Kings, you can read a part of his biography or history. He was the companion of Elijah. They were good men.—They loved the Lord and did what the Lord commanded them. So we should do. They loved each other. So we ought. Elijah desired to go to a place named Bethel, and wished Elisha to stay at a certain place; but he would not, for he said: "As the Lord liveth, and as the soul liveth, I will not leave thee." So they went to Bethel. Then Elijah desired him to stay at Bethel; but he said the same words. And so you will read very interesting accounts about Elisha. But after they were separated, Elisha returned toward Bethel. As he was traveling along his way, he passed a city, and many children came out of the city and mocked Elisha, and said: "Go up, thou baldhead; go up, thou baldhead." Now this, you will say, was very disrespectful. To mock or taunt an old man is the worst kind of disrespect. These children must have been very ill brought up. They were, doubtless, very ignorant and wicked. God is highly displeased with them that disrespect his servants. The fate of them that mock the good is often very dreadful.—You will read that the fate of those wicked children who mocked Elisha, was very sad indeed.

We should respect others. The child, the lad, the man, the aged, all deserve to be respected. Show me the boy or the girl that quarrels with such as are younger than themselves; or refuses to obey father or mother, or those who have the care and keeping of them; or that will ridicule and speak rudely and coldly to the aged; and I will show you one who disrespects others. And yet there are many who do these things. We have known children to take their own time to do a certain errand or piece of work, which their parents intended to be done immediately.—Do you think this due respect to parents? We have seen persons of wealth amused at the poverty of the poor, or turn them from their hospitality. Was this respect? We have heard young persons tittering and talking in the house of worship.—Do you not think this very disrespectful to the place of worship, and to those who worship? Try, then, to respect others, and you will be respected in return.

We should respect ourselves. In this, we should not think more highly of ourselves than what we deserve, [illegible] But every one should think so much of himself as to be respectable in society, wise and moral in habits, and kind and friendly to every one.—This will lead you to love your schoolmates and associates in your youthful days, and to be benefactors of your fellow-beings in after life.—Let it be your aim in youth to act well your part in life. Experience has taught those of maturer years that there are often many temptations presented to persons in their youthful days. Guard then, if it be possible, against anything and everything that would hinder you from attaining to and leading a useful, noble, and respectable life.

D. B. M.

NEVER be worried by trifles. If a spider breaks his thread twenty times, twenty times will he mend it again. Make up your mind to do a thing, and you will do it. Fear not if troubles come upon you.—Keep up your spirits, though the day be a dark one.

Christian Family Companion.

Tyrone City, Pa., Feb. 2, 1869.

This and That.

We had scarcely expected to write editorial this week, having had in contemplation to accompany brother Graybill Myers on a mission to Philadelphia, Germantown, Green Tree, Indian Creek, &c., on yesterday. Temporary illness of several members of the family, however, forbade our absence from home at that time. We expect to follow to-night, and join him to-morrow or day after at Green Tree.

The heavy labors attending the closing of one volume and beginning of another having now about terminated, we expect to do some traveling and visiting. But as we have very little confidence in ourself as a speaker, and not necessary so, some the Brethren will appoint meetings, we do not like to go out alone; but with a good companion would venture almost anywhere. We do not think we lack in the "will," but in the performance we come short.

Although we may be absent from home much of our time, we shall leave force enough to attend to all business entrusted to our care. We shall be especially gratified if new subscribers will continue to arrive at such a rate as to meet the current expenses of the office during our absence. We can still furnish several hundred sets of back numbers of the present volume, and hope we shall not be obliged to lose them. If our friends all over the United States will make one more effort we shall reach the 3000 subscribers, and thus establish the enlarged paper.

We would also desire that unpaid accounts might be speedily settled, that we may be enabled to meet present indebtedness. A couple hundred dollars due on last year's work would just come in place to meet "first of April" bills for paper, books, &c.

Then, also, correspondence will be specially welcome, and very specially those who write with care, and a degree of accuracy. There are some of our brethren, and sisters too, who can scarcely be said to be discharging their duties toward us, not speaking of higher obligations. Up and a doing, Christian friends! Lose no opportunity of imparting a word of consolation to a "comrade in distress," or a spark of light to him that sits in darkness. We heartily wish we could go across unitedly against our common foe. Would that all our old correspondents might become animated with a zeal that would cause words to drop from their pens that would be "like apples of gold in pictures of silver,"—and which would prompt many others not yet heard from to give a helping hand. Let us see how well we can agree among ourselves, and how much kindness we can feel—not exhibit—toward one another. If we possess kindness, it will exhibit itself. Let this be a good year for us, and the Master's cause. Let us indeed be "living stones," in the spiritual house whereunto we hope to be built up.

Quite a number of complaints have arrived of some subscribers not receiving their papers, and of others not getting their papers at the right place. Now we trust all will have patience, and simply apprise us of such matters, and we will attend to them promptly. All who have subscribed for the year, and have not yet received any papers will get their back numbers of such as we know they have not been sent.

Book Notices.

The Christian Harp.—Published by Ruebush & Kieffer, Singer's Glen, Va. Price 35 cents per copy; $3.50 per dozen. Mail post paid to any address on receipt of price.

This valuable little work is specially adapted to the wants of children. It contains over a hundred pages of choice music set in character notes. We would not wish to discourage the round note system; but we believe the character note system to be better suited to the capacity of our youth.

Packard's Monthly.—The February number of this magazine for young men, is upon our table.—Among the contents are the following: How young men may succeed in life; the true aim and dependence of young women; Education as it should be, by Horace Greeley; Breathing a living soul into dead languages, by Elihu Burritt; and others, with the editorial department. Price 15 cents per copy; $1.00 per annum. Address: S. S. Packard, 937 Broadway, N. Y.

Phrenological Journal.—The Phrenological Journal for February contains sketches of Prof. Bache, late of the U. S. Coast Survey, Mrs. Lily N. Spencer, the artist, Wilkie Collins, Theodosia Burr Alstin, Rossini, Rothschild, with portraits; besides The Four Senses, a Psychological essay; Resurrection of the Body, a sermon; Influence of Intellectual Society; How a Man made a fortune by a Pin; Equality of Minds; Community of Interest; the Groups of Organs; Wintering in the South; the American Lion, and numerous other attractions. Price, 30 cents, or 3$ a year. Address, S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only

Announcements.

Notice of District Meeting.

The District Meeting for the Northern District of Indiana, will be held (God willing) on Thursday the 25th day of March next. The meeting will be held with the brethren in the Union Centre congregation, at the Eastern meeting-house, 7 miles south west of Goshen. And it is requested that every congregation in said District, should be fully represented.

Brethren coming on the cars from the West will be met at Goshen, at the arrival of the noon train; and those coming from the east will be met at the same place at the arrival of evening train on Wednesday the 24th of March, and conveyed into the neighborhood of the place of meeting

By order of the brethren.

JOHN ARNOLD.

Notice of Missouri and Kansas Meetings.

Please publish our District Council for Missouri and Kansas, to be held (the Lord willing) on the 16th day of April, 1859, at the Brethren's meeting house, near Plattsburg, Clinton Co., Mo. We extend a hearty invitation to the brethren generally, and to the laboring brethren especially, to be with us on that occasion, as we wish to hold a series of meetings during and after the council. Brethren from the East will leave the train at Turney's Station. Those from the West, at Osborn, Hannibal & St. Joe R. R. Those from South and South west, at Lathrop. Brethren should try to reach these points on the 15th, as there will be conveyance furnished at that time.

Brother J. H. Filmore and other ministering brethren were here and commenced a series of meetings Wednesday before the 3d Lord's day, and closed the following Wednesday, in January, with 4 additions. It is due brother Filmore to state that he did most of the preaching.

Our love to all the brethren.

By order.

J. STURGIS.

Brother James McBride, Hazel Dell, Ills., under date of Jan. 2nd, says: "Through the help and blessing of our Heavenly Father, I am once more able to hold the pen to write to you for the continuance of your welcome Christian Companion, of which I have been a busy reader ever since my wife has been taking it. And through the good advices and instructions, the good reading of the New Testament, the good preaching of the beloved brethren, and good advice from a religious wife, I was obliged to give up and pray to God for forgiveness of my sins, and repent of my evil deeds.—And I feel that I have gained that which he has promised to all that will call upon him with an honest heart and a willing mind. And I wish the prayers of all the dear brethren.

"We have quite a small flock here, but have a church organized, though only twelve members in this settlement.

"My wife and I made a visit to a few of our brethren and sisters, and took with us several copies of the Companion, with which to solicit subscribers. I send the names. There are two sisters in the church who wished to have the paper, but the men, who are not yet members of the church, objected for the reason that they are new beginners and have many things to get, so that they had not the money to spare. Now, brother, I have stood in the same place, and was always able to pay out money for a political paper, but that which was good was neglected. A good brother subscribed for our first paper to introduce it, my wife being a member at the time. Now if you will send a paper to these sisters for six months, I will agree to pay for it."

We will send the paper, and hope they will be benefitted by it. We also recommend this method of introducing the Companion, to other brethren. We have sent several copies free of charge to such as were not able to pay, and still do, but cannot supply more than our means will allow. When such as are in straitened circumstances, desire the paper but cannot pay for it immediately, we gladly take their promise of payment during the year.—Could not those who have means plenty and to spare, supply those who are destitute of religious reading? We will try to do our part, but we mean there are many others who would welcome a religious paper to their households, and bless the hand that did them good. "Cast thy bread upon the waters," &c.

Brother Holsinger; In looking over the second number of the Companion, Vol. 5, I see an article from Hagerstown, Indiana, headed "Social Meetings," and signed Daniel Smith. With great reluctance I take up my pen to offer a few thoughts upon the same. One consideration alone in my opinion makes it necessary to reply. Were it otherwise I would cheerfully pass it by unnoticed. Now I look at the case in this way: Brother Daniel Smith and several other brethren, with myself, labor together in this branch of the church in the Ministry; and silence from all would imply that we were in sympathy with the article. But this I think is certainly not the case. And without giving my individual views, either pro or con, on the merits of the article, I would say that in my opinion such articles are calculated in their nature to sow discord in the Brotherhood, both at home and abroad, and surely we already have discord and trouble enough in the Church without sowing seed so prolific of contention.—All meetings held by the Brethren either for worship or business should be social meetings. In conclusion I will yet say that I advised brother Smith not to have it published after he had it written; but duty no doubt dictated to him otherwise, and for his action in the matter I will assure him, that although I may differ with him, I entertain no unkind feelings towards him, and knowing him as well as I do, I have no fears that he will not be equally liberal towards me for writing what I have written.—And although we may differ in some of the minor practices in the Church, I trust we will abate none of our zeal in winning souls to Christ, but will labor together if possible more faithfully than we have hitherto done.

DAVID BOWMAN.

Hagerstown, Ind.

Brother George Wolfe, Stockton, California, after sending a second list of subscribers, writes:

"If the Companion makes or sustains the same improvement this year, that it has the last year 1868, with that liberality of sentiment, should I live so long as next fall, I will commence sooner in the season to get up a subscription list; and hope I can get a larger one. Please send out your subscription list sooner in the season. I have now got the Companion scattered from Sublimity, Oregon, to Santa Cruz, on the Bay of Montery, California, a distance of over six hundred miles. Hope it is casting bread on the water to be found after many days."

ROSSVILLE, IND., Jan. 17th, '69.

Brother Holsinger:—I, as a reader of the Companion, feel very anxious to read Church News; and as I see other brethren and sisters express themselves in the same manner, I will, therefore, give a little account of what has been done here during the last year.

Since our last Annual Meeting we have received twenty-six souls through the order of Baptism.—Those received, varied, we might say, from the first to the eleventh hours, though mostly young.

We pray the Lord still to work mightily upon the hearts of others, that his House may become full.

D. D. SHIVELY.

Brother Jacob Wine, Edgeworth, Tennessee, writes: "We still have good meetings. Thank God for his blessings. May we still go on in the good work of the Lord. As we have been blessed, let us again set new resolutions to be more watchful, for we know that our time of staying here will not be long. Our lives are just loaned to us, and while we stay is the time to make our peace with God. Soon the icy arm of death will close around us, our bodies moulder back to dust, and our spirits wing their flight to the spirit-world. Then let us not fall out by the way. I know I am weak, but there is One who is very ready to help. I still have hope to be happy beyond this vale of tears. May we all be ready when the summons comes, and be happy in eternity."

MONTICELLO, IND., Jan. 18th, '69.

Brother Henry:—I feel like writing a few lines to you by way of Church News.

On the 17th of November brother C. Long, of Mount Carroll, Illinois, came to us, and tarried with us ten days, preaching nineteen times in our District, which created quite an interest among the people. Many were made to reflect over their condition, and some yielded to the call of the Master through his servant, to the joy and comfort of believers and saints; while others we hope are counting the costs, and ere long will be ready to begin to labor for the Lord in the Vineyard, so that when evening comes they may all receive a due reward.

During our meeting there was, apparently, a little pentecostal season, for great grace was among all; and going from house to house, we ate our meat with joy and in singleness of heart.

Through God's blessing the ark is still moving slowly on. During the past season we received eleven by baptism, and reclaimed one.

May the Lord still bless the weak efforts of his humble servants to labor faithfully for the advancement of his kingdom, and the good of souls, is the prayer of his humble servant.

JNO S. SNOWBERGER.

Brother J. S. Flory, of Fayette Co. W. Va., writes: "Within the last month, notwithstanding the rigor of mid-winter, two worthy young men have been added to this arm of the church by baptism as God did command. Our congregations are small at this time owing to the prevalence of small-pox in the neighborhood. One case only, as yet, proved fatal."

Brother Saml. H Myers, New Market, Va., says: "It always affords me great pleasure to hear Church News, and to see sinners turn to God in all our churches.—We had an encouraging increase in the last year, and also sent laborers into the field. But we lost one of the greatest Gospel defenders in the Valley, that was brother Daniel Thomas. He was a useful and faithful brother; and we hope he has sown seed that will yet spring up and bring fruit."

Querists' Department.

Brother Holsinger:—I have been a reader of the Companion for some length of time, and find much interesting information; but have never seen anything in regard to dealing with members. I wish some brother would write through the Companion the rules adopted by the brethren in dealing with lay members, deacons, and ministers of the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd degrees. The reason why I desire this is that a certain Elder has proceeded in a way that has astonished me.

Remarks.—As a general rule the brethren have adopted Matthew 18th chapter. In regard to bringing a charge against members, and officers of the church, there might be something written to edification. But we leave this for some of our elder brethren to answer, who have had more experience. Will they do it? The question is seriously made, and the querist has given us his name and other particulars.—ED.

Brother George Witwer, Hamilton, Mo., says: "We are always glad to see the Companion arrive. May its progress be onward; yea, may the truths, principles and practice, which it advocates, be more and more disseminated, and may the motto of its editor and publisher be that of the apostle: (by way of advice and instruction,) "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever thing are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if any praise, think on these things." Phil. 4: 8.

Brother John Studabaker of South Bend, Ind., under date of January 23rd, says: "The work of the Lord is going forward in this arm of the church. The brethren commenced a series of meetings in Elder Jacob Miller's meeting-house north of our town on Portage Prairie, on the 16th of the month. I was not able to attend these meetings, as I have been confined to my bed for some time, having been taken with Bilious Fever. But I can now sit up again, and, if the Lord will, I shall recover. Last night, (22nd) my children came home from the meetings, bringing me the glad tidings that 21 were baptized. Give God the praise. "Glory to God in the highest, and peace and good-will be towards men."

Brother Lewis Lorew, Papillion, Nebraska, after renewing his subscription to the Companion, says: "The Companion is a welcome visitor in our family, as it is about all the preaching we have here. We live about forty miles from any community of the Brethren: although we were organized into a church with the Brethren in Washington county, last Fall, but too far distant from each other to have preaching often. Brother S. A. Moore preached for us last Spring. He had three appointments and very good attention. He was the first of our church that ever preached in this county. I have been asked very frequently, why we do not have our preacher come and preach for us. I think much good could be done here, if we could have the preaching of the Word, and a few brethren to settle among us. If you know of any ministering brother in limited circumstances, refer him to us. Land is good, and markets near. Pray for us that we may hold out faithful."

Brother Holsinger:—I did not take the Companion last year, and feel that I have not obtained the knowledge I might have, by taking it, nor have I made the advancement in divine life which I might have, had I read it. So I hope I shall no more sacrifice the benefits of the Companion and the kind and good admonitions communicated through it. I love to hear the old parent brethren speak of the blessed hope they have obtained through a knowledge of the Scriptures.

I subscribed for, and received Vols. 2 and 3, through which I obtained a great deal of scripture knowledge of which I would have been destitute without the Companion. A great many things that I did not understand were explained upon its pages.

May the God of peace assist the brethren thus to strengthen the weak, and spread truth and righteousness throughout the world.

P. B. PORTER.

Sinking Springs, Ohio.

A brother writes: "I am pretty late in sending the money: but the cause is that I expected to send some new subscribers. I distributed several copies of my last Vol., but did not succeed in getting any subscribers. Some have one excuse and some another. One brother (perhaps worth $10,000,) said he would like it tolerably well, but could not afford it, as the times were so hard. Of course we do not want to impose upon such if they are too poor to subscribe."

Information.

For the information desired by sister Martha A. Kirksey of Wrights Mill, Ind., I would say there are brethren and sisters living about 2 miles south of Bellmore, and 8 miles east of Rockville, Parke Co., Ind.—By writing to brother John Williams, Bellmore, Ind., further information can be obtained.

MATTHIAS FRANTZ.

Ladoga, Ind.

More about that "Wolf in Sheep's Clothing."

Brother Holsinger: Please state through the Companion, still more about that "wolf dressed in sheep's clothing," of which brother P. E. Boubaker wrote, as found on page 531 of Vol. 4, of Companion.

The history the brother gives should have been given long ago, even by myself. When here, she called herself Mrs. Stouffer, and said she resided near Chambersburg, Pa. She gave her age at 64. She is tall; has black eyes; has gray hair; looks rather pale; has slim, white fingers and hands. She has a peculiar mark upon her forehead of short, bristle-like hairs. She shows some intelligence in her conversation. Talks fast and knows nearly everybody. Has a great memory, and is quick in her ways. She watches and tries to hear all that is said.

She came to my house in Nov., 1866. Stayed 2½ days. She said several things which proved to be false. She was also very inquisitive. She said she had $700 in her satchel, and also said if it was not believed she would show the money. Said she had 3 children: 2 daughters married, living in Lee Co., Ill., whose husbands were ministers, one named Lehman. Said she was in Fulton Co., Ill. I wrote to brother Jacob Nagley, and he came to our church; and we talked about the matter. He said she had been there among them, and had stolen a silver thimble and a dress of his wife. He and others took her to be an impostor.

This is written that the brethren and sisters may not be imposed upon by such characters, as profess to be of Christ's fold, but are not.

Brother J. H. Over the [illegible] we had a very interesting meeting: the members seemed to enjoy the meeting quite well.

An Answer.

In [illegible] Vol. 5, No. 1, page 10, I set a query proposed, which reads as follows: "Will some one please give a scriptural reason why the Church do not lay aside their garments when they arise from supper to wash their feet?" &c.

My object in [illegible] is not want of ability to answer the question, for it is not [illegible] as well as the brethren do lay aside their garments before washing feet, their shoes and stockings: or in other words, the garments of their feet. As all in the room participate, is spoken in the plural number, all the brethren and sisters imitate the example of their Leader and head of the Church. So then there is no [illegible] for we are all one in Jesus Christ."

THE Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Captivity.

PSALM CXXXVII.

Where Babel's sullen current flows,
In captive bands we sat down;
And on the willow's weeping boughs
Our silent harps sadly hung.

Our captors craved our psalms of mirth,
And bade us raise the tuneful string;
But there we wept, in tears and chains,
The songs of joy and freedom sing.

Now while we weep by Babel's streams,
Shall we the songs of Zion sing?
Nor there up to those holy hymns
We shall not dare for Zion's King.

Oh, Zion! if I the[e] forget,
Upon a distant land,
Let silence on my tongue be set,
And palsy seize my skillful hand.

Ah, Babel! Soon thy day shall come,
When God shall smite thy lovers of wrong;
Then Israel's exiles, returning home,
Shall burst the harp and wake the song.

Babylon.

What a vast field opens up to the Bible student upon a thorough investigation of the types, shadows and prophecies of the Old Testament scriptures! The more the mind is introduced to the marvelous workings of Jehovah as exhibited therein, the more we are made to reverence and adore the great I AM.

In this article we desire to cull from that rich garden of God's own planting a leaf or two,—offer a few thoughts thereon, being moved by no other motive than to honor God's name, or add a mite to the cause of pure and undefiled religion. Then to proceed, let us take a look at the great City Babylon, first built as early as the days of Nimrod and became the chief city of Chaldea. It was under King Nebuchadnezzar that it attained to that state of magnificence as to render it the wonder of the world. Profane historians assert that it was from 45 to 60 miles in circumference, was laid off into over 600 squares, and surrounded by walls 300 feet in height and 75 in breadth. Within its limits was the great temple Belus, or Jupiter, supposed to have been built on the massive foundations of the original tower of Babel. The various allusions to this great city by the sacred Word, gives us every reason to believe in its reputed size and splendor, and that the Lord designed it for his special purpose—forge it into a massive link in his marvelous chain of events in the grand scheme of human redemption. While in its grandeur and power, free from the ravages of war, the voice of prophecy pronounced the doom of Babylon, and fall of her arrogant and voluptuous inhabitants.

It will be remembered it was to the city the Jews were carried in captivity at the taking of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar: the treasures of the temple as well as the wealth of the City, were carried thence by the conquerors. The vengeance of the Lord was thus poured out against those whose sins were so great that he "would not pardon."

The prophecies respecting Babylon and the surrounding country are many and the lapse of ages has given evidence upon evidence to confirm the fact that the Word of the Lord is sure and that complete fulfilment has followed the predictions relative to ancient Babylon. See Isaiah 13th and 46th chapters: Jeremiah 25th and 51st chapters. Cyrus was the chosen instrument of the Lord to march with a great army against Babylon. The Babylonians felt secure, believing their walls were impregnable, made no effort to repulse the besiegers, thus fulfilling "the mighty men of Babylon have foreborne to fight: they have remained in their holds." Being possessed with provisions for twenty years, they laughed at their enemies and continued to live in all sinfulness and false confidence. But alas for them! the great River Euphrates that flowed through the city was suddenly turned from its former course as was declared: "I will dry up thy Sea, and make thy springs dry—I will dry up thy rivers." Thus a "snare was laid for Babylon, and it was taken and it was not aware; it was found and also caught; for it had sinned against the Lord." The city was thus taken by the army entering along the dry bed of the River; her beautiful streets were soon thronged with soldiers. "I will fill thee with men as with caterpillars." And so on every step was but a fulfilment of a prophecy respecting her. Great indeed was her fall. In her presumptuous pride she said: "I shall be a lady forever." But the Lord said: "Come down and sit in the dust daughter of Babylon; sit on the ground, there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans." And it was done. In making an application of the many words of prophecy as touching the complete destruction of this once glorious city to the present state of her ancient site, the boldest skeptic surely must believe in the Divine origin of the Scriptures.

"They come from a far country; from the end of the earth, to destroy the whole land." Such was truly the case. Persians, Macedonians, Romans, Turks and those of many other nations were instrumental in destroying that once fertile land, and "golden city."—Modern travelers tell us, it is a barren desert that can not be tilled and the former site of the city a heap of ruins. Prophecy says: "Babylon shall become heaps." "Let nothing of her be left." "A desolation, a dry land and a wilderness." We are also informed:—"there are many dens of wild beasts in various parts. And while the lower excavations are often pools of water, in most of the cavities are numbers of bats and owls." What a striking fulfilment of the words of prophecy: "Wild beasts of the deserts shall lie there, and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there." Evidently such attestations of the truths of prophecy is sufficient to cause every thinking mind to subscribe without doubt to every edict of the Bible as coming from God. In "looking into" those things, will not nations learn wisdom? Will not tyrants as well as all who wield the rule of authority in a spirit of pride and self-will, pause and tremble at "what is written?"

Believing that those things written in the law and prophets" have an essential import reaching into the future, our next step will be to consider the subject under that head. As the law was the "school-master" to bring us to Christ, we deem it a duty of every pilgrim who is seeking a better country, to look back into the law and prophets, that he may profit by the literal enactments there recorded as well as have all our hopes confirmed and zeal strengthened by looking at them in a typical signification. That there is such a meaning attached to the Old Scriptures, there is no doubt. But to proceed, let us take a faint view of the ante-type of ancient Babylon. John the Revelator, while in the Spirit, was permitted to see a "woman" upon whose forehead was a name written: "MYSTERY; BABYLON THE GREAT."

It is not my design to particularize on this subject. Suffice it to say, hope we may be allowed to call every thing originating from an influence of any other spirit than from the true Spirit of God, as a combination of sin to which may be ascribed the appellation of "Mystery, Babylon." It is no far-fetched theory to say darkness or a spirit of wickedness controls her actions when it is said: "The beast shall ascend out of the bottomless pit." "She saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." How like ancient Babylon who declared, "I shall be a lady forever." The predictions that were said concerning her how truly they were fulfilled. What is said of this "Mystery, Babylon?" "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." Like ancient Babylon it is a "great city" "decked with gold and precious stones: "in one hour so great riches is come to naught." O, may we all read and understand—let us look into the Christian world, and take warning when we see the contrast standing out in bold relief between it and the partakers of her sins." Who will not heed this invitation of the Spirit of the Lord?

Brother, sister, or friend, see to it that you do not sip from the "golden cup in her hand." In appearance it may be fascinating, sweet may be the upper part of the contents of the cup, but at the bottom is the deadly poison—the "plague" that will destroy the soul from the presence of God and holy angels. Every thing that is an abomination to God is in that cup, the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, the pride of life, the spirit of emulation, love of gold, and every thing that maketh a lie, with all the "ifs" and "ands" used to pervert God's Word, are found therein.—"Touch not, taste not, handle not the unclean thing," for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

I observed that the bad half-crown had a shining face like a good one, and outwardly it had the stamp upon it. But at heart it was bad. There was no silver there: only base metal. It was a hypocrite, a mere professor. It pretended to be what it was not, it had a fair outward appearance, but no reality in heart.

I observed further that the nail of judgment pierced both the head and the heart. Mournful illustration of the seat of the thoughts, the affections, and passions, being penetrated with the iron rod of God's displeasure! Oh! is such indeed the end of the mere formalist! Unquestionably; and of all Christless, graceless souls. The righteousness of God will judge all evil.—But I thought, will the wicked at last be fixed to one place? The doomed half crown could not move. How monotonous, how ignominious! Affixed to one spot, a public spectacle, a once shining professor, but now a detected, dishonored, doomed deceiver! But shall it be so at last with all who have no true interest in Christ, professors or not professors? Most assuredly; the word of truth has gone forth from the lips of him who cannot change. It stands recorded in the statute book of heaven, and thus it runs; and may my readers mark it well: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: he tha appear from the parable that any of the guests thought that he was different to themselves.—So thoroughly had the reality been imitated; and so it is now, I fear. Immense numbers in the present day make a profession of religion of whom no man on earth could feel quite certain as to whether they were real or merely formal christians. Their lives are strictly moral, they regularly attend some place of worship, they give their money for church, mission and benevolent purposes, they sing Psalms and hymns as sweetly as any one, they read the scriptures, pray and preach, and yet when the unmistakable signs of Divine life in the soul are looked for, the search is in vain. We have to leave such cases, thankful that we are not their judges, until the Lord comes.

Such seems to have been the case in the parable. He may have occupied a high place among professors, but there was no cleaving of the heart to Christ, and trusting in him alone. Oh no, for the full promise of God is sure to all who trust in Jesus. "Blessed are all they that put their trust in him." Ps. 2: 12. He was a stranger to the love and grace of God in Christ Jesus. He was a rejecter of grace, and men are saved by grace alone, through faith and without works of law.

But though he had succeeded in deceiving the guests, he could not deceive the King.—And when the King came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment, and he saith unto him: "Friend how camest thou in hither? not having on a wedding garment. And he was speechless. Then said the king to the servants: Bind him hand and foot and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Matth. 22: 13. Alas, alas! what a close to a long life of high sounding profession! What an end for one who has had a high place in the church on earth! And alas! for all who have not Christ! Bound hand and foot and cast into the place of judgment. Now he must be where he falls; he must abide in the place wherein he is cast. There was a time when he was determined to have his own will and enjoy his own way in spite of every warning; but now he is chained to the one spot; he can have his own will and his own way no longer; wrapped in the vile and worthless rags of his own evil and hypocritical ways, he is cast outside the presence chamber of the king, and has no means of resisting the righteous but fearful judgment that he has brought upon himself.

Oh that careless, thoughtless sinners, and mere nominal professors, would think on these awful realities now, and take warning. The time is fast coming when it may be too late.—Soon shall all who now dwell on the earth have to take their respective places either in the light and sunny regions of eternal glory, or in the dark dungeon of eternal woe. The scriptures are plain and absolute. God is righteous, and he can approve of nothing less righteous than himself. He is the only true God, and can accept of nothing less true than himself. He has but one standard and Christ alone is up to his measure. Nothing will pass as currency at the Judgment Seat that has not the name of Christ stamped upon it.

The sinner can only be received, approved and justified in the worthiness of Christ. He is the Way, the Truth, and the Life. No man can come unto the Father but by him: he is the door, the only way of entrance into the Father's House. When the sinner draws near to God, in the faith of his own worthlessness, and the worthiness of Christ, he is accepted—accepted in the Beloved. Christ is ready to receive all that come to him: he casts out none. Oh then unpardoned, unsaved sinners whether you have made a profession or not, at once with your whole heart turn to Jesus in the full assurance of his pardoning love. Be assured that he is waiting, ready to receive you. He is able, he is willing to save the "chief of sinners." Without delay flee to the arms of Jesus: flee from your evil habits, and from the awful doom of outer darkness. As a lost sinner, take refuge in him who was nailed to the cross for sinners, for you and me. He wore a crown of thorns, an emblem of the curse of sin, that you and I might wear a crown of glory. His heart was pierced with a soldier's spear that you and I might find a resting place in his heart forever. He bore the Judgments of God against sin that you might enjoy an eternal weight of glory.—Then be careless no longer; slight the Savior of sinners no longer; believe in him according to the Word of God. Look to Jesus and your eyes shall be enlightened; your burden remov-

Brother Burkhart's Query.

I do not feel like doing this subject justice as some claim, but while others are throwing in of their abundance, I will throw in my mite. Neither can I say but that I have serious doubts about Christ being the least or greatest as spoken of in the text.

It appears to me so plain that he had no reference to himself at all, that it admits of no doubt in my mind. See Matthew 18th chapter, where the disciples wanted to know who was greatest in the kingdom of heaven.—"And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, and said: Verily I say unto you, &c., Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same shall be greatest in the kingdom of heaven." If Christ had been both least and greatest in his kingdom, there would have been no use for this example and remarks of our Lord, upon this subject. He certainly then had no reference to himself at all as being least or greatest in his kingdom; but plainly says, He (it matters not who) that humbleth himself as that little child, should be greatest, &c., and upon the same ground of reasoning, he that failed most to comply with these requisitions of humility, would be least in his kingdom.

We believe in degrees of glory in the kingdom of heaven; that is to say, that some saints enjoy more happiness than others, from the fact of having more capacity to enjoy. And the Apostle refers to this when he says, "As one star differs from another star in glory, so we are to differ," &c. Having this clearly before the mind, then, that there are different grades of Saints in the kingdom of heaven, and that they are all perfectly happy from the least to the greatest of them, then comes in the text that the least person in this kingdom, or blessed state, is greater than John the Baptist. Nothing can be plainer to my mind.

We believe brother Thomas has answered rightly, brother Moomaw to the contrary, notwithstanding.—We think brother M. has failed to answer brother Burkhart's query, for his whole essay showed that he tried to confound brother T.'s testimony and did not throw light, or information upon the subject as the querist wished to know. We should stick to our text. Brother M. tries to confound brother T.'s testimony in regard to Christ's kingdom, by quoting passages where it refers to the celestial world; and again where it refers to this world, and thinks that this kingdom is confined to either one world, or, the other. We beg to differ. The words themselves tell us that this kingdom is from heaven. Did not these men quoted by brother M., tell us that this King Jesus was coming from heaven and of course his rule would be of a heavenly nature; but is that saying because he is going to leave heaven and extend his territory or kingdom to earth's remotest bounds, that he must have no kingdom in heaven at the same time? So brother M. argues to my mind. See Luke 17: 21. "Neither shall they say, lo! here; or lo! there; for behold! the kingdom of heaven is within you." That is to say the first principles, and feelings which constitute heaven, are set up in your heart, or affections if you have experienced that change of mind and soul which is necessary to make you my disciples.

Truly his kingdom is not of this world, for it would then be like this world; because it is not of this world, is not saying that it is not in the world. Why not then the kingdom of heaven be on earth and in heaven at the same time?

We must not limit this blessed and great kingdom. Brother M. says, "And, as there are none in the kingdom of heaven yet that are born of women," &c. And further admits that we are all born of women; hence, he has not only shut himself out of the kingdom of heaven, but everybody else, from Cain and Abel down to this time. This is a hard saying for mortal man to make. Who can bear it?

When Christ was transfigured on the Mount, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias. This proves then that some have got into this kingdom, and born of women too. Again, brother M. is born of woman and is a minister of Jesus. Now there are but two kingdoms—one of Jesus, or light, and the other of the devil, or darkness; and though brother M. has by his words, shut himself out of this kingdom of light, we not only believe he is in the kingdom of heaven, but that he is a faithful minister in the same, and trying to destroy the works of darkness.

Truly there is an error taught in brother M.'s syllogism, for it opposes Christ's express language wherein he says in the text, "Among those that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist." Brother M. says "that Christ's express language is that John is greater than any born of woman." We don't understand it so, for the word greater is in the comparative degree, and admits of a comparison between two or more,—great, greater, greatest. Now if Jesus meant that all men born of women were less in every respect than John, he would have used the word greatest; hence we understand him to say that other men have been, or may be, as great as John, but that none can surpass him in greatness, though he may have many equals in greatness. We understand then by the phrase, "The kingdom of heaven is set up within us, and that we are in the kingdom," to be nothing more or less than to be under the rule and control of our blessed Lord; or, in other words, to be in a state or condition as spoken of in the 5th chapter of 1st Cor., where the old man and his deeds are purged out; then, 2nd Cor., 5th chap., where old things are passed away and all things became new in Christ Jesus. "The things which I once loved I now hate." In short, one who obeys the commands of Jesus is in his kingdom, whether it be on earth, or in heaven.

We don't expect though to enjoy but little (comparatively speaking) of his kingdom here, for the Apostle says, (13th chap. of 1st Cor.) "For now we see through a glass darkly, but then, (in heaven) face to face.—Now I know in part, but then shall I know even as I am known." Again, (1st. Cor. 2nd chap.) "But as it is written: Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the things which God has prepared for those that love him." As if he had said: though it is such a blessed thing to be converted, and have our sins washed away, and live a new creature in Christ Jesus, and to enjoy all the blessed fruits of such a course here which makes us so comfortable and happy; this is only the beginning of good things to come, and the best is reserved for the last when we shall have entered through the gates into the heavenly city; then, and not till then, shall we fully realize the blessedness of his kingdom; then, and not till then, will we be fully qualified to understand and enjoy the height and depth, and length and breadth of this blessed Kingdom. The City of our God.

"For they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country."—"But now they desire a better, that is an heavenly:—wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city." Heb. 11: 14—16.

It is a fact fully established by the true Christian's chart—the Word of God—that he must pass through great tribulation ere the welcome applaudit resounds in his hearing,—"Well done, good and faithful servant." "All that will live Godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution," saith Paul. In comparing scripture with scripture, we will find that there is a great deal contained in the clause, "will live godly." It implies an action, and one that is patterned after a God. And from Genesis to Revelations, we find that every thing that springs from God is justice, righteousness, and holiness. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." He it is, I think, where the christian comes to a cross-road after he has started for the Celestial City. When everything goes along smoothly and nothing crosses his pathway he goes his way rejoicing; but, alas! he soon gets into the wilderness, perhaps where the waters are a little bitter, or a little persecution arises for the Word's sake, and then in his heart he turns back and tries to comfort himself with merely the name of christian. He will live godly, but it is in service to the god of this world, which god with all his substance is going to be burned up. Hence, then, comes up the language of the king of glory to his disciples when some of them were turning back. He says to the twelve: "will ye also go away?" "Lord to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life," says Peter.

When the conflict rages sore, when the soldier of Jesus is brought to his knees, when it comes to the point for God or Mammon, it seemeth to me if he can only muster up strength enough to look to his Chart, and read: "thou hast the words of eternal life," "all power is given unto me in heaven and earth: this is enough; and then, with a Peter, he is willing to do any thing to have a part with his Lord. Even a look from the Master upon Peter was sufficient for him to remember, "His word unto him." Peter loved his Master, and had a respect unto the recompense of reward. For says he "We have not followed cunningly-devised fables when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses to his majesty.—This is my Beloved Son in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from Heaven we heard when we were with him in the holy mount."

If we wish even ever to have a foretaste of the glory that is going to be revealed inside the walls of the New Jerusalem we have to ascend the Holy Mount.—I mean the Word of God, the whole of it. There is a city we may get a glimpse of without climbing so high. It is also a "great city" and "mighty men" belong to that city. It is the devil's counterfeit city of the New Jerusalem, and I suppose it is as good as men and devils could make. Its steeples tower very high, its costliness is very great, the golden cup is freely passed around, many, many thousands gather around its altar; and were you to come near enough to them and see them leap and hear them shout, you would or might suppose they had already got into the New Jerusalem. But alas, alas! when you come to examine their banner, you will find inscribed upon it, in large letters:—NON-ESSENTIALS. That is enough for the true follower of the Lord Jesus Christ to know of that city, he sees upon his Chart the name of it, "Babylon," and presses on towards the New Jerusalem, the city of his God.—I believe it is a city worth striving for, even sacrificing our all to obtain it. We have an account of its richness given us in Revelations 21st chapter; and its richness exceeds that of any city that there ever was in this world, or ever will be. Who ever heard the like? "And the city was pure gold like unto clear glass." Who would not love to dwell in such a City? And the beauty of it all is, that it is an everlasting one. The happy family that shall occupy that blessed consolation, shall never be parted. But how is it here? We may be of a family we think a great deal of. How hard it is to part with one? But we must confess we have no abiding city here. Oh! then let us strive, and strive lawfully and manfully for the city of our God. He that will be rich let him be rich indeed, by laying up his treasure in heaven, "where moth and rust does not corrupt. "Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have a right to the tree of life and enter in through the gates into the city.—Rev. 22: 14. F. G. McNUTT.

Our Visit to Philadelphia.

As noticed in our last, on the 28th ultimo, we took the train for the city of brotherly love, whence we arrived in due time next morning, without fear or molestation. We at once set out for our brother Spanogle, who is in business at No. 220 North 3rd St., in order to learn where we might join brother Myers. But we were informed that he had changed his programme, and had left the city the day before, and had gone to Indian Creek congregation. And as the Brethren had a meeting in progress in their meeting-house at Crown St., we were earnestly entreated to remain with them, and assist in the labors of the house of the Lord. We accordingly consented to remain for a few days, still expecting to follow our old brother. We tried to preach for the brethren on Friday evening. We confess we always thought it rather a "big undertaking" for a "small man" to preach in the city. However we undertook it, and we still survive. Brother Saml R. Myers, of Baresville, Pa., dropped in and gave us valuable assistance.

On Saturday evening brother Jacob Riner of Line Lexington, Pa., came among us and labored for us. Brethren Samuel Longenecker, of Montanlon, Northumberland Co., Pa., and Archy VanDyke, of Lewistown, Pa., also arrived.

On Sunday forenoon brethren Longenecker and VanDyke accompanied brother Custer to Germantown, to fill an appointment at the old meeting house, and they reported having had an interesting meeting. Brother Riner again addressed us, from the words: "Be not afraid; only believe." He spoke with a power that could be felt, and we are very thankful that we have had the privilege of hearing him and making his intimate acquaintance.

An appointment was made for the afternoon, expecting the brethren to return from Germantown, but they failing, it was said to be our turn.

In the evening brother VanDyke spoke to our edification and instruction.

On Monday evening brother Riner again preached, expecting to depart on the morrow.—He selected for the basis of his discourse the words: "Godliness is profitable to all things," &c., and spoke with his wonted interest.

On Tuesday evening I was set apart to preach at Germantown. Brother Custer accompanied me, and although we arrived very late, we had a pleasant little meeting. As we returned with brother Custer after the meeting, we did not have an opportunity of making any notes in relation to the antiquity of the place. We were inspired with a feeling of solemnity when we remembered that we were speaking in the first house ever erected by the Brethren in this country for the worship of God. At some other time we hope to pay a special visit to Germantown, and gather some statistics, and historical facts relating to the Church, which will be interesting to all our readers.

Brother Longenecker preached in the city and the brethren report a good meeting. Brother L. believes in preaching and has learned how to do it. We did not learn his text, but we heard that he took occasion to say a word against pride. He thinks gay and costly apparel is an evidence of pride, and that if a person has a humble heart he ought "to take down the sign."

On Wednesday evening brother VanDyke again entertained us from 2 Cor. 5 : 20.

On Thursday morning we expected to take the Mail Train, and arrive home at 7 P. M, but failing to make it, we wrote this report in the Philadelphia Depot, and will take the Fast Line at 11 : 50, this forenoon.

We had a very pleasant visit. We were very kindly treated by all the brethren and sisters.

At Home.

We arrived safely home at 11 o'clock on Thursday night, but are sorry to inform our readers that we found our own affairs in a sad condition. Miss Sallie Camerer, one of our printers, who had an attack of Intermittent Fever, but was thought to be mending when we left, is now seriously afflicted with Typhoid Fever. Sister Holsinger, also, is quite unwell. Being very nervous and sympathetic in our temperament, our readers may know that our feelings are very painful. We hope the brethren and sisters everywhere will remember us in our affliction, and pray the Father of mercies that He will speedily relieve us.

Half Sheet.

Our steam press being in the same building with our dwelling, we could not use it, on account of the sickness in our family. Those who have had Typhoid Fever in their families are aware of the effect of noise upon the patient. By the politeness of Messrs. Holmes & Jones, of the Herald, of our town, we were enabled to print this issue on their hand press. We may be necessitated to the same measure next week, and hope our readers will bear with us.

CORRESPONDENCE

Announcements.

Ephrata District of Conestoga Church.

Dear Brother Holsinger:—I wish to drop a few lines of "church news" for the satisfaction of others. We had quite a refreshing time lately in regard to our spiritual warfare.

We had a series of meetings in our area of the church lately, which lasted for some time. Brother Grabill Myers had several meetings throughout our branch, which stirred up some of that which was ready to die. He was followed by brethren Moses Miller of Cumberland Co., Peter Hollowbush and David Keim of Chester Co., Joseph Sherfy of Gettysburg, and George Smith and Abraham Pfautz of Little Swatara congregation. Elder Daniel Frey of Ill. was with us too at a few meetings.

It was indeed a soul-refreshing time to all among us who love the Lord. And we trust, we were all more or less strengthened, encouraged, and built up in the most holy faith; and we hope those meetings will long be remembered by those who attended them at least, & by some whom we believe were made to feel the "Word of God," penetrate their heart. And our prayer is, that it may not have been in vain; and if they are not immediately willing to come forth, we hope the word sown may be as bread cast upon the waters that it might be gathered in after days.

We believe, too, that the good Lord will reward our brethren who labored so untiringly among us, and will help us, one and all, that we may be found faithful to the end that Middle Penna. District Meeting.

The District Meeting for Middle Penna. will be held (God willing) with the brethren in the James Creek congregation, Huntingdon county, commencing on Monday, April 26th, A. D. 1869. Those coming on the Pa. Central R. R., will stop off at Huntingdon, and there take the Broadtop Road to Brumbaugh's Crossing.

Our minutes say, "the third Sunday before Whitsuntide," which will regulate the time as above. On Sunday no trains will run on the Broadtop R. R. To those wishing to avail themselves of the benefit of that road, should do it on Saturday. Elder Adam Brown is hereby informed that the brethren at James' creek would not waive their grant, unless some special reason could be assigned; which I could not do; hence, so far as my authority goes, I say they are justly entitled to the claim.

A general attendance is expected.

THE Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Passing Away.

Everything belonging to this terrestrial world is of a transitory nature,—must soon pass away. It is a fact stereotyped in glowing characters on all that is transpiring around us. Nature in all her changing scenes, confirms this important truth. Even the aged monarchs of the forest, that have withstood the storms of centuries, show indications of decay. Long have their bending boughs waved, and continued to expand at each successive season came and went. How often the invigorating heat of Spring and Summer, caused their naked branches to become clothed in living green, and blooming clusters burst from every twig.—Gentle zephyrs played amid their thick foliage, and their leaves mingled with the sweet melody of the happy birds. All, all was beauty and grandeur; but by and by the chilling frosts of Autumn, silently spread its pale shining mantle o'er field and forest,—a forerunner of the approaching storms of Winter,—which soon came with blasting breath, and stamped the seal of death on every leaf, flower, and blade of grass. All their glory, verdure and fragrance passed away no more to return. Again and again, the like scene will be enacted, while this "mundane sphere" moves on in the even tenor of its way, and seasons come and go.—How we should take warning from nature, and forget not that we too are passing away! Generation after generation arises, and enacts some part in the short drama of life, and then pass away. Yea, the bursting bud of infancy opens, mind and body expand, health, beauty, loveliness is the lot of many. Wealth, honor or glory, and happiness are sought after,—ambition adds strength to every energy,—every exertion is put forth to secure the prize held out by worldly inducements.—Alas! all and all for those fascinating and fair-looking shadows, which, when secured, what are they but gaudy bubbles, or air-built castles. That soon pass away and are gone forever!

Dear reader, pause and think! Look around, behold the things that surround you of a worldly nature. "Learn wisdom and get understanding." Are you not designed for a more noble purpose than to eat, drink, sleep, and trifle away your short life in the way of vice? You are but a drop in the ocean—one grain of sand that composes the millions of inhabitants that tread or dwell on this earth. Though you have wealth, honor, or a station high in the estimation of thousands, all must soon, very soon, pass away.—The heavy frosts of Autumn will soon, if not already done so, steal upon your mortal frame, as a warning that the winter of death is near. Or, perchance, the sudden lightning flash of the king of terrors may cut you down while in the spring or summer of life.—Health, wealth, or ambition's wreath of fame cannot bribe the monster,—he gives no reprieve,—but in answer to all entreaties his song must needs be: passing away—on, on to the ocean of Eternity.

While that tender, lovely babe,—pride of a mother's heart,—object of a father's love,—pure and sinless angel of a happy household? Like the first rose of summer, it has faded and passed away. Where is the laughing, bright-eyed child, that gladdened its mother's heart with its happy smiles; like the innocent lamb, ran hither and thither knowing no care, fearing no danger? Gone, gone, never more to return!

Brother, sister, associate or school mate, to whom the tie of affection had bound us as a part of self.—Where are they? Passed away! the place that knew them knows them no more. Where that mother—dearest of names—that first taught our tongue to lisp, our feet to walk; our guardian angel, and our earthly protector? Ah! she too is gone, passed away. The one we so loved as father,—the one who so often dandled us upon his knee, who watched over our expanding mind, and cared for us with true and affectionate parental care; like the rest, he too has passed away. Wife or husband,—companion of our bosom,—our earthly solace when tossed and crossed by the strifes and toils of life,—object of our purest affections and love; where is he or she? Oh stern decree! gone, forever gone, from the shores of time! Last but not least, where those zealous watchmen—ministers of the Lord of hosts, that so often warned sinners to flee the wrath to come? Oh! how they plead in the name of Jesus, for those he died to save! They too are gone, died at "their post," have fought the "good fight" and have passed away.

Seeing, my readers, all, all are passing away, marching on in one mighty throng to the grave. Tramp! tramp! sounds the solemn tread! Nearer and nearer, every step brings us to the tomb! Soon we will all topple in! Soon the rumbling sound of our filling graves will be heard by those standing around; because we too are passing away.

Oh! are you ready to face death? Have you died with him who died on the cross,—"dead to sin" and alive to God,—dead to the world and alive to an incorruptible crown of glory that "fadeth not away?" Having no "continuing city here" are you seeking one to come in the heavens? If your "conscience condemn you" not in response to the above queries, happy are ye,—thrice happy shall you be when you can sing the song of victory, and in exultation exclaim:

"O death where is thy sting, O grave where is thy victory."

But should your conscience give a negative response we would ask: will you put off the day of your salvation longer? Oh! "be not deceived, God is not mocked." Rapidly is your life passing—cling no longer to earth, but away, and lay hold on heaven. Be led no longer by the glare of a "jack o'lantern" that dances here and there amid the fog and fickle gasses that arise from the miry swamps of sin. This earth is not your home; estrange yourself from it, and seek a home in yonder spheres above, where health, wealth, honor, glory, and happiness never—no never—pass away.

For the Companion.

Straggling Thoughts.

As I seek not human applause, and expect not to elicit public admiration I have chosen the above caption as an apology for the manner in which I write.

To write so as to be read, and to be read so as to be understood, is my principle and design at all times. And if as an humble instrument in the hand of our Heavenly Father who guides the birds of the air in their trackless flight from clime to clime; 'who hears the ravens when they cry' and 'suffers not a sparrow to fall to the ground without His notice,' I may be enabled to shape my course aright, and guide my pen in the proper direction so as to reach the points for which I started, I shall feel as though I have not altogether lived without a purpose.

As I tread the beaten track of life the intent of my mission is to reach the feelings, to enlist the sympathies, and to awaken a lively interest in the hearts of my brethren and sisters who are yet standing aloof, who claim no connection with, and are doing nothing for the encouragement and support of our church papers. And not only those, but also they who have withdrawn their subscriptions and are withholding their aid. By so doing they have not only checked the circulation and discouraged the proprietors who have labored so much for us from time to time, but have greatly curtailed the amount of support they so much need to qualify them for the duties and business of life. Their hearts are as tender and as susceptible as those whom they have failed to please, and are not more willing or better prepared to become thwarted in their plans than they are who oppose their efforts. To speak disparagingly of either, or to shrink away from both because there are divisions amongst us, which seems to me to be encouraging an unfriendly influence, is making the breach still wider, and is adding one more bane to the long list of scruples. These differences existed among the early Christians and have been continued, and doubtless will remain to some extent until the Deliverer comes. And as neither class at the present day can produce an exact counterpart to the Old Brethren, we who sustain our own church journals claim an equal right to the same title. Rather than either should diminish we would see the circulation of both increase, and the increase multiplied until they gain a welcome entrance to every abode and a permanent lodgment in every heart that responds to the name of "Brethren."

In after years the Gospel Visitor and the Christian Family Companion will be numbered among "the things that were," and those who write for, as well as those who read them shall be seen and heard no more. Then we all together as one sainted family expect to be acknowledged as the Brethren of long ago.—Through these organs the tenor of our lives will be learned and practiced by those who shall follow in our steps. Should the world remain as it now is, generations yet unborn, who shall worship in our stead, will read and ponder with pious zeal the varied lessons they teach. And as they cluster around the solemn "Record of the Tomb," and read the testimonies of dying saints that are chronicled there by the hands of affection, many thanksgivings will be offered, that the Brethren in the middle of the nineteenth century lived in the faith of the Gospel, and died in hope of a glorious immortality. Thus their names will remain as way-marks through time, and we believe will be found 'written on the Lamb's book of life when time shall be no longer.'

That we all may ere long become united in heart and sweetly glide along together in one unbroken channel until at last we are gathered into the crystal stream that flows from the throne of God, is the prayer of your sister.

On John 3:14.

"And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man must be lifted up." John 3:14.

All who read God's Word, well know the reason why the serpent was raised in the wilderness. It was because the children of Israel had sinned against God; and by reason of their great affliction they cried to the Lord, who commanded a serpent to be raised up. A serpent made to represent the one that they were bitten with. Even as Christ represents Adam, so the brazen serpent represented the natural one. So when the Israelite was bitten, if he would turn and look to the one raised up, it proved an antidote for the poisonous bite; otherwise if he refused to look, he must die. Doubtless, many excuses were made at that day. O why should I look, cries one; what good can there be in that serpent raised up? I cannot look, and moreover, I have heard of others being cured by other remedies. And while the poor rebellious sons and daughters reason with themselves, they perish in their own sins.

Now Christ, our Savior, has been raised up for our sins. We must now look to Jesus, or die. Men everywhere are called to repent and turn to Christ. Look to the great life giver and live.

Now, my dear reader, whoever you may be, do you not know that you are in the likeness of Adam who transgressed God's holy law? Do you not see, daily, the great moral sin has made? Are not you convinced, that you have broken God's law? Therefore you stand smitten, condemned even to death. How wretched is our condition! Far more so than was the condition of the rebellious Israelites: for when they were bitten, the antidote was ready at hand that they were cured immediately; but alas! we are already condemned unto death! We have as much reason to cry out, "men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved," as did the people in the Apostles' day.—My dear friends, whether Jews or Gentiles, I entreat you to be reconciled to God, the Father of us all.—Turn and look to Jesus Christ and live. The great antidote for our sin and condemnation is Faith and Obedience to Christ. Let no one say, I am too old to obey, for they who will come at the eleventh hour will receive a crown of life: neither let any say they are too young, for the Lord called Samuel when he was quite a child. Life is the time to serve the Lord.

Young Men and Women should be Christians

The advantage to young men and women being early set in the way of holiness is beyond all estimate. The benefit to themselves, to the church, to the world, the glory which is brought to God, and the ultimate and eternal bliss secured by consecration to God in the morning of life, eternity only will reveal. O that this could be more deeply impressed upon the young of both sexes—the vast importance of being entirely given up to God, of rendering Him a whole-hearted service. A heart offered up to God with all the powers of soul, mind and body, as a living sacrifice, in all the freshness and vigor and beauty of youth. What a lovely offering! How acceptable to God, and how will he crown such an one with His richest blessings!

We ought not to forget that an affectionate, confiding, tender faith, habitually exercised, would save us half the annoyances of life, for it would lift us above the reach of them. If an eagle were to fly low along the ground, every man might aim a dart at it, but when it soars into the clouds, it is above every arrow's reach. And they that trust God "shall mount up with wings as eagles: they shall run and not be weary, and they shall walk and not faint."

Brother Holsinger: Being deeply impressed with the importance of an early Divine reformation, and was delighted with the words of the above. Surely it would be a glorious and a joyous period to behold all the young seeking the salvation of their souls—daily walking in an acceptable manner to God—singing Psalms and offering unceasing praises to the Father of mercy, to the Son our Savior, and to the Holy Spirit, who guides into all truth, for the blessings, mercies, and loving kindness of which we all are so undeserving.—May we all feel our unworthiness of the Divine favors and great dependence to the Almighty and ever merciful Father and His beloved Son our blessed Savior and Redeemer.

I beg that you will remember me in your prayers to God, beseeching Him to grant me more of the Spirit of love, and purity and virtue of heart. I feel very weak and unprofitable, yet I have a great desire to be of greater and better service to the All-wise Providence than I have been heretofore. May the Holy Spirit assist me in serving God in a more arduous and zealous manner, "walking worthy of the vocation wherein I am called." I sincerely hope the Lord will be with us, aiding us in all things requisite for our future salvation.

For the Spread of the Gospel.

Dear brethren and sisters: I think if we would join ourselves together, and establish a treasury in every church; if each member would lay past them one cent or two each week for the treasury to pay the expense of sending ministers to preach the Gospel in its purity, much good might be done. Such a small amount we would not miss, and it would amount to considerable. Let each church pay its own expenses in sending their ministers to other churches. In this way much good might be done.

The Footsteps of Decay.

Translated from an Ancient Spanish poem.

Oh! let the soul its slumbers break—
Arouse its senses, and awake
To see how soon
Life, in its glories, glides away,
And the stern foot-steps of decay
Come stealing on.

And while we view the rolling tide,
Down which our flowing minutes glide
Away so fast,
Let us the pleasant hour employ.
And deem each future dream a joy
Already past.

Let no vain hope deceive the mind,
No happier let us hope to find
To-morrow than to-day.
Our golden dreams of yore were bright,
Like them the present shall delight—
Like them decay.

Our lives like hastening streams must be,
That into one engulfing sea
Are doomed to fall—
The sea of death, whose waves roll on O'er king and kingdom, crown and throne,
And swallow all.

Alike the river's lordly tide,
Alike the humble rivulet's glide,
To that sad wave!
Death levels poverty and pride,
And rich and poor sleep side by side.
Within the grave.

Our birth is but a starting-place,
Life is the running of the race;
And death the goal;
There all our glittering toys are drought—
That path alone, of all unsought,
Is found of all.

See then, how poor and little worth
Are all those glittering toys of earth
That lure us here;
Dreams of a sleep that death must break;
Alas! before it bids us awake,
We disappear.

Long ere the damp of death can blight,
The cheek's pure glow of red and white
Has passed away;
Youth smiled and all was heavenly fair—
Age came, and laid his finger there,
And where are they!

Where is the strength that spurned decay,
The step that roved so light and gay;
The heart's blithe tone?
The strength is gone, the step is slow,
And joy grows wearisome, and woe!
When age comes on!

Kind Words.

A little word in kindness spoken,
A motion or a tear,
Has often healed the heart that's broken,
And made a friend sincere.

A word—a look—has crushed to earth
Full many a budding flower,
Which, had a smile but owned its birth,
Would bless life's darkest hour.

Then deem it not an idle thing
A pleasant word to speak;
The face you wear, the thoughts you bring
A heart may heal, or break.

The Companion Family.

We announced our family afflictions in our issue of last week. Miss Camerer is still quite low with the fever, but we indulge a hope that she may recover. She is under the treatment of Dr. G. W. Burket of our town, who is doing all that medical skill and an experienced practice of years can suggest, which, added to the influence of the prayers of the saints, we hope may restore her speedily, and afford her an opportunity of doing the work, the neglect of which has caused her much regret. Others of the family are not entirely well, but we enter no complaint.

We also intimated last week that on account of the sickness we could not use our power press, and hence were obliged to print our paper on a hand press. We had some idea of the labor it would require to work off so large an edition by so slow a process, and therefore we did not undertake to issue the full sheet, and we did well, too, for our paper was on press from Friday afternoon until Tuesday evening, even with the half sheet. We have now made arrangements by which we expect to be enabled to use our own press for this issue, and hereafter; and hence hope to publish the full sheet again.—We are however short of a hand, one of our printers having been called home by the sickness of his sister, but we hope to get one in his place.

The interruption in our issues has caused us much painful regret, and we have had much planning and contri ving. At one time we though we should be obliged to remov our press elsewhere, and if w had had fixtures for running i by hand we would likely hav done so; but moving the steam apparatus forbade it. But w trust in the generosity of ou patrons, and hope that, having now so plainly stated the cir cumstances, we need make n further apology.

Visits.

During our absence at Phila delphia, brother Enoch Eby an wife, and brother J. J. Emmert of Ill., and brother Samuel A Moore, of Pa., visited ou home.

On last Thursday night El der Daniel Fry and wife, lodge with us for the night, and nex morning departed westward.— Our brethren and friends wil find our "latch string" out fo them at all times, whether w are at home or abroad.

Notice of District Meeting.

The District Meeting for Western District of Pennsylvania, will be held, (if the Lord will) in the Elklick branch, on Monday, April 26th, 1869. The meeting will be at the big meeting-house, Elklick branch, Somerset Co., Pa., 3 miles west of Meyers' Mills, and about the same distance north of Salisburg.

The brethren expect preaching to commence on Friday evening previous; which arrangements will be published in due time.

It is very desirable that all the branches of this District be represented by delegates. We also invite old brethren from other Districts to come and assist us.

Dear Sister: The sisters do lay aside their bonnets and shawls before they wash feet. Where I live, we have no Supper to rise from, only a table.

HANNAH KNAUFF.

Covington, Ohio.

Sister Cart's Query.

I see in the last Companion, dated February 2nd, an answer to the query, why the sisters do not lay aside their garments at feet-washing. Brother P. R. Wrightsman answers in this way, that they all do lay aside their garments, the garments of their feet, and thus imitate our great Leader. I cannot see the connection. Why would our Lord lay aside his shoes and stockings, if he did not have his feet washed? I have not yet read that he had his feet washed, but he became a servant and washed his brethren's, hence no need that he should lay aside the garments of his feet. I think he laid aside his mantle which was a loose garment, or garments such as would be an inconvenience or encumbrance to him while in this humble act of service. So also the sisters do, (at least in this part of the country).—We lay aside our shawls and bonnets, and divest us of all encumbrance.

MARY ROBER.

Brother John Murray, Marshalltown, Iowa, says: We have not been doing much in the good cause lately. In the last year we received 34 members: a few over the half by letter. In this year only received one yet, and were obliged to expel one; so we have not gained much so far in this year.

Proposed Ministerial Visits.

If the Lord will, I will be at Tiffin Station on the 17th of February to commence a meeting in that congregation on the 18th, and remain in that congregation until the next week. Then go to brother Noah Hendrics' congregation, remain there until the 1st day of March.—Then go into brother J. P. Ebersole's congregation, remain in that congregation until the 8th of March.

The brethren in those congregations will make arrangements for meeting as they see proper. I expect brother D. Peck to be with me at first part of these meetings.

Brother Henry: — In looking over the last Companion, (No. 5,) which just came upon our table, (although two days later than usual,) I have noticed in your "editorial column," that you are still able to "furnish several hundred sets of back numbers of the present volume," and you hope "not to be obliged to lose them." You would like if your "friends all over the United States" would "make one more effort," to reach the 3000 subscribers, and thus establish the enlarged paper. I for one of the friends of the enlarged paper shall make a hard effort once more to add several names. And I hope by the assisting grace of God, to be able in a week or two to send several more in addition to what I have sent in already. I think our branch (Berlin) is not solicited as thoroughly as it might be.

I would further say to my co-agents, let us once more make an effort, and we shall have the desired number. "Never trying, has never accomplished anything." I should judge that there are far over one hundred who have labored with me in raising readers for that valuable paper, the Companion. And if there should be only one hundred, let us go manfully to work once more. And I should think we ought on an average, secure three or at least two. I will furnish my quota, (although it is at the "eleventh hour.") What say you, my coagents?

Methinks sometimes it looks rather dark or selfish, when it is claimed that there are over one hundred thousand members in the Brotherhood, (and it is generally claimed to be pretty well off,) that scarcely three thousand, can be found who are willingly to support a religious weekly paper.

Brother John Arnold of Milford, Ind, under date of Feb. 5th, says: "The Companion comes regular and is a welcome visitor to me, but I do not know why the brethren do not more generally take it. Before the Companion was printed, I could raise upwards of 40 names for the Gospel Visitor. Jesse Calvert and I obtained a list of names for the Visitor and also for the Companion. We can scarcely get a brother to take both. I take both and then do not have reading matter sufficient. I do think some of the br'n are doing harm in accusing others for using bir words. Let brethren express themselves in the easiest manner they know how, and then by the general discourse we can tell what they mean. I have no dictionary but feel the need of one."

Dear Brother:—The Companion is a welcome visitor to me. It makes me feel glad to hear from the brethren and sisters in other parts of the country, which otherwise I would be deprived of. The good counsel we receive every week makes me feel as if I could not do without it. I am always glad to read good news. But I cannot help saying some brethren's articles are too long for me and for a great many others. Dear brethren, let us be careful and write more briefly. We like to hear from as many brethren as possible. I hope no brother will become offended at this. Let us live up to the Golden Rule.

Brother Henry; The brethren and sisters here in the Antioch congregation have had another season of rejoicing. Brethren George and Jacob Cripe from near Pierceton and South Bend, Ind., paid us a visit and preached for us twice a day for eight days, resulting in 22 accessions to the church by baptism, a majority of whom were young people, mostly brethren's children. It is needless to say that this made our brethren and sisters rejoice in seeing their children coming home to the fold of Jesus. This makes a total of between forty-five and fifty that have been added to the church since last fall.

P. S. By way of explanation, I wish to say that the report of our meeting last fall, did not contain my signature through oversight.A. L

Brother Henry:—I herewith give you a brief account of a recent visit to the brethren in Columbiana, Stark and Mahoning counties, Ohio.

I left home on the 19th of January and arrived at Bayard Station on the P. & Cleveland R. R. on the evening of the 20th, where I was met by brother Aaron Shively and conveyed to a meeting-house near brother John Nicholson's, where there was an appointment for meeting. We found the people assembled to hear the Word. We continued there until Friday P. M., when we went to the Brethren's Meeting-house near Reading. (This is in the Georgetown congregation.) We continued in this place until Monday evening. Our meetings here were all largely attended, and had very good order. On Tuesday we went to Freeburgh; two appointments.—Wednesday went to Stark county in brother Daniel Peck's congregation. Remained there till Friday noon.—Had very interesting meetings.—Friday evening went to Minerva; spoke in the "Disciple's House," to a large and attentive audience.—Saturday evening met in the Liberty meeting-house. Remained until Monday morning. The last two places are in the Georgetown congregation. Our meetings were all well attended and had good order; but we did not see any immediate results by additions the Church, but the members seemed to be much revived and strengthened.

Monday, Feb. 1st, brother M. Shively took me to Moultrie, where I took the cars for Columbiana.—Arrived at Columbiana in company with brother Lewis Glass and brother John Clement, who remained to continue the meeting when I left. After dining with our old and beloved brother Henry Kurtz, we were taken to the Mahoning meeting-house, where we remained until Wednesday noon. Our meetings here were interesting. May God revive his work here.

Wednesday afternoon I was taken to Columbiana, and in company with brother Henry and sister Kurtz, we took tea, or rather supped with sister C. A. Haas who is still in her professional calling. She is now Principal in the graded school in Columbiana. We spent the evening pleasantly, and at 11 P. M. I took leave of this interesting family; and getting aboard the night Express, I arrived at Pittsburg at 2:20, A. M. Then by way of Washington, I arrived at home about 3 P. M. on the 4th inst. Found all well.—Thanks to God for his guardian care. I formed many interesting acquaintances, both in the Church and out, whose kindness will be thankfully remembered. May God bless and save us all. Amen.

Fraternall yours,

JOHN WISE.

Scenery Hill, Pa., Feb. 5, '69.

Brother Holsinger:—I will give you and the friendly readers of the Companion a few items of Church news from Spring Run branch.

On the 10th of May last 7 were received by baptism. Oct. 7th and 8th, (at our Love-Feast) 4; Oct. 25th, 3; and at another time, 2; and Dec. 25th, 1;—making in all 17 admissions to the Church, baptized at Spring Run meeting-house.

In Dry Valley there have been some added to the Church but do not know the number. All the above that I know anything about, except one or two, were young and some very young.

On Wednesday evening, Dec. 23, a series of meetings commenced at this place and were ably conducted and well attended every evening and every forenoon until Sunday evening following, at which time a very young maiden entered the liquid stream and gave herself unto the Lord as calmly on that very cold Christmas day as if it had been in mid-summer.

Brethren, especially those who proclaim "good news" and "glad tidings," do not only make this one of your "passing-ways" but even one of your stopping places. McVeytown Station, Mifflin county, Pa., on the Pa. R. R., is only 2 miles distant from Spring Run Meeting-house.

EMMA BOLLINGER.

McVeytown, Pa

Brother Holsinger:—Brethren Joseph Leedy and Jacob Cripe commenced preaching here on Friday evening, January 22nd, and continued over Sunday. Five more added to the church.

This is encouraging to this little branch of the church, 33 having been added during the autumn and winter. On the 22nd, brethren Whipple and Norman Workman were chosen to the ministry. May they be enabled, by the assistance of the Holy Spirit, to "keep that which is committed to their trust."

Business.

ADVERTISERS will please observe our terms which we publish in every issue. NINE (9) words will be accepted as a line. By remembering this each advertiser will know just what it will cost to insert what he wishes to have published. Thus, he will count the number of words in the advertisement, which he will divide by 9, dropping the remainder if any. If one insertion only is desired, the amount must be multiplied by 20. Thus an advertisement of 70 words would be reckoned 8 lines, and will cost $1.60 for one insertion, and $1 20 for each subsequent insertion; or if to be published for a year, 80 cents for each insertion, or $40 for 8 lines for one year.

The cash should accompany each order.

K. Heckman, Plymouth, Ind. If the brother is poor, and yet honest, give him his own time. I do not hold my agents responsible last year, for what they could not collect.

Samuel A. Miller, Spring Creek, Va. A package leaves this office every week, and we think you should get the papers. The fault is not here. Let us know what numbers each subscriber has lost and we will try to supply, if they do not yet come to hand.

John G. Glock, Shirleysburg, Pa. The trunks were received.

Elias Plank, Wolcot, Ind. Your paper is sent regularly from this office to "Wolcott, White Co., Ind," in the package to that place. What numbers did you lose?

D. F Hartsough, Maxville, Ohio. It was a neglect of ours. It will come all right now, and will be all right when you will have forgiven us the oversight.

Jos. Stitzel, Mt. Carroll, Ill. By some means, whether your fault or ours we know not, brother Rowland's paper was sent to Milledgeville, until notified by the P. M. of that place, to change it to Lanark, which has now been done. If he will call at Milledgeville, he can obtain the back Nos.

Allen Boyer, Lena, Ill. Was an oversight. Have sent back Nos., and beg pardon.

John McClintock, Liberty, Ill. Wm. Lierly's paper is now being sent to Liberty, and has been for some time. Inquire for the back numbers, and if all do not come to hand let us know.

Isaac Price, Sweetykill, Pa. Thank you; a word of approbation and encouragement works charmingly upon our nerves. Write for publication that we may share your kind words to our readers.

J. L. Beaver. We do not know when the new edition of German Hymn Books will be printed. The committee has not yet had a meeting. A meeting had been appointed on last Christmas, but was recalled, for what reason we have not learned. We have had repeated inquiries for the books, and hope the committee will discharge their duties promptly. There is no good reason why the books should not be ready by next Annual Meeting. We will keep you posted on the progress of the work, so far as it will be imparted to us.

Brother G. W. Wine, Ottobine, Va., will please give us the address of those brethren at Pocahontas, as sister H. Knauff wishes to send them a copy of Companion, and has paid for it.

D I E D.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

At the residence of her son Levi, in Spring Run branch, Mifflin county, Pa., January 24, sister MARGARET SWIGART, aged about 66 years. Funeral services by brother Enoch Eby, from the words: "Set thy house in order," &c. The family having finished their breakfast left her eating, and when found, her head was touching the floor and her body still on the chair. The family physician was called, and pronounced Apoplexy the cause of her death. S. W. BOLLINGER.

In the Silver Creek Church, Ogle county, Ills., February 7th, sister ANN REBECCA MILLER, daughter of friend John and sister Susan Miller, aged 16 years, 5 months and 2 days. She was a very exemplary member of the Church; and while we feel to sympathize with the bereaved parents we have the assurance that their loss is her eternal gain. Funeral services from 1 Thess. 5: 8—11, by Elder Samuel Garber, assisted by the writer. D. E. PRICE.

In the Conemaugh district, Cambria Co., Pa., January 27th, PETER RAGER, aged about 63 years.

Friend Rager died very suddenly, being sick only a few hours. He leaves a widow and several children to mourn their loss of a husband and father. This is a loud call to one and all to prepare to meet their God.—Funeral services by the writer.

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

In Salem branch, Montgomery county, O., our friend PETER GOOD, on the 27th ult., aged 76 years, 1 month and 14 days. Funeral services by brother Abraham Detrich and others. D. H. BRUMBAUGH.

In the Hudson Church, Ills., Dec. 27th, 1868, brother NICHOLAS MICHAEL, in the 72nd year of his age.

The disease was Cystitis. He leaves a wife and 5 children to mourn their loss, which we trust is his great gain. He suffered much, but bore his pains with Christian composure. He desired to depart and go to his reward, and so felt asleep on the 9th day of his illness. Funeral sermon postponed on account of the absence of a dear son who will soon return. T. D. LYON.

Visitor, please copy.

In the Springfield Church, Noble county, Indiana, Jan. 14th, EMMA LUCY DREIBELBIS, daughter of Samuel and sister Dreibelbis, aged 3 years and 1 month, less one day. Funeral services by the brethren, from Matthew 18: 3, by brother C. Weaver and the writer. JOSEPH EBY.

On the 6th instant, of Typhoid Fever, SUSANNA STOUFFER, daughter of brother David Beshoar. Age 37 years, 1 month and 15 days. Funeral occasion improved from John 11: 25, latter clause, by brethren Wm. Kaufman, Ezra Smith, and others.

M. BASHOAR.

In Aughwick congregation, January 27th, JAMES OSCAR, son of friend Thomas and sister Elizabeth GILES, aged 2 years, 5 months and 16 days. Occasion improved by the writer from James 4th chapter and 14th verse. JOHN G. GLOCK.

In the Shade Mill's branch, Alleghany Co., Md., Nov. 22nd, 1868, brother WILLIAM ROBESON, aged 61 years, 3 months and 26 days. Funeral sermon preached on Dec. 20, by Elder C. G. Lint and Silas C. Keim.

Visitor, please copy.

On January 20th, 1869, at the house of brother David Livengood, in the Elklick branch, Somerset county Pa., brother DANIEL LIVENGOOD, aged 65 years, 2 months and 12 days. Funeral sermon preached by brethren Jonathan Lichty and John Forney, (both from Illinois.) from 1 Cor. 15: 21—23. C. G. LINT.

In the Naperville Church, Dupage county, Illinois, Jan. 21st, HANNAH, daughter of brother Jonathan WEIDMAN. Her age was almost 17 years. She came to her death by the 7 o'clock P. M. passenger train running over her. She was killed instantly. On the 23rd she was buried at the brethren's burying ground at the Meeting-house. Funeral services by the brethren.

Also, January 31st, infant daughter of brother Henry and sister Nancy MARTIN. Little Anna had to leave this world with that dread disease, Scarlet Fever. She was buried Feb. 2nd, at the same place as the above.—Funeral service by the brethren. Age, between 2 and 3 years.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

"All Hail!"

LORD'S DAY MORNING.

Lovers of beautiful scenes, let me congratulate you on our blessed, happy privilege of entering the empty tomb in the garden where Angels, wondering, joyful Angels, were waiting to pour out of their full cup of bliss, into broken, loving hearts. At the distance of more than eighteen hundred victorious gospel years, let us who name the name of Jesus, the all-conquering Messiah, let us often amid our weekly cares, come here to be refreshed; here to look at the "stone rolled away," and feel that same power, roll away our sins, and sorrows,—and be glad to know that there is a heavenly ministry that anticipates our helpless, virtuous wants, and will roll "the stone away." Only let us come, by day or night, with hearts as true, love as chaste, as those dear sisters long ago, whose fortitude and preseverance was more costly in the sight of God, than all the crushed spices, in their arms, for their dear Master's embalmment.

But when the 'First day of the week' comes, let us especially apply ourselves to this triumphant celebration of our risen Lord. Let us with the "spirit and the understanding" commemorate the eternal wonders of this day, else our worship in the congregation, is much a blank. But by our needful retirement, our solitude is made bright, and richly consoling, while with no ticket of admission but the gospel covenant, no price but the blood of the sacred "Nazarine," we are welcomed in, to "see the place where the Lord lay."

Come, let us go into this garden of the resurrection, called the garden of the olive press; come, let us fill our vessels with oil, to keep our little lamps alive, until the Bridegroom comes, if it is until the cockcrowing, or in the morning. Come, we will see the place of Joseph's sepulcher, "hewn out of a solid rock," and consecrated above all vaults and tombs, by the presence of the destroyer of death—hopeful couch for all true believers. Come, we'll hear the shining ones speak softly, and encouraging our timid, weeping sisters. Indeed they dropped good words for us:—"Fear not, ye seek Jesus." They told those sisters where to go, and what to say,—see them, see them,—how they haste; now they tremble with fear, now with joy. They question as they flee: they cannot realize in their once hopeful, now crushed, hopeless heart, the truth dearer to them than all the world, that "he is risen." We'll look after them,—we see them run, we see them stop, see them rush together, and fall to the earth.—See! One meets them—the more than ever-beautiful, the "all-together lovely," Jesus!—Come near, dear sisters, this part of the scene and one other in this dear garden, seems sacred to mother Eve's poor penitent daughters. O, be encouraged. See! they are prostrate at his wounded feet; with clasped hands, they murmur "Rabbi, rabbi;" they worship him. O the transport of that moment, fearing the manly stranger they must meet. He breaks their quiet hasty retreat, saying to them: "All hail," or great joy to you all! Listen sisters, 'tis that same rich voice, "As the sound of the dulcimer sweet, that is heard in the shadows of death, saying to us, "All hail!"

"Big Words."

Under the above heading have appeared two Articles in No. 4, present Vol. of the Companion, both of which have their merits, & in fact very few articles come to us through the Companion that are wanting in this respect.

But the various authors who have written for the Companion, whether they have used polysyllables, dissyllables, trisyllables, whether "Big words," or small words, they have generally used kind words.—This is what we want, brethren, and the more the better. But whether the words be great or small, be sure that kindness be so manifested that we will forget whether the words are small or great, after the reading. Since such Heavenly influences are realized in our minds.

For the Companion.

Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ.

This command enjoins upon us a very important duty, which, if carried into effect under all circumstances, will contribute very much to the mutual enjoyment, comfort and happiness of the brotherhood generally. It presents an idea of mutual dependence, showing clearly that we cannot live without each other's sympathy and aid. We all have our burdens in life of some character or other, therefore the duty of bearing with and being for-bearing towards one another as becomes brethren born into the same divine family by the God of all grace. These burdens are of a variety of character. Some besetting sin that, in an unguarded hour, will show itself, and cling to us with the tenacity of a viper, exhausting every vestage of the vitality of the divine life which causes us, in our conflict for freedom to exclaim with the apostle Paul; "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death." Now we have fathers in Zion, then young men, and lastly babes in Christ; and according to their several stages of progress in the divine life are their respective burdens. Those most advanced and experienced in the christian race we should think have less trials, and troubles, and when they meet with a conflict, know what amount of grace it takes to overcome. But the younger and more inexperienced soldiers of the cross will often get into the thickest of the contest, and therefore need the strong arm of veterans to help bear the burden and the heat of the day, while the tender lambs of the flock must be nurtured and fed with the dainties from Heaven's great commissary stores—"the sincere milk of the word."

Though these young soldiers are inexperienced in the handling of the "sword of the spirit" and need the encouragement and discipline of the young men and fathers in Israel; yet they can help bear burdens for their senior brethren. Their tuneful notes and melodious voices in singing the songs of Zion; their frequent and regular attendance in the services of the sanctuary, all combine to cheer and animate their fathers and mothers in Zion. Then, again, we all have burdens in life of a temporal character, which makes us mutually dependent on one another for assistance and support to help bear our respective burdens. O vain man thou that boastest of thy independance! If God had ushered you into existence in the full stature of manhood, fed you as he feeds the raven of the forest, spreading out to you a continuous banquet, clothed you as he does the lily of the valley, made you a little higher, instead of a little lower than the angels, and endowed you with the attributes of the Deity, you might then, vaunt your independence, and proclaim your sovereignty; but since the reverse is our condition commercially, morally and religously, among all castes and grades of humanity, we all have to learn to labor for and to wait on each other, the rich as well as the poor, the Satrap on his throne as well as the beggar in his hovel.—The wealthy man with his large possessions and many fields of ripe golden grain, must depend on the day labor to bear the burden of the harvest, while the laborer's burden is to provide his family with food and raiment which he is enabled to do by the farmers liberal pay for labor. Whatever profession avocation or calling to chose in life, we expect by it to gain a livelihood, and to make an honest and respectable living in any legitimate location, imposes upon us a certain amount of responsibility. The burden of the mind is success which depends much upon individual industry, economy, exertion and a shrewd management of time and means, with a proper encouragement from those upon whom we depend for patronage. No individual, no family, no community or nation ever held out long when attempting to maintain their independence in every particular. The farmer is dependant on the consumer,—the laborer, the merchant and mechanic; and as a body their consumption of cereals, and products of the dairy and garden, make a market for his crops. The merchant needs the patronage of all classes to insure success. He must have his customers to make purchases and relieve him of his stock of merchandise. What a community of interest is interwoven with our religous, social and commercial life! What folly, therefore, for one to say to another, 'I have no need of thee.' We think the following go-pel admonitions, such as, "Bear ye one another's burdens," "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you," "Do good to all men, especially to the household of faith," "and in honor preferring one another," if carried into effect will unite us as brethren in the "unity of the spirit and the bond of peace," that no "gates of hell cannot prevail against us." Prompted by the Love of God, we will keep our army together; not a fellow-soldier will we neglect, but do him good, help him along, bear his burden, and because we love God we cant help but love him that is begotten of Him, and thus "fulfil the law of Christ," knowing that unless we fulfil this law we forfeit our claims to the "inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away." E. S. MILLER.

Hagerstown, Md.

:o:

Be at thy Post.

"Woe to them that are at ease in Zion, and trust in the mountain of Samaria, which are named chief of the nations, to whom the house of Israel came." Amos 6: 1.

My christian friends: Are we at ease in Zion?—Have we not a work to do, or do we feel that all is well, because we have attached ourselves to the mountain of Samaria? which is Christ's church, the principle name of all nations, the city of our God, into whom we gentiles have been engrafted, and partaken of Israel. Shall we be seated in our stool of do-nothing, take our ease, eat, drink, and be merry? Nay, verily, the woe is pronounced upon us if we do so. We are now only hired servants in the house of the Lord. We must humble ourselves and become laborers in his vineyard, not by constraint, but of a ready mind; not filled up with the vanities of this world which the natural eye lusteth after, nor with the deceitfulness of riches, nor the great and high name of the world.—What saith the Lord? "Though thou exalt thyself as the Eagle, and though thou set thy nest among the stars, thence will I bring thee down, saith the Lord." Obadiah 1: 4.

We shall be humbled if we are too proud to walk with Christ here in this life. Being ashamed of him, he hath appointed a day in which we shall be humble.—Let us then bow to the feet of Jesus, and take up the cross which he laid down for us, and put on the yoke which binds us all together, and press forward with unistaken zeal, doing whatsoever thy hand findeth to do in the house of the Lord. Let us not be at ease for woe is written; neither let us be of them that draw back, with whom God is not pleased, which cause discord among the yokefellows, and make their yoke heavy upon their own shoulders.

MARY RORER.

:o:

Christian is the law of growth; and the reason which very many have not the spirit of the Lord Jesus, and are not abundant in the consolations of the Gospel, is that they will not do the work of the church. Some of them say: "Could we stand in holy places and minister to multitudes of people; but God given us the tongue of eloquence, and the power of persuasion, oh! how we would delight to address vast assemblies!" But to visit the stranger and the fatherless, to carry bread to the hungry, and to clothe the naked, this is a work in which the heart does not take delight. They fancy no good would be done; and the reason to day why many of us are enveloped in mists, and have gloom upon our hearts, scarcely knowing how to raise the heart upward to God, is because we are neglecting our duty. There are neglected strangers in the city, there are widows and fatherless who ought to be comforted; there are the suffering and the sorrowing who ought to be cheered; and because we neglect to minister to the destitute, and because we neglect to do the work which God places in our reach, and for which he opens for us doors of opportunity, we fail to grow in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. There never yet set out a trembling spirit to visit a suffering widow, or a fatherless child, or persons in sorrow and affliction, but, while upon his journey, the Lord Jesus Christ joined him, and while he endeavored to speak words of consolation, the Spirit of God came into his heart; for Jesus hath said: "Lo, I am with you always."

:o:

A Word on Family Prayer.—Perhaps some of you say, "I am so ignorant that it is no good trying to have prayer in our family." You make a mistake there. It is not grand words that God wants, but honest hearts. God offers you his Holy Spirit to help you in your prayer and to teach you to pray. Jesus says, "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give His Holy Spirit to them that ask Him!" Ask God for the help of His Holy Spirit, and you will find that it is far better than all the help that any man can give you. —British Workman.

:o:

Some men will follow Christ on certain conditions: If he will not lead them through rough roads; if he will not enjoin on them any painful tasks; if the sun and wind do not annoy them; if he will remit a part of his plan and order. But the true christian, who has the spirit of Jesus will say as Ruth said to Noami: "Whither thou goest, I will go," whatever dangers and difficulties are in the way.

:o:

The morality of some people is like their crockery; they have two sets, one for show and one for use; and they both answer the same purpose, the one satisfies the minds of other people, the other their own. But this much may be said of both, that however well they may serve the purpose of this world they are of no value for the next.

:o:

Dr. Staughton, fifty years ago the most popular preacher in Philadelphia, was accustomed to preach less than thirty minutes, and to bring a whole service within an hour. When asked by one of his theological students to explain how he could make his sermons so brief, he replied, "By not talking nonsense."

On Matthew 11:11.

I promised in a previous section of this article to endeavor to elucidate that most perplexing and intricate problem, viz.: How John the Baptist was less than the least in the kingdom of Heaven.

Now we want you to bear it constantly in mind that wherever the name Esaias occurs in the New Testament, that it is the same as Isaiah in the old, and also wherever the name Elias occurs in the New Testament that it also corresponds with Elijah in the old. This, then, is the key with which we expect to unlock this perplexing mystery.

Elijah was a prophet of God, who lived in the days of king Ahab, and who was sent to reprove that wicked monarch for his departure from the worship of the true God, and for engaging in the idolatrous worship of the heathen deities in worshiping their favorite god—Baal. History furnishes us no account of the birthplace, or of the parentage of Elijah. The first account we have of him was his appearance before king Ahab when rebuking him for his departure from the worship of the true and the living God.

Elijah the prophet seems to have had another, and a very important mission to fill,—that of demonstrating to the world that, "the Lord was the only true God." There seems to have been considerable controversy going on in the world, at the time of the appearance of Elijah, whether there were any gods save the Jehovah above.

The final settlement of this dispute, you will remember, was one part of the mission of Elijah when he presents himself before king Ahab about the conclusion of the three years famine which he had brought upon the Earth. He then and there purposes to test the claims of their respective gods—Jehovah and Baal—by a fair and impartial trial in order to ascertain which is the true God.

Now we particularly desire the reader to notice the circumstances in the case of this trial, as they have a very conspicuous part to perform in the elucidation of this very interesting and important subject, as indeed I regard this as the very key.

We notice in the case referred to, in the trial between the god of the heathens, and the God of Israel, that the prophet Elijah requested the king to assemble all the priests of Baal, four hundred in number, while he alone, as the prophet of God, would endeavor to demonstrate clearly against such overwhelming odds, that the God of Israel was the God. Elijah orders that there be a sacrifice furnished to each party, he, himself representing the Lord's side, and those, four hundred priests representing Baal. He further orders, that in order that there be no deception used, that when the altars and the sacrifice have been prepared that they shall be thoroughly immersed with water. This seems to have been a very wise precaution upon the part of the prophet Elijah, as the trial was to be decided by fire; but we think that before we are done with the case that we shall see that it had a far more important signification than merely to guard against deception.

We have neither time nor space in the limits of this article to notice all the particulars attending the establishment of the claims of the respective deities. All these may be learned by a careful perusal of the history of the case. That which I more especially want borne in mind, is the Baptism and offering of this sacrifice by the prophet Elijah, because, as I have already remarked, they have a very conspicuous part to perform in the solution of this problem.

When the trial come on, the priests of Baal offered their sacrifice from morning until evening, calling upon Baal all the while, saying, "Oh Baal, hear us: thou art a god, Oh Baal, hear us." But to all their entreaties, their agonize and cries there was no response. When they had given up in despair, and the hour for the offering of the evening sacrifice had arrived, then "Elijah the prophet prayed and called upon the God of Heaven, that he would demonstrate that he was the Lord," aud besides him there was none other, "when, lo the Heavens were opened," and the fire decended from God out oj Heaven, lightening up the sacrifice, while the voice, (or shout,) rose from the surrounding multitude, saying, "the Lord he is God, the Lord he is God."

Here we see then how Elijah the prophet demonstrated and made clearly "manifest unto Israel," that Jehovah was the Lord God omnipotent. When he had thus accomplished his mi-ion, as we have seen in the above extraordinary case—he then left this world in a very singular, and extraordinary manner. The full history of the translation of the prophet Elijah may be read with interest and profit in the history of that great and extraordinary person. I can at present give no more of the circumstances than I think to be absolutely necessary to the solution of the problem which we are endeavoring to solve. We will therefore leave this part of the subject for the present, and turn our attention to its co-incidence under a different dispensation.

In the last chapter of the book of Malachi, we hear the Lord declaring by the mouth of the prophet, and saying, "Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord, and he shall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers," &c. Now I wish one particular point in this declaration specially noted, viz, that he says Elijah the prophet, and not Elijah a prophet.—Here then, we have the Lord making use of the definite article "the" as descriptive of what kind of prophet he would send them, and also definitely pointing out who that prophet should be. The definite article "the" (as we all know) points out, or refers to a particular object; and here in this instance I hold that it refers to the old prophet Elijah. Now if the Lord had used the indefinite article "a," then the prophet no doubt would have had a very different impression, and consequently would have looked for the coming of some prophet whose name should be called Elijah. But that they had a different impression, is evident from various circumstances which I shall hereafter give as I proceed with the elucidation of the subject.

If, then, the Lord had promised to send them Elijah the prophet; and if also, upon the veracity of God,—having the most implicit confidence in his promises,—the people were anxiously looking for the fulfilment of this promise, let me ask, when and where, and how was it fulfilled? or is it to be fulfilled in the future?

"There was, in the days of Herod, King of Judea, a certain priest named Zacharias of the course of Abia, and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and they were both righteous before God, walking in all the ordinances of the House of the Lord, blameless; and they were both old and well-stricken in years; and his wife Elizabeth was barren—And it came to pass, that as he executed his office in his course, that his lot was to burn incense; and the whole congregation was without praying, and there appeared unto him an Angel, standing on the right side of the altar, and fear come upon him, but the Angel said fear not Zacharias, for thy prayer is heard, and thy wife Elizabeth shall conceive and bear a son, and thou shalt call his name John."

Now I wish it distinctly kept in mind that the prophet Malachi had prophesied prior to this event which we have here recorded, of the coming of Elijah, the prophet. We also find a prediction in the prophesy of Isaiah, that, "A virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and his name shall be called Emmanuel;" but when the same Angel, viz., Gabriel, which was sent to Zacharias to announce the birth of John, was sent to Virgin Mary to announce the birth of Emmanuel, he told her to call his name Jesus. If Mary would have called her son's name Emmanuel as had been foretold by the prophet, there would have been no mistaking who he was, but inasmuch as he was called by a name different, and contrary to their expectations, they failed to recognize him; hence the Apostle John says: "he was in the World, and the World was made by him, and the World knew him not." So also in the case of John the Baptist. If he had been called Elijah, or in others words, Elias, then there would have been no mistaking who he was; but because he was called John, or a different name from what had been predicted, therefore, they failed to recognize him; hence "the Savior" says on a certain occasion, that "Elijah has indeed come, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed," or pleased.

Now that the people were expecting the return of Elijah, we gather from the following facts. 1. When John began his public ministry, the priests sent messengers to him to ask who he was. They therefore asked John, "art thou the Christ? And he confessed, and denied not, but said, I am not. Art thou Elijah? (or Elias?) But he answered, No. They say, who art thou then? that we may give an answer to them that sent us? He says, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness: prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight."

Now here I contend, that although John does say, that he was not Elijah, he has reference to his name and not to his character; because we see, that when they put the question so pointed that he could no longer evade it, he then comes out and virtually acknowledges that he is Elijah, because he is doing the very thing that Elijah was to come to perform.

A second reason is based upon the circumstances of the transfiguration upon the Mount, where Moses and Elijah appeared and talked with the Savior; when the Disciples asked why the scribes say that Elijah must first come.—Jesus says that Elijah has indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed—or pleased—likewise shall the SON OF MAN suffer of them. When he had said this, they knew that he spake of John the Baptist. From this circumstance we learn that after John had performed his mission upon Earth, and had left the body, he was recognized as Elijah and not as John. A third reason which we offer, is the circumstance which occured at the crucifixion, when Jesus cryed out, "Eloi, Eloi," and one ran to give him drink, others said, let alone, let alone, let us see whether Elijah will come to take him down.

With all these facts and circumstances before us, we come to this conclusion, viz,—that the reason why John the Baptist is less than the least in the Kingdom of Heaven, is that he is not known there as John the Baptist but as Elijah the prophet.

Feet Washing.

In perusing the Companion, current volume, No. 4, my attention was attracted by an article written by brother Silas Thomas. The brother seems to advocate the single mode of feetwashing very strongly. On page 55, second column, he says: "It is not easy to conceive how he could have washed feet with one hand if it had been his purpose, by the same method, to establish the single mode. He did, however, not by an unexplained device, but by the distinct words one another, institute that mode, and would, no doubt, have ordained the double mode, in equally unmistakable language, if it had been in accordance with the divine will." We do not wish to contend with brother Thomas on the subject, but we desire stronger evidence, (and that from the Word of God,) in favor of the single mode, than that which he has brought forth in the article. The brother seems to put a great deal stress upon the words, "one another," which words have little or no bearing in favor of his argument, because they allude to the washing only, and not to the wiping. We may with just as much propriety, say that he instituted the double mode, by the same words "one another." Because they allude to the washing only, and not to the wiping. Hence the words, one another, will not need be emphasized particularly, as bearing strong argument in favor of the single mode of feetwashing.

Again he says: "We know we keep this ordinance as the brethren who have long since gone to their rewards, delivered it to us." He makes another quotation, and says: We should "Earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints;" which is right. But we would now ask, who was it that delivered the faith to the saints? Was it Germantown and Philadelphia? or even the ancient brethren of Germantown. We have a guide to go by which we hold in higher reputation, namely, the word of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"But if any one seems to be contentious, we have no such custom."

A few Thoughts.

In No. 1 of this Vol. we read a conversation on feetwashing by brother Wise. I heartily agree that the Church represents the body of Christ. I have no objections to my brethren's mode of practicing feetwashing, except one thing. Our old brethren frequently say, "change often in order that more brethren may have opportunity of washing also." Now brethren with the kindest of feelings allow me to suggest what I have thought for many years, and that is, no brother should wash more than one brother's feet in order that all can have the privilege of washing feet.

Feetwashing is a practice of humility. Now we know that simply having our feet washed is no humble act, but to wash feet is. I always feel happier when I wash my brother's feet, than when I only have my feet washed.

Brethren. I feel a delicacy to say much on the above subject, for fear you might think I am influenced by Thurman. Proverbs 6: 19 describes what W. Thurman is.

Nature.

God in the creation of all animate beings, formed in them certain congenial natures, and instincts, which are carefully adapted to the respective possessors.

So strange is the grand and peculiar organization of the animal kingdom, as well as the rational order, that no one nature can be appropriately suited to them all; hence we may justly come to the tenable conclusion, that God designed that a variety of natures should exist in all parts of the earth, in order that all things should serve for the use and benefit of each other, or be used for certain necessary purposes; hence the pine is useful, though weaker than the oak; the mild and delicate lamb is useful, as well as the strong and powerful elephant; likewise may the weak mind find an appropriate orbit, as well as the strong and elevated temperament: the former has his place and should work therein; while the latter has his noble work to perform, in a more elevated sphere; the former has his place, and sustains a relation to the carpenter, the one benefits the other and should be respected.

The mild nature of the lamb is in precise harmony with its finely constructed body; while the strong and robust elephant has a nature that is suited to his body in every respect: the shortness of his neck renders his trunk necessary to sustain his vitality.

All nature must harmonize with itself, as it is but the work of one Creator, who has made all things to benefit each other; hence the different natures and instincts are as useful to the world, as so many wild animals and sensitive beings to fill the earth, for its proper use and noble benefit, and still all have their places.

The pure and elevated cerebrums will look aloft and attempt to stand on high, while the vital temperament may cause another to stand lower in the estimation of knowledge, but each has his place and should be respected as the work of God's hands. So let nature be in harmony with itself, and the little lead the world and all will be in peace and harmony.

How to put off the old man.—Pass your hand over Deacon M's. head, and about an inch and a half above, and a little forward of the ears, you find a protuberance which phrenologists call the bump of acquisitiveness.

By nature the deacon lived Mammon; by grace he loved God. Between them there was continual war. Both to fight—one like Moses, the other like the Devil. As there was long war between the house of David and the house of Saul, so there was long war in the earthly house of the Deacon.

In the same church with Deacon M. was a poor brother. This poor man had the misfortune to lose his cow. She died. To get him another, the good deacon headed a subscription with five dollars, and paid it. This act disquieted Mammon. Mammon, with true Iscariot zeal, began to rant and rave: "Why this waste? charity begins at home; the more you give the more you may; let people learn to take care of themselves."

The deacon was a Baptist; but he found that the baptismal water did neither drown, wash away, or wash clean the old man. The tempter backed Mammon, and putting a glass to the Deacon's eye showed him, not the kingdoms and glories of this world, but the poor house, wretchedness, poverty and rags, and said: "All these things will your master give you in your old age as a reward of your charity."

To still these clamors, Deacon M. went to the destitute man, and told him he must give back the five dollars. The poor man returned them. This last act roused the new man, and now nature and grace stood face to face.

To give, or not to give, that is the question.

Thus stood the deacon, poising and balancing, and halting between two opinions. The deacon spoke: "My brother, some men are troubled with their old, women; I am troubled with my old man. I must put off my old man, as the Jews put off their new man crucify him, crucify him." Then unstrapping his pocket book, he took out a ten dollar bill and gave the poor man. "There," saith the deacon, "if my old man says another word, I'll give him twenty dollars."

Increasing Light.

Christianity has kept pace with science and the arts. At no previous date of the world's history has it been professed in greater purity of doctrine, by as great a number of human beings, and with so much of the respect and reverence of mankind. It is now more than ever the religion of the world. No other has such influence over the nations: no other is gaining strength: every other is on the wane. Every advance in science, every investigation of the ruins of the buried past, every step taken in the emancipation of the race, every change in the political relations of kingdoms and empires, serve but the more to confirm its claims, to illustrate its truth, to develop its energies, and to strengthen its hold upon the conscience and heart.—Everything indicates that ere long every other religion must give place to the religion of the Bible, and flee away as the shadows of night before the risen sun—Hatfield.

Paul's writings are full of Christ. In the first thirteen verses of Corinthians he refers to him thirteen times. Philip Henry's wise counsel was: "Preach a crucified Savior in a crucified style."

The infirmities of saints are recorded in the Word for our humbling and warning, and their graces for our imitation and encouragement.

Big Words.

Brother Henry:—Just coming as it were from the margin of the grave from another severe spell of my dreadful disease—hemorrhage, [spitting of blood.]—We dont feel much like writing, yet at same time wish to say something by way of explanation upon "Big Words," and your remarks upon the same. We hope therefore you will give us space in the Companion so that we may be understood.

You complain, [sarcastically too, we think,] of us being, two severe on big words. We take your remarks all in good heart and wear the cap where it fits, and we hope you will do the same in regard to what we have to say further. You are certainly mistaken about the prejudicial part. You have put a common word in the wrong place. My Webster's Unabridged, latest edition, says the meaning of the word prejudice, is "An opinion or decision of mind formed without due examination." That is to say, then, according to your remarks, that I have formed an opinion about big words without proper investigation of the subject, without fact or foundation. Let us see. You have prepared and laid before your readers lesson No. 1 taken from the Bible, with encouraging remarks, that those who could master this lesson, without a dictionary could apply for lesson No. 2. Please consider me an applicant.

We take a lesson from Companion and make the same proposition.

LESSON NO. I.

Stultification, orbs, walking-encyclopedia, iota, prognostication, relumed, fructification, authlete, premonition, propitious, perspicuity, undestructible, anticipatively, effulgence, dismerited, hypothesis, heaven-piercing-top, lave, poignant, allegory, syllogism, antithesis, obliquities, chronologic, incarcerative, contingencies, philosophically, astronomically, &c., And thousands more of the same caste from the same source.

These are high-flowing and swelling words which I am fearful most of your readers do not understand. Persons who can command such words as these, surely can talk plainer, and have in the place of these big words, words which can be readily understood by the common reader. Why, then, not have it so? for the swelling words sound as brass & tinkling cymbal [We have changed the orthography.—ED.] to our unlearned brother. How is our brother to be edified with such language? The command is to edify and build each other up.

Such language is not necessary in preaching the Gospel, because our religion is a plain one, and such words have a tendency to make it obscure, and of no effect. We are to use this world, but not abuse it. We can use these big words in talking about the affairs of this world; but when it comes to using them in religion, it is an abuse of the thing intended. Your paper is headed CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION; that is to say, it is Christ-like. Companion is one with whom we associate, and which we can understand. Please show your readers where Christ used any such bombastic highfalutin as seen in my lesson No. I. [There now, I have used a big word, and one not found in a dictionary. Well, I had as well use a word not found in a dictionary as any one else.]

You will admit, I think, that it is not Christ-like and companion like in this respect. We think, then, that our lesson No. I is a clear and occularly demonstrated fact, (another big word) and not prejudice.—Jesus adapted his language to the understanding of the people, so they might know and be saved. So too, if we have anything to say to the public, we should adopt such language as is best suited to their understanding, and not such as best suits us, regardless of the multitude; and we think anything short of this is proof that we write or preach to please ourselves, and to be seen and heard of men. If this be true, "verily we have our reward." We still say such are not worthy of any attention and it is your duty, and mine, and all, to call unto such and say: Zaccheus, Come down! I must abide at thy house to-day. Dont soar so high. Come down and be content to be on the same footing with your Master, and if you dont come down we cant dwell with you.

There are thousands of words in which we can express our meaning and be readily understood, and our speech be not "strained or irregular." This middle stand then will place the lambs in such a condition as they can get their food with pleasure, and thus avoid "Stiff necks and high racks." It will be necessary also not to have their food of a too heavy texture, or too highly-seasoned, so that they may be able to chew it well and thus help digestion and promote a healthy circulation. We are to avoid extremes, for they are never good. "In all cases of doubt take the side of safety;" and it is better to err on the safe side. Multiplication, misunderstanding, etc., are long words, but not what we call big words, for they are words we commonly use, and of course easily understood. They dont partake of the nature and caste of the words in my lesson No. 1.

The church has ordered us to preach the gospel, and in doing this we must of necessity use all of our influence against every thing that is calculated to hinder the cause of our Master. Hence our remarks on big words, for they are most assuredly clogs on the wheels of the Gospel Car and hinder its advancement, because they are not adapted to the understanding of the many.—We should never compromise the truth, and when we have anything to say publicly, officially, or otherwise, we should say it plainly. Yea, say it bluntly, if need be, rather than not be understood. There is too much of the spirit of compromise and smoothing things over these days at the expense of truth. It was not so with Jesus and his Apostles, for they were out and out and straight forward in all things. If any needed a rebuke, they got it, and that sharply too. No stopping to ask if it would hurt their feelings if told of a fault.

A certain ancient philosopher said on one occasion, "Give me a fulcrum or a place to rest my lever and I will raise the world." So with his Satanic Majesty, the devil, if he could succeed in putting big words enough in the mouths of Christ's ministers, he would soon blot Christianity out of existence, for it is one of his great levers by which he has succeeded but too well. A minister of Jesus and a physician are two of the most important characters of life, for one has charge of the soul and the other the body. We cant conceive of anything of more importance than soul and body. We all know then the importance of our doctor giving a plain and well-directed prescription, so that the right medicine may be administered and a cure affected speedily. But if it comes obscure & confused a consequent of it, is, the wrong treatment is given, and then confusion worse confounded, and the cure worse than the disease. So with the minister of Christ,—he knows that we are all lost and ruined—sinners, without the application of Jesus' blood. He must tell the sinner go, but tell him in such a way that he cannot be misunderstood, and if he dont succeed in winning the sinner, he will have the comforting assurence that his whole duty has been faithfully, plainly discharged, and his skirts clear.

When we talk of the Arts and Sciences and all the great affairs of this world, big words are proper in their places; but when we come to speak of Jesus and his great salvation, your big words are really an insult to the cause and we should scorn them and say, "get thee hence, Satan." I am a friend to education, but let everything be done in order.

Modus operandi pro-bono publico pro re nata, sine qua non,—or in other words, my manner of operation is to write for the public good as circumstances require, which is an indispensable condition.

Social Meetings.

In looking over the 5th number, present volume, I saw a piece written by brother David Bowman, rather putting down what brother Daniel Smith had written in regard to holding social meetings, which has rather an obscure tenor to my judgement. It seems to me when I read the expressions of brother Bowman there must be something wrong in some corner, or these two brethren would see alike, and hold forth the same doctrine regarding meetings of that nature. For my part when I read the article of Daniel Smith, I thought the tenor of the same had a strong tendency to edify the disciples of Jesus at large, and contains wholesome instructions, and the very essence of life which should be manifested throughout the whole fraternity. Brother Bowman holds forth in the first place: "and silence from all would imply that we were in sympathy with the article. But this I think is certainly not the case." I am sorry to hear from a dear brother that he does not sympathize with articles advocating the propriety of holding evangelical Social meetings, held in accordance with the instructions of St. Paul. First Cor 14: 27——40. It seems to oppose the instructions of Paul and the grant of the yearly meeting of 1858, article 40; and 1861, article 1. For such meetings we have authority in holy writ sufficient to build upon and backed up by the annual Council. Again I quote brother Bowman's language: "In my opinion such articles are calculated in their nature to sow discord in the brotherhood, both at home and abroad, and surely we already have discord and trouble enough in the church without sowing seed so prolific of contention." To sow discord and trouble in the church when a ministering brother advocates that lay-members should engage in prayer and admonition when convenient, is an assertion in my opinion to be repented of. For every page of the Gospel, holds forth quite plainly that "old things are passed away, behold all things are become new." Again, "except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." During the time of our apostacy and fallen state, we are deprived of life, and dead in sin and transgressions, and consequently in such a state we are blind, deaf, speechless and without action. But how is it when old things pass away, just now spoke of, do we not see, feel, hear, move, act, and speak of those who have been "dear and are now alike again, who were lost and are now found again?" I presume we do, we cannot withhold praise and thanksgiving from him who has rescued our souls out of the grasp of the adversary and destroyer. Praise him privately and in public, in word and in action, is the motto of the saints. Of course all in decency, and in order, as the Bible teaches, and where these virtues lack, there is a great, and probably the animation from above. Prayer is one of the main weapons the soldiers of Christ are equipped with. "Watch and pray" is the injunction of Christ upon all his followers. We have those social meetings in Dauphin Co. Pa., and have had for many years, and find them to be of a great benefit, to the House of God, and also to them which are yet outside. A new thing it is not as some assert, for the brethren had such a custom at least fifty years ago. The evening preceeding the regular meetings for preaching, they engage in social meetings.

Our Lord's life was a life of opportunities, because he was ready to take up the thread of life where he found it. It rebukes the life of many a disciple of his, whose door is never darkened, year after year, with a soul craving of him a knowledge of the bread of life. It rebukes many another, who so hedges himself within himself, by a passion for singularity, or by a cool indifference to the world's needs, that while the world may stand in awe of him, or even hate him, it wishes most of all to bury him out of sight.

The Pilgrim.

BY ISAIAH G. HARLEY.

There is a path pursu'd by few
A way not pleasing to the view,
A narrow lonely road;
Through hidden snares and open foes
That path the Christian pilgrim goes,
It leads to his abode.

With staff in hand he journeys on,
Each day he starts at early morn,
And travels with all speed;
The calls to stop he does not hear,
Leaves all behind that he holds dear,
Jesus is all he needs.

At times his journey does seem bright,
His home he loves is most in sight,
How happy does he feel.
But now a cloud it does appear,
And makes him faint and fill'd with fear,
And o'er his peace does steal.

Then here and there a place appears,
That rest, refreshes him, and cheers,
And animates his mind.
The hope of better things in view,
The promises he knows are true,
He journeys on to find.

His helmet of salvation bears,
The shield of faith he always wears,
His armor thus complete,
He fears no foe, but keeps the way,
Though through the desert it may lay,
And never makes retreat.

Thus forward he does daily go,
Prepared to fight with every foe,
That meets him on the way.
His conflicts here will soon be o'er,
And he'll be call'd to fight no more,
He's won "ETERNAL DAY."

Sweet then indeed will be his rest,
His Captain then pronounce him blest,
From HIM receive a CROWN."
Sorrow and sighing fled away-
His sun in that bright glorious day,
Will not again go down.

The Last Rose of Summer.

'Tis the last rose of Summer
Left blooming alone,
All her lovely companions,
Are faded and gone.
No flower of her kindred—
No rose-bud is nigh,
To reflect back her blushes,
Or give sigh for sigh.

I'll not leave thee, thou lone one,
To pine on the stem,
Since the lovely are sleeping,
Go sleep thou with them.
Thus kindly I scatter
Thy leaves o'er the bed,
Where thy mates of the garden
Lie scentless and dead.

So soon may I follow,
Where friendships decay,
And from love's shining circle,
The gems drop away;
Where true hearts lie withered,
And fond ones are flown,
Oh, who could inhabit
This bleak world alone.

Nearer Home.

One sweetly solemn thought,
Comes to me o'er and o'er—
I'm nearer home to-day
Than I've ever been before.

Nearer my Father's home,
Where the many mansions be:
Nearer the great white throne,
Nearer the Jasper sea.

Nearer the bounds of life,
Where we lay our burdens down,
Nearer leaving the cross.
Nearer gaining the crown.

But lying darkly between,
Wading down through the night,
Is the dim and unknown stream
That leads me at last to light.

Closer, closer, my steps
Come to the dark abysm,
Closer death to my lips
Presses the awful chrism.

Father, perfect my trust,
Strengthen the might of my faith,
Let me feel as I would when I stand
On the rock of the shore of death.

Feel as I would when my feet
Are slipping on the brink,
For it may be I'm nearer home,
Nearer now than I think!

Tobacco Chewers.

Brother Holsinger;—I enclose a slip containing a plain hint to tobacco chewers, which I have clipped from a newspaper; and as some of our brethren and others who attend our meetings, are guilty of the same practice, I send it to you for publication in the Companion, if you see proper, hoping that it may induce such to consider the impropriety of the filthy habit of soiling the floor of the house of God with the nasty juice of tobacco.

ROSIE SNOWBERGER.

New Enterprise Pa. Jan. 22nd.

One of the most indecent habits extant, is that of chewing tobacco in churches and spitting the disgusting filth over the floors, to the great inconvenience of ladies and the annoyance of gentlemen, who are frequently compelled to occupy the same seat. The man that cannot refrain from chewing tobacco during the hour of divine service, is a slave to a practice that he should make great exertions to free himself from, as the church is not a fit place for an exhibition of the filth he ejects. We would ask those who are in the habit of chewing tobacco in the churches and spitting upon the floors: what would you think of a man who would enter your parlor or sitting room and while there spit pools of tobacco juice on your floors and carpets? Your parlor is designed as a place in which to make your guest comfortable during his stay with you, and the church is designed as a place for the comfort of hearers during Divine services. Neither is it intended as a depository of filth; and a man is no more justifiable in violating the common proprieties of every day life while in church, than while in your parlor, and no gentleman will be guilty of such an impropriety in either case. We submit these remarks to the careful consideration of all who are in the habit of chewing tobacco in churches, with a full assurance that a few moments serious reflection will suffice to convince them of the heinousness of their offensive habits, and that they will hereafter refrain from chewing during Divine services.

Little Things.

Little words are the sweetest to hear; little charities fly furthest, and stay longest on the wing; little larks are the stillest, little hearts the fullest and little farms best tilled. Little books most read, and little songs the most loved. And when nature would make any thing especially rare and beautiful, she makes it little,—little pearls, little diamonds, little dews.

Everybody calls that little, which he loves best on earth. We once heard a good sort of a man speak of his little wife. We saw her, and she weighed two hundred pounds! We were surprised! But then it was no joke; the man meant it. He could put his wife in his heart, and have room for other things besides; and what was she but precious, and what was she but little?—B. F. Taylor.

Hardships of African Travel.

Dr. Krapf, having escaped from the attack made by a band of savages upon his party, was driven to wander about the forest until he had reached a place of comparative safety. After wandering some time, until he was weary, he continues: "Believing myself on the right track, I lay down behind a bush; for I was so wearied out that I could scarcely keep my feet, and for protection against the keen wind which blew over the plain I cut some dry grass and spread it over and under my body. Awakening after a few hours, I saw to the east a hill as it were on fire, the flames lighting up the whole country round. It occurred to me immediately to bend my steps toward that hill, fearing at daybreak to be met or noticed in the plain by the robbers, while I hoped to pursue my course unobserved in the mountain jungle which I should be sure to find there. The result proved that I was in the right; for, as I afterwards heard, the robbers kept up the pursuit of the flying Wakamba during the ensuing day. After I had started again I felt the pangs of hunger and thirst; the water in my telescope-case had run out, and that in the barrels of my gun which I had not drank had been lost on my way to Mount William, as the bushes had torn out the grass stoppers, and so I lost a portion of the invaluable fluid, which in spite of the gunpowder flavor imparted to it by the barrels, thirst had rendered delicious. My hunger was so great that I tried to chew leaves, roots, and elephant's excrement to stay it, and when day broke to break my fast on ants. The roaring of a lion would have been music in my ears, trusting he would provide me a meal. A little before daybreak I did hear a lion roar, and immediately afterward the cry of an animal, which however soon ceased, for, no doubt, the lion had seized his prey; but the direction from which the cry came was too distant for me to risk leaving my route to descend into the plain. For some time I marched along the barrier formed by the burning grass. It was a grand sight, and the warmth was very acceptable in the coolness of the night. August 28, when day dawned, I saw that I was a good way from Dana. I thanked God for his preservation of me during the night gone by, and commended myself to his protection for the coming day. I found that I was taking the right direction, although not on the same track which we had traveled when coming hither. Indeed, it often seemed as if an invisible hand was directing my steps; for I had invariably a strong sensation that I was going wrong whenever, by chance, I deviated from the right direction. Soon after daybreak I saw four immense rhinoceroces feeding behind some bushes ahead; they stared at me but did not move, and I naturally made no attempt to disturb them.—On the whole I was no longer afraid of wild beasts, and the only thought that occupied me was to reach Kitui as soon as possible. Coming to a sandpit with a somewhat moistish surface, like a hart panting for the waterbrooks, I anticipated the existence of the precious fluid, and dug into the sand for it, but only to meet with disappointment; so I put some of the moist sand in my mouth, which only increased my thirst. At about ten o'clock, A. M., I quite lost sight of the Dana district, and began to descend the mountain, reaching a deep valley about noon, when I came upon the dry and sandy bed of the river which we must have crossed to the south-west only a few days before. Scarcely had I entered its bed when I heard the chattering of monkeys, a most joyful sound, for I knew that there must be water wherever monkeys appear in a low-lying place. I followed the course of the bed and soon came to a pit dug by the monkeys in the sand, in which I found the priceless water. I thanked God for this great gift; and having quenched my thirst I first filled my powder-horn, tying up the powder in my handkerchief, and then my telescope case, and the barrels of my gun. To still the pangs of hunger I took a handful of powder and ate it with some shoots of a young tree which grew near the water; but they were bitter, and I soon felt a severe pain in the stomach.—After climbing the mountain for some way, all of a sudden I observed a man and a woman standing on a rock which projected from it, and tried to conceal myself behind a bush; but they had seen me and came toward me. By the aid of my telescope I discovered that these people were Wakamba. They called me by my name, and I came out of my hiding-place and went toward them, recognizing Ngumbau and his wife, who had been accused of witchcraft by the Atua, and doomed to death. —Krapf's Researches in Eastern Africa.

Social Intercourse.

Without friends what is man?—A solitary oak upon a sterile rock, symmetrical indeed in its form, beautiful and exquisitely finished, outrivaling the most lauded perfection of art in gracefulness and grandeur, but over which decay has shaken her black wing, and left its leaves blighted; its limbs contract as they die; its roots rottenness, and its bloom death; a scathed, lifeless monument of its pristine beauty.—When the rebuffs of adversity are rushing us earthward, when the clouds are black above, and the muttering thunder growls along the sky, when our frame is palsied by the skeleton of disease; or our senses whirled in the maelstrom chaos of insanity, when our hearts are torn by the separation of some beloved object, while our tears are yet flourishing upon the fresh turf of departed innocence—in that time it is the office of friendship to shield us from portentious storm, to quicken the fainting pulses of our sickly frame, to bring back the wondering star of mind within the attraction of sympathetic kindness, pour the "oil and balm" of peace into the yet festering wound, and deliver the aching heart from the object of its bleeding affection.

Private Prayer.—In the morning the mind is calm; the temptations of the day have not beset you; the duties of the day have not filled your mind and begun to vex you.—

Before you go to the duties of the day, to its cares and anxieties and temptations, begin the day with prayer. Temptations you certainly will meet; trials of virtue and patience will overtake you; and many times before night you will need the aid of your Father to shield you.—Go to Him, and ask His counsel to guide you, His power to uphold you, His spirit to sanctify you. Then will you have done what is equivalent to half the duties of the day, when you have thus engaged His care and assistance. And when the evening comes, when you have done with the duties of the day, the body is wearied, the mind is jaded, when the world is shut out by the shades night, when you come to look back and review the day, when you see how many deficiencies have marked it, how many imperfections still cluster around you; how many sins stare you in the face, how little you have done for yourself or for others, or for God, the day passed, then is the hour of prayer. It will be sweet to feel that you have One to whom you can go, and will hear you, if you are penitent, and ask in the name of Jesus Christ; One who will accept your evening sacrifice, and give you strength for the morrow, and gird you with His righteousness. This hour, if rightly improved, will be like the cheering countenance of a most beloved friend. Take care that nothing comes between you and these hours devoted to God.

Selected by J. R. Holsinger.

Our Rule.

Obedience to Jesus Christ is the proof of our friendship to him. Obedience implies a rule. How can we obey if there be not something to follow? Some rule to regulate our conduct? Some standard or guide? Something to tell us what to do and what to shun? There is such a rule; and our obedience must be according to the rule which God has given us. "Do whatsoever I command you," says Jesus. To obey is to follow the rule which God has given to do what he commands.—This rule is the Bible. "The Word of God," which is contained in the Scripture of the Old and New Testaments, is the only rule to direct us how we may glorify and obey him; and how we must worship and serve him. This is the only rule, and it is a sufficient rule, because it is the Word of God. "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." No matter who the writer is, it is God who speaks through him. It is not Peter, nor James, nor John, nor Paul that speaks; but it is God who speaks through them. Men wrote, but God taught them what to write; and it is treating the Bible as a mere human composition, and placing it on a level with any other book, to represent its teachings as only the utterance of the man who wrote it. It is talking like an unbeliever—it is talking like an infidel—to say, as has been said, "Would you abstain from that act because John forbids it? or, would you practice that thing because Peter enjoins it? or, would you believe that because James teaches it? or, would you refuse to follow in that course just because of a little sentence of Paul forbiding it? A little sentence of Paul, or Peter, or John! The sentence is not their's, but God's. God spake through them; and what He spake through these and other inspired men, makes up the Bible—the whole Word of God—and this is our rule of faith and practice,—our rule because it is God's Word, and contains his will. God's word and not man's; God's will and not man's; God's sentences and not the sentences of men. How can we obey when we follow not the rule God has given? How can we obey and do what he commands when we explain away the rule, or weaken its forces by calling it the word of men—a little sentence of Peter, or Paul, or John? No, it is God's Word; and if we obey Christ, we must follow his rule, his law, his will; we must do what he commands and depart from what he forbids, for Jesus says, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." They who do not what he commands cannot be his friends; then how is it with us? Are we his friends, or are we yet among his enemies? For every man is either the friend or the enemy of Christ.

Every Day of the Week.

It is remarked that each day in the week is set apart for public worship by some nation, viz: "Sunday by the Christians; Monday by the Grecians; Tuesday by the Persians; Wednesday by the Assyrians; Thursday by the Turks; Friday by Moors; Saturday by the Jews.

And it may be mentioned as a curious fact in this connection, that at Tangier, in Morocco there are in effect three Sundays in succession. The Moors are strict in their observance of Friday, and consequently on that day no business is done, and everything is quiet. The Jews, who are the traders and store-keepers, are equally strict on Saturday, and their influence thus pervades the town; while the Christian families of the different Consulates observe the Sunday proper; and in this way, cooped as all are within the narrow limit of the walls, there are three successive days marked with the stillness and repose of the Sabbath, leaving Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday for such intercourse as may be necessary in a place devoid almost of foreign commerce, and having few traits of internal activity; so that half a week answers, all purposes, with perhaps a day or two to spare."

The Ever Near.—Robinson calls God "the Ever Near." The Ever Near: this is his true title. He is not a God afar off, but a God nigh at hand; nigh at hand to discern; nigh at hand to succor; nigh at hand to deliver; nigh at hand to continue our existence. Each beating pulse beats because God helps it to beat. We are hanging every moment upon him. Were he to go away, we should instantly lapse into nothingness. Let us, as Robinson says, "become conscious of the nearness of God."

The righteous is greater after his death than during his life.

Our Bereavement.

Miss SARAH K. CAMERER, of whose sickness several notices have been given in previous numbers, died on Thursday last (18th) at half past 3 o'clock in the afternoon. After an illness of several weeks, she calmly and peacefully has fallen, we firmly trust, "asleep in Jesus."

Her remains were conveyed next day to Morrison's Cove, (her native place,) by P. M. train, to be interred in the family burying-ground near Martinsburg. All of our family who could conveniently be absent, and a sister who attended her during sickness, accompanied the remains on the way.—Obituary notice, some particulars and remarks will be given in next number.— ASSISTANT EDITOR.

"Kind Words."

Brother Lyon has "fitly spoken" a word under the above head, in another part of to-days paper. It is well taken, and we hope brother Lyon will be on the lookout for opportunities of throwing in his mite quite frequently, in such an appropriate manner.

DISTRICT MEETINGS.

Northern district of Indiana, March 25th, in Union Centre congregation, 7 miles southwest of Goshen.

Missouri and Kansas district, April 16th, near Plattsburg, Mo.

Middle district of Pa., April 26th, in James' Creek congregation, Huntingdon Co., Pa.

Western District of Pa., April 26th, in Elklick branch, Somerset Co., Pa.

Brother Grabill Myer's Report of Eastern Visit.

Jan. 30th. Had seven meetings at Green Tree.

Feb. 4th. Two meetings at Skippack.

Thence to Mingo district, and had five meetings in succession. Thence to Indian Creek, and had three meetings. Thence to Springfield, and had three meetings.

12th. To Hatfield and held two meetings. Thence to Worcester and held two meetings.

14th. Two meetings at Norristown.

15th. One meeting at Philadelphia.

All those meetings were attended with interest and good order. The brethren are seemingly contending for the "faith once delivered to the saints." I was treated with much brotherly kindness by the brethren and sisters. I also spent a part of two days of my journey with brother Abraham H. Cassel in Montgomery Co., examining the old church books, or records of the house-keepings of the old brethren, and was well pleased.

GRABILL MYERS.

Dear brother, and readers of the Companion: I saw an extract of a letter in No. 6, which conveyed my mind to these words of the Savior: "Provide yourselves bags which wax not old, and treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no theif approacheth, neither moth corrupteth." "For where your treasure is, there will be your heart also." In the extract referred to, I read that one of the brethren was engaged in soliciting subscribers for the Companion, when on one occasion a brother declared that he could not afford to pay for the Companion, and the brother says the same is worth about $10 000. I fear sometimes that the brethren are laying up too much of earthly treasures, which will prove to be more like, "chaff and stubble, than gold and silver," when the time comes that they shall render "an account of the deeds done in the body." I do not wish to openly manifest before the public how I am situated in regard to earthly goods, but when I compared them with ten thousands dollars, and would give heed to reason, it would tell me to forsake the Companion altogether, and try to make use of it in some other way which would add a little to the store of wealth. I am a poor writer, and when I do write it seems to be not worth the while to read it. But I thought when I saw that extract, I might throw in a mite. I was not engaged in soliciting subscribers for the Companion for one reason: our neighborhoods are too German to read the Companion. All those who can read it, and understand, get it, I suppose M. G. GIBBLE.

Mastersonville, Pa.

Dear brother Henry: I have been expecting an order for books, but perhaps you have not yet sold what you had. The book ("A treaties on Time Immersion,") is creating considerable excitement here. An egotistical Methodist preacher is carrying it around on his circuit, abusing and ridiculing it, the author and the doctrine. We are following him and trying to vindicate the doctrine at least. We addressed a large and attentive audience last Sunday for about two hours, where he ridiculed on the Sunday before. The people say that the cause of truth is loosing nothing by the agitation. The offensive portion in the article on the New Birth, or rather the exposition of the instruments used by the popular Sects of Christianity.—The cry is, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians. In my review I found brother Zigs extract "on the anxious bench" eminently useful, and would not have missed having it for five times the amount of the yearly subscription of the Companion. I should not be surprised, if this matter continues to be agitated here, it it will put a quietus to the bench and bench religion, and put the people to thinking solemnly upon the subject of christianity.—May the good Lord give speech to the truth.

DIED.

We need no privy determining circumstances with ordinary notices. We notice all alike, and we could not insert more with it.

In the Conemaugh branch of the Church, Cambria County Pa., February the 4th, brother HENRY D. GOCHNOUR aged 73 years, one month and 29 days. Funeral services by the brethren.

Also in the same branch, same day, WILLIE S., infant son of brother C. P. L. and sister Martha Jane Rogers, aged one month and sixteen days. Funeral services by the brethren.

They were both interred in the same graveyard and at the same time, in the presence of a large audience of people.

Also, in the same Church, February 8th, Sister ANN HILDEBRAND, wife of brother George Hildebrand and Step mother to the writer, aged 72 years and 12 days. She leaves a husband upwards of 80 years old, and several children to mourn over the loss of a kind wife and mother. Funeral services by brethern Beahnoo and Brallier.

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

Near Degraff, Ohio, January 16th, Mary A. Raylor, aged 19 years 4 months 14 days.—Disease, Typhoid Fever. She was daughter of bro her Samuel and sister Magdalene Raylor. The funeral occasion was improved by Elder Joseph N. Kimman and the writer — Text, 1 Peter 1: 24. J. L. Frantz.

Of inflammation of the bowels, in Indian Creek church, Iowa, in the 24th year of his age, MARTIN BAKER, son of Elder George and Elizabeth Baker. He suffered much, but bore his pains with christian composure. He prayed much, and called on the brethren to pray with him, and had a lively hope of his acceptance with God. He regretted that he had not united with the church previous to his illness. Funeral services by Eld. Sam'l. Garber and two hours to the largest concourse of people ever assembled here on such occasion, from the words "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

May 4th, 1868, in the Elkhorn congregation, Somerset Co., Pa., sister SUSANNA FIKE, widow of Jacob Fike, deceased. Aged 73 years, 4 months, and 14 days. Funeral services by brother J. Beam Cover.

Nov. 6th, '68, in the Milford congregation, Somerset county, Pa., sister CATHARINE FIKE, wife of brother John Fike, aged 66 years, 7 months, and 17 days. She leaves a sorrowful husband and three sons and one daughter to mourn her death, all members of the church. Funeral services by brother Geo. Schrock, from Rev. 14: 13

C. G.

In the Ten Mile congregation, Washington Co., Pa., of disease of the head (Hydrocephaloas) Feb. 6th, JOHN A., son of brother George and Minerva WISE, and nephew of the writer; aged 1 year, 3 months, and 8 days. Funeral from Mark 10: 13.

In same place, Feb. 7th, 1869, sister ELIZABETH SMMERMON, in the 74th year of her age. Funeral text, Heb. 9: 27, 2

The above were both buried in the same burying ground and adjacted to the "Old Brick," Meeting house, on the same day.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Christ's Church.

We in our days often hear the question asked, where is Christ's Church? And we very well remember the time, when we first asked this question ourselves.—We, who have been brought up, as it was called, in Christ's church, after we had been sprinkled in our infancy, "confirmed" to that faith at some future time, after which all was done, and we came to a full understanding of the case, we could not help but ask the question: Where is Christ's Church? But we had a good reason for asking this question. Our reason was that we wanted to be in Christ's church or in some one in which there is salvation to be found. And so we [illegible] all the way we found that the [illegible] to the church, was setting [illegible] and more. But we kept on investigating [illegible] the Scriptures. After we considered these points and [illegible] our Lord says: "No man cometh to the Father but by me," and the Father is, where he wanted to live; turn of course, we ran to ask, Where Christ? The answer came: within his Church, for he has said, "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Then of course the next question arose, where is Christ's church? Here a good many answers came; one said here, and another there, but this did not satisfy. We wanted to build on the rock, and so we read a little more, we found that the Savior gave his disciples certain rules, how to establish and to regulate his church. These were something like this: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptising them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Now of course we had the information how to find Christ's church, and to our great joy we found it at last. But we had a great many difficulties to overcome. Some of our best friends, and members of our association declared that if we would join such a church we could not be friends any longer. Others told us we had been baptized, and confirmed, and now if we do so, we would commit a great sin. But we remembered what Peter said:—"We ought to obey God rather than man."

And so we went to work and with help from above we soon found ourselves with Christ's [illegible] temptations and difficulties did not cease here by any means. Our former companions and friends still tried [illegible] believe that we acted wrong; even the preacher declared from the pulpit, that any man who would do so would have to answer for it at the great day! But we showed our friends that we were sincere, and now we must say, we have overcome all, and have many friends even among those who threatened to be our enemies. But the greatest consolation is, we shall have God for our friend at the great day, if we hold out faithful.

But brethren and sisters let us be in earnest. There are thousands of people who would be willing to leave the doctrine of men and come over to the Lord's side, if they only could be convinced of their error. It is so. It is hard sometimes to convince man after he has lived in error for a long time, but still let us do our part: let us be lights to them. O, I often fear that we are stumbling blocks to the world, and not what we ought to be.

There are many of us who have done like Abraham of old, left our father's house, and all our friends behind, and now rejoice in the cause of our Master. I often have thought, if we only could convince and persuade our own relatives, how fast would the church of Christ increase. But this seems to be impossible, yet still we should do all we can, so that when the Lord cometh, he may say: "Well done good and faithful servants." This should be our aim through all our life.

Responsibilities of the Christian Home.

From the potent influence and moral stewardship of the Christian home, we may infer the responsibility.—The former is the argument for the latter. The extent of the one is the measure of the other. "To whom much is given of them much will be required." Our responsibilities are thus commensurate with our abilities. If the latter are properly devoted, we have our reward; if not, our curse. God will hold us accountable for the achievements we make by the abilities he has given us. If he gives us a field to cultivate, seed to sow, plants to train up, then we are responsible for the harvest, just in proportion to our agency in its production. If there is not a harvest of the right kind because we neglected to cultivate the soil, to sow the proper seed, and to train up the plants, then he will hold us accountable, and "we shall not come out thence, till we have paid the uttermost farthing." This is an evident gospel principle. Who will doubt its application to the Christian home? The family is such a field; the seed of good or evil the parents can sow therein; their children are young and tender plants, entrusted to their care; their mission from God is to "bring them up in his nurture," and to "train them in his ways." And where God gives the command, he also gives the power to obey.

If, then, by their neglect, these tender plants are [illegible] grow up in the crooked ways of folly and iniquity, and the leprosy of sin spread its dreadful infection over all the posterity of home; if, as a consequence of their unfaithfulness, the family becomes a moral desolation, and the anathemas of unnumbered souls in perdition, rise up in the day of judgment against them; or if, on the other hand, of the fruit of their faithful stewardship, blessings and testimonials of gratitude are now pouring forth from the sainted, loved ones in glory, is it not plain that a responsibility rests upon the Christian home, commensurate with those abilities which God has given her, and with those interests he has entrusted to her care?

Let us look at the objective force of this. The family is responsible for the kind of influence she exerts upon her members. Look at this in its practical light. There is a family. God has given children to the parents. How fondly they cling to them, and look up to them for support and direction. They inherit from their parents a predisposition to evil or to good; they imitate them as their example, in all things; take their word as the law of life, and follow in their footsteps as the sure path to happiness.

These parents are members of the church. * * * * Yet in this home no prayer is offered up, no Bible instructions are given, no holy example is set, no Christian government and discipline instituted, no religious interests promoted. But on the other hand, sin is overlooked, winked at, and the world alone sought.—These children behold their parents toil day after day to provide for their natural life; they notice the interest they take in their health and education, and the self-denial with which they seek to procure for them a temporal competency. And from all this they quickly and very justly infer that their parents love their bodies and value this world, and by the force of filial imitation they soon learn to do the same, and with their parents, neglect their souls, and kneel at the altars of Mammon rather than bow in prayer before God. And thus they go on from one step in departure from God, to another, until they die without hope and without salvation.

Tell me now, will not God hold these parents responsible for the ruin of their children? Will not the "blood of their destruction rest upon them?" Will not the "voice of that blood" cry out from their family against them? If, as a consequence of their negligence and of the unholy influence they exerted upon them, they become desperadoes in crime and villainy, and at last drench their hands in a brother's blood, and expiate their crime upon the gibbet, and from there go down to the grave of infamy, and to the hell of the murderer, will not their blood "cry unto them," and will not the woes and anathemas of Almighty God come in upon them like a flood?

Home-responsibility may be inferred from the relation of the family to God as a stewardship. We have seen that parents are stewards of God in their household, and that as such they are placed over their children; invested with delegated authority. God entrusts them to the care of their parents.

[illegible] impression, exposed to sin and ruin, entering upon a course of life which must terminate in eternal happiness or misery, with bodies to develop, minds to educate, hearts to mould, volitions to direct, habits to form, energies to rule, pursuits to follow, interests to secure, temptations to resist, trials to endure, souls to save! Oh, how the parental heart must swell with emotions too big for utterance, when they contemplate these features of their important trust. What a mission this, to superintend the character and shape the destiny of such a being! Such is the plastic power you exert upon it, that upon your guidance will hinge its weal or its woe, and your, therefore, will be the lasting benefit or the lasting shame.

What you are now doing for your children is incorporated with their very being, and will be as imperishable as their undying souls. As the stewards of God your provision for them will be "either a savor of life unto life or a savor of death unto death."

We have seen that God has given to you the ability and means of making them subservient to his glory, and hence from you he will require them as entrusted talents. If you have been unfaithful to them, your punishment will be in proportion to the wretchedness entailed upon your children. If, instead of the bread from heaven, you feed their souls with the husks of life, and lead them on by the opiates of bastard joys, if "when they ask of you bread, you give them a ston or for a fish, you give them a serpent," will it not be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for you.

Thus therefore, you see, Christian parents how your responsibility is measured by the magnitude of those interests committed to your care, by the kind of influence you exert over them, and by the eternity of that good and woe which are consequent upon your unfaithfulness. Let me be an inmate to parental integrity. The day is rapidly approaching when you must give an account of your stewardship. Oh, what, if in that day you behold your children "fit for eternal burning," and remember that that fitness is but the impress of a parent's hand!

Though it is painful to lose a child here; bitter tears are shed; pungent agonies are felt; there are heart-burnings kindled over the grave of buried love. But oh, how much more agonizing it is to bend over the dying bed of an impenitent, ruined child. And especially, if, in that terrible moment, he turns his eyes, wild with despair and ominous of curses, upon the parents, and ascribes his ruin to their neglect! Let me ask you, Would not this part of that sad drama add to your cup of bitterness, give a fearful emphasis to all your sighs, and burning to your flooding tears? God would also speak to you, and say as he did to Cain, "the voice of thy" children's "blood crieth unto me!" "And now him art cursed from the earth which hath opened her mouth to receive thy" children's "blood from thy hand."

But the scene would not close at the death-bed of [illegible] bar of God. The maledictions of that ruined one would there be poured out with increased fury upon you.

"Parents of my home on earth! I am lost—lost forever! Soon I shall go where "the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." Had you, in the home of my childhood, but instructed me, and been as faithful to my soul as you were to my body, I might stand here with a palm of victory in my hand, a crown of glory on my head, the joy of the redeemed in my heart, and with hosannas of praise upon my lips, rise upward to the untold felicities of God's eternal throne! But you did not! You fed my body, but you starved my soul, and left it to perish forever! Cursed be the day in which you begat me, and the paps that gave me suck! Cursed be the years that I lived under your roof—cursed be you. Oh, parents, such rebuke would have an undying worm in your souls; and would carry you down to the very depths of hell.

"This is no over wrought picture. It is but the real future prospects of that terrible scene which shall be enacted "in the terrible and notable day of the Lord," when every christian home shall be called to give "an account of their stewardship," and be dealt with "according to the deeds done in the body." And let me say too, that a similar and corresponding responsibility rests upon those children who enjoy the benefits of a faithful Christain home. They must answer to God for every blessing there enjoyed. If they turn a deaf ear and a cold heart to all the entreaties of their parents, and resist those saving influences which are brought to bear upon them, and as a consequence become outcasts from society and from heaven, then let me warn them that every prayer they heard at the family altar, lesson given, every admonition delivered, and every holy example set them, by their pious parents, will be ingredients in that bitter cup which it will take eternity for them to exhaust! Oh, children of the Christian home! think of this, and remember the responsibility of enjoying the precious benefits of pious, faithful parents. They will be your weal or your woe—your lasting glory or your lasting shame!

And, ye parents, be faithful to those little ones that are growing up "like olive plants around your table," so that in the day of judgment, you can say with joy, in the full assurance of reward: "Here are we, Lord, and the children thou hast given us!" And your reward shall be, Well done thou good and faithful servant! Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!

The Night of the Soul.

Sorrow sobers us and makes the mind congenial.—And in sorrow we love and trust our friends more tenderly and the dead become dearer to us. And just as the stars shine out in the night, so there are blessed faces that look at us in our grief, though before their features were fading from our recollection. Let no man dread it too much, because it is better for him, and it will help to make him sure of being immortal. It is not in the bright happy day, but only in the solemn night, that other worlds are to be seen shining in the long, long distances. And it is in sorrow—the night of the soul—that we see the farthest, and know ourselves natives of infinity and sons and daughters of the Most High.

Be Humble.

If thou art a vessel of gold, and thy brother but of wood, be not high minded; it is God that maketh thee to differ; the more bounty God shows, the more humility he requires; those mines are the richest which are deepest; those stars that are highest seem smallest; the goodliest buildings have the lowest foundation; the the more they should humble themselves; the more fruit, the lower the branch on which it grows; pride is ever the companion of emptiness. Oh, how full was the apostle, yet how low was his language of himself, least of all saints, last of all apostles, chief of sinners; no sufficiency to think, no ability to do; all that he is, he is by divine grace.

It is an awful thing to feel all that we possess continually wasting away, and at the same time to set our heart upon it, without inquiring after something more [illegible] and durable.

Simplicity in dress.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

It is as far as possible from the purpose of religion to deprive us of any thing that is really needful for our bodily comfort. Nowhere is such large, unrestrained liberty allowed as in the outworking of the life of Christ in the believer. The liberty of which the sinner boasts is a most cruel and ruinous bondage. To do what we know must be repented of, or for which we must suffer penal inflictions in hell, is a vassalage so pitiful, a perversity so shocking, that nothing but the deadening, blinding power of sin can account for it. Once naked in person, as the symbol of purity and necessary gravitation to God and holiness, man is to nothing more prone than extravagance and folly in the covering which God has designed as the concealment of our shame and the symbol of our fall. The loss of the robe of righteousness is followed by every device of decoration, that the genius of Beelzebub could invent. Man was set forth as the crowning handiword of Jehovah in the simple nudity of the Divine Ideal, and simplicity of apparel is a matter of the first importance in [illegible] the Divine Image has been restored. With the Christian, dress [illegible] a matter of indulgence, but a matter of shame on the one side, and a matter of joy on the other—shame that we have fallen into a condition that renders a covering necessary, and joy that a higher than our primeval glory is possible for us in Christ Jesus. When dress, in any of its aspects, gratifies a passion or desire which owes its origin to sin, we may know that we have departed from the simplicity that is in Christ. Under nothing is our depraved nature more restive than the restrictions imposed by Christ in relation to dress. To send an unregenerate person among his associates with all the indications of apparel that ought to distinguish the follower of Jesus, is to impose a yoke too galling for endurance. When we are separate from the world in principle and purpose, when by regeneration we are thoroughly brought into Christ's kingdom, and into the order of his life, having all our activities directed by the impulse of his being, we will avoid "costly apparel," and apparel of any quality or texture wrought up in fashionable style, as we would a cancer in the face, or the stain of some foul crime on the character.—God graciously vouchsafes covering for the body, but as soon as we lose sight of the Divine purpose in its appointment, it becomes a snare, assimilates us with the world, fosters the very spirit it is the great object of the Gospel to crucify, creates disturbance in the church, and renders our final salvation problematical, for we can never know unto what errors and scandals practical opposition to the Gospel will lead us. Every plea for departure from simplicity in dress by any member of the Church, is, in effect, a plea for the establishment of a principle which would have kept Jesus in Heaven, and left us eternally in our sins. No one can put upon his body an article of dress to gratify an innate love of display, or the love of approbation, or to meet the expectation or wishes of any who love the world, without doing violence to life of grace in the soul, and throwing an obstacle in the progress of the King of Saints. "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus" demands rigid simplicity in attire, because of the universal and perpetual tendency of the heart to decorate the outside to the neglect of the one thing needful; and there is no more possibility of reaching Heaven without subjugating and disabling this tendency, than of subjugating it without an uncompromising excision of all that gratifies the lust of the eyes. The unhallowed indulgence in relation to dress that is allowed in the Church at the present day, is a sad indication of prevailing worldliness, and forebodes a season of darkness and trial not very distant. A sifting must take place, and God may place us, as a body, in the seive before we look for it, and blessed is he "whose seed remaineth in him."

Our dress is a matter of no little significance in our Christian influence. Where grace has laid the axe to the root of the tree, not leaving our will attached to the world by one fibre of pride, our liberty in Christ will be so "glorious," as to make simplicity in dress a voluntary, unconstrained expression of the depth and power of the Divine life in the heart. The evolution of the new life in this particular direction, has great significance with the unconverted. Sinners know very well, if they reflect at all, that the vanities with which they decorate their bodies are nothing but the efflorescence of sin; and that where an opposite principle exists and operates in the heart, the external indications of sin must vanish, as certainly as the leaves and flowers and fruit of a tree must wither when the root is destroyed. The line between taste and fashion is so easily crossed, and the world is so ready to ascribe to the latter what we would avert belongs to the former, that it is not safe to leave too narrow a margin between us and them in the matter of external appearance.

When we contemplate the humiliation of the Son of God, and enter fully into the habit of His life, the one great object of the Divine Glory in the salvation of sinners will so absorb our entire being, that we will seek to make our personal appearance a means to promote the Divine purpose no less than our wrestlings in the closet. Christ was "in the form of God," and "thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made Himself of NO REPUTATION." Here is the superlative difficulty of our degenerate nature. To make one's self of no reputation, is the essence of "pure religion and undefiled before God." "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." All our privileges, all our mercies, even the most costly, yea, our life, and higher still, salvation itself, is the fruit of our Redeemer's abasement. "Of no reputation" was the only condition of rescuing humanity from the woes of the fall, even by Omnipotence. How much the desire to be of some reputation has to do with the selection and arrangement of our apparel, each person must decide for himself; but I think we may safely conclude that if the mind of Christ has the sway of us as it had of Him, there is no danger that we will be faulted for undue identity with the world in the matter of dress. The nature that requires such an example of humiliation and self-abnegation as Christ has given us from Bethlehem to Calvary, must indeed be hard to wean from the love of self, and cannot fulfil its stupendous mission, as the representative of Christ, until it "makes itself of no reputation," and thus gives expression to the mind of Jesus. Why should plain dress be a heavier cross than one of more showy appearance? A round coat, a plain bonnet, a hemmed cap, how intolerable to many is the narrow-mindedness that would make such trivialities indications of character. It makes no one holy, and imparts no character, to adopt the Brethren's costume; but the indwelling Spirit of Christ will not be without His essential concomitant, simplicity in dress, any more than Christ's assumption of our nature can take place without an unparalleled descent into humiliation and self-renunciation. The same personal ends are met by a plain as by a gaudy dress. The cross springs from our estimate of the views which others entertain of our singularity. If we make ourselves of no reputation, having it as our joy and glory to possess and exhibit the mind of Christ, we will be blessed far beyond what is possible in a wavering, divided state of mind. There is no settled peace until Christ becomes all in all, and this he cannot be until reputation expires in the death-groans of Him who was equal with God, and descended to the lowest depths of abasement for us. Let us not be ashamed to follow Him, for great is our reward in Heaven.

"It is I."

Jesus calls our attention to himself. He says, Be of good cheer. Afflict[illegible] dresses you altogether strange? Can you not call to mind many a storm in which it has dispelled your fears and soothed your sorrows? Does not the history of the Church in all ages, testify to the wonderful deliverances Christ has effected for his people? Have not his followers always been tossed with tempests? yet has not the Lord delived us out of them all? How great the cloud of witnesses who testify to his constant care and unchanging love! How innumerable the multitude who have come out of great tribulation; and now clothed in white raiment, ascribe salvation to God and the Lamb! Yes, it is a voice which has never spoken in vain. Be of good cheer, afflicted disciple; think what he has already done for you. He groaned, bled and died for you and I.

You were lost, has he found you: an enemy, but he reconciled you; yes, it is I: be of good cheer. How often has he spoken to us in tones of tenderness; how have our "hearts burned within us" as he has "walked with us in the way." What peace, what joy, have we experienced while he has held converse with our souls! Has he not turned our mourning into melody, our night into day, and our tempest into calm already? We are told to cast all our care upon him, for he careth for us. Are we not perfectly safe then in such keeping, if we put our trust in him? Let us believe his promises, and there will be a great calm.

Nature's Rule.

When we cast our imaginary mind to the woodland forest, we may, with natural pleasure, behold the beautiful and compacted body of the oak, which is rearing aloft in the pleasant atmosphere a beautiful and stupendous top, that must be help in its proper place by the compacted body of the powerful tree, or be dashed, with violence, against the earth, by the powerful winds or impediments that may chance to result from the laws of nature.

The beautiful tree stands upon nature's soil, from which it has resulted, and it is upon that soil that all animate nature must depend for the support of vitality; and without a proper subsistence from this native earth all things would necessarily perish, and again return to the earthly material from whence they were taken.

When a tree is formed by the just laws of nature, it is not completed in one moment or hour, but the time of its growth will find no time to cease its augamentation, until nature has worked her end. Though it were once a small sprout, in the vernal season, that was attempting to rear aloft a few buds, it is now a powerful tree, strong in power, and large in size. The little sprout that was once to weak to hold the weight of a sparrow, is now too strong to be cast down by the strongest elephant. The buds that were once few and weak, are now formed into a large and stupendous top, and may serve as a resting place for the fowls of the

By the side of the large oak, may be seen one which is quite small, and growing with a wonderful rapidity, that it may be able to harmonize with the elder one; its body is smooth, while the top is small and beautiful. The younger tree wishes to equal the elder, that it may harmonize with nature. The old steady oak does not think to forsake its former mode of living, and adheres to the smooth bark and beautiful top of the younger, but continues in the philosophical laws of nature. Nature* must necessarily be the guide of all trees; and in that the younger is subject unto the elder. The Bible is the Christian's guide; and, in precise harmony with nature, teaches the same thing.

Man was once a child, too weak to support himself; but he gradually grew in "strength of body and mind," until his body was strong and compact, and able to rear aloft, a useful and stupendous knowledge. He walks upon nature's soil, and must necessarily depend upon its production for his vital support, that he may be able to lift his mind above every wind of doctrine that fails to harmonize with the word of God. He was not formed in a moment of time, but the time of his formation found no end until nature had finished her work. The body that was too weak to bear the weight of a dove, is now strong and powerful. The little mind, though once small and weak, possesses a wonderful magnitude, and may serve as a resting-place for the word of God. By the side of the grave old man may be found a smooth-faced boy, with an educated mind, and wishes to teach the old man the way of ethereal, scholastic or scientific wisdom, and lead him in his old days into the beautiful paths of charming lore, and thinks ill of the old father if he refuses to adhere to his counsel; thus he wishes to lead the elder, and in opposition to all nature, not being "subject unto the elder of the Church."

It is positively declared, in a hieroglyphic manner, upon the pages of divine nature, in precise harmony with the Bible, that "the younger shall be subject to the elder." These words are more immutable than the sublime rocks of Gibraltar; hence young friends! read the laws of nature, for God has written them with his pure hand: read the Bible, God has written it; the one is in precise harmony with the other, as the one God is their Author.

Love the Lord.

"I love the Lord, because he hath heard my voice and my supplication. Psalm 116: 1.

When I lay covered with guilt, and the judgments of God pressed sore upon me, I cried in my grief, I trusted in God, my salvation, that he would hear me, if I would hear him. I heard his voice and he heard me, and gave ear unto my supplication; and shall not I bless his name forever? I shall if God will grant me grace, which he hath promised, and his words are "yea and amen." When Satan riseth up against me, endeavoring to be my overthrow, I speak unto the Lord who hath heard my voice, and he heareth me continually; he saith "I will hearken unto them that call upon my name." Oh that I could bless and hallow the great name of the Lord with more reverence. My heart is too faint, my tongue too corrupt to speak forth his praise as I ought. I love the Lord because he heareth my supplications and he hath promised to not send me away empty, if I ask of him.

PARENTS must never put away their own youth.—They must never cease to be young. Their sympathies and sensibilities should always be quick and fresh. They must be susceptible. They must love that which God made the child to love. Children need not only government, firm and mild, but sympathy, warm and tender. So long as parents are their best and most agreeable companions, children are comparatively safe even in the society of others.

A good conscience is the best looking glass of heaven; in which the soul may see God's thoughts and purposes concerning it, reflected as so many shining stars

Love the Brethren.

To love our brethren is a command from the blessed Savior, and I think it is too often overlooked by the brethren and sisters. I believe we should love one another, and to the world, as the people of the world, as we are to be a separate people from the world. Let us show by our walk, talk and conversation that we are the children of God.

"Bishop" as Pastor.

It has grown quite fashionable of late with many correspondents of the INDEX, and the supporters of other religious journals to give to ministers who have charge of churches the title of "Bishop." We do not object to the manner of speech. We merely protest against the use of the word as being unscriptural. Satan assigned the position of "bishop" to the lordly of the followers of the Lord Jesus. Under the pretense of the love of God, and of the brethren, he has introduced into the church the pride and ambition of the world. Instead of the humble servants of Christ, he has made them lords over God's heritage. Instead of the simple form of worship which was in spirit and in truth, he has substituted a pompous ritual, full of show and ceremony. Instead of the simple organization of the primitive church, he has introduced a hierarchy of bishops, priests and deacons. With the help of the world, he has succeeded in making the church of God a mere worldly institution, and has filled it with the pride, the ambition, the love of show, and the love of the world which characterize

Remember the poor.

It is said, and truthfully too, that "the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof." This being the case, all should enjoy the bounties with which it is stored. We are not even our own, for we "are bought with a price." When mankind were miserably poor, and hopelessly lost, when no ray of light fell upon his pathway. God remembered them, and gave a gift. But the theme is old; still let us revert to it, and linger near for a short time. A messenger tutored from the celestial world brought the glad tidings of great joy to the nightly shepherds.—The glory of the Lord streaming from the opening sky, shed over the neighboring hills and valleys its Divine effulgence till they glowed like the ever-green shore of the home of the pure.—What a fit time for the gift! Darkness was covering the land, and moral darkness, like the pall of death had spread its wings over the earth. Man was sleeping the natural sleep, and the long sleep of death, dead in trespasses, and in sin. Can we conceive of anything more poverty-stricken, especially when we consider yet that from this state he was not able to wrest himself.

Let us keep this before our minds, and stamped upon our hearts as we proceed to the sequel.

We have many brethren increased in goods so much so that they are what the world terms rich; and we may add, "faring sumptuously every day." We have also many lacking wherewith to feed and clothe themselves. Viewing this from the stand point that "the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof," I think it is grievously wrong that there should be such a contrast. "Let them go and work, and save as I have done," we hear not unfrequently. Not thinking that they are highly favored of the Lord perhaps for the sole purpose of distributing to those who have not the means even to "go and work." The Lord has committed to every one talents, to some more, to some less. No one, I think, will object to apply those talents, to our opportunities of doing good. So the more that is committed to our charge, the more talents we have, and will have to give an account accordingly. The circumstance the Savior brought to our notice of the talents, they all improved, but the servant that received only one. Methinks a change has taken place, the ones that have the five and ten—probably thousands are the ones that are doing the hiding, hoarding up, storing up to enrich an heir—instead of depositing in the bank of the Lord; for "he that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord."

James in telling us what pure and undefiled religion is, among other things says: "to visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions." And that pure religion will lead us to enquire into their circumstances, (I think this should be the intention of the visit,) and if bread is needed it will be supplied as abundantly as our prayers are offered; and bread will do more in such cases to send our prayers to the throne of the Most High, than our loud sounding words. "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? Jas 2: 15. 16.

From the above quotations we have our duty in this respect; and learn also that it should not be confined alone to the Church, for there are widows and fatherless outside of the Church.—We read in the Prophet that the fast acceptable with God was "to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor, that are cast out, to thy house. When thou seest the naked, that thou cover him." We may now learn a lesson to this point by turning back to the good gift. It was given without respect to persons—to all grades and colors. He was under no obligation. It was a free gift. So should our's be. They should be given where we are under no obligations to give, or where we will not get an equivalent some day either in labor or otherwise. Some will say "it is their own fault that they are so poor, and I cannot see that there will be any charity in giving." Poor deluded creature! Whose fault was it that man was so miserably poor, when God enriched them by his gift! The echo falls, man's own fault. So you would condemn God in his act of sovereign love.

While a hard winter is holding all nature in his embrace, consider well the poor. During the milder season they could fare without suffering; but now their "supplies are cut off," their resources fail, and the suffering of many a poor heart God only knows.

"When wealth into virtuous hands are given,
It blesses like the dews of Heaven;
Like Heaven it hears the orphan's cries,
And wipes the tears from a widow's eyes."

I think I may safely venture the assertion that the unnecessary adorning of tables as well as bodies would furnish ample means to supply the destitute. How many things are eaten because they are delicious to the taste which add nothing to the comfort, or the support of the body, and are mostly costly. Consider the wines, and the liquors, drunk in many a household to make merry; and many other things that a common sense thought would dispense with. Fashion has also imposed a heavy tax on its subject. Many a loose, flowing ribbon—costly too—is affixed to play with the sports of the wind. "Costly handkerchiefs shaking out their perfumed odors." Trails sweeping the dust, and bodies tackled by planers to improve God's handiwork. In sum, with many others summed up, bring before us an impressive scene—a sad state of things. Still the world will follow its pernicious ways. The trappings of fashion to them has power to charm. But what is still worse, and more sad, is that Christians—Brethren—are disposed to cling to inconsistencies, because the world does. And through this the good cause is often left to beg from door to door.

Learning to Swim.

"Launch out into the deep and clear water," said a father to his son whom he was trying to learn to swim. "I don't want to go so far out that I can't touch bottom," answered — son. "It is hard to learn to swim in that way; so come along out into the deep water I am, and I will bear you up on my arm, so you shall not sink," entreated the father. The boy believing his father was able and willing to shield him from all danger, did launch out boldly along side of him. Soon, to the surprise and delight of the boy, he had learned to glide along with ease through the deep waters. "Now," said he, "I don't care about touching bottom, for it is much easier to keep afloat in deep water, and I am glad I obeyed you; but what induced you to want me come into clear water?" "That I may see every wrong motion you make and correct it," said the father.

Many persons are in some respects, touching their eternal interest, like the boy spoken of above. They have a desire to learn to swim in the stream of salvation—Holy waters that Ezekiel saw. "For the waters were risen, waters to swim in, a River that could not (otherwise) be passed over." Chapter 47: 5.—For want of courage many will not even venture in, others are trying to learn to swim in the shallow, muddy waters where they can "touch bottom." In other words, keep close to the ways of the world—soiling their feet in the miry logs of sin, and causing their spirits to be continually be clouded by obeying the dictates of the carnal mind. Consequently never learn to swim right. Young Christian, (and the old also,) have firm faith in God; believe the Father when he says, "come out from the world; venture into the deep and crystal waters of Divine love—fathomless ocean—where he is ever ready " to give his angels charge over thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee up in their hands lest thou dash thy foot against a stone." Psalm 91.

Once out into the deep you will be surprised and delighted to find how easy it is to keep afloat and glide along, safely surmounting every wave, and pass on through the surging billows and dashing breakers safe to the haven of eternal rest.

Sink or swim, is the destiny of us all. The careless and heedless,—must sink; and oh! what a sinking! Down, down, into the bottomless abyss of eternal ruin! Nearer, and nearer are they approaching the great whirlpool of destruction, whose drawings can almost be felt, and soon, yea, very soon, will the wicked be swallowed up in the mighty vortex of despair!

O, then let us "launch out into the deep" and learn to "stem the storm," resting in the strong arm of a loving Savior who is ever ready to clasp us in His arms and whisper in our ears, "Be not afraid." Who will not at once leave the shallow, muddy waters, and no more let the feet "touch bottom!" Who will not sever the last shred of satan's net that holds the soul to the earth, and boldly venture out into the deep river, and wide ocean, and in every respect become qualified and fitted for a voyage to that glorious land of bliss in yonder spheres above?

Activity in worldly things is not inconsistent with true piety.—Right industry, right enterprise, and right ambition in trade, do not stand in the way of religion. They are not only perfectly harmonious with it, but they are indispensible to it. I can scarcely convince myself of a lazy man's being a Christian.

"If Christians must contend," says Jeremy Taylor, "let it be like the olive and the vine, which shall bear most and best fruit; not like the aspen and the elm, which shall make the most noise in the world."

They who live upon God, in use of the creature, can also live upon him in the loss of the creature.

Feet-Washing.

Our brethren have been discussing this subject pretty freely during the last six months or more, and we wish the discussion might be brought to a close; more especially so now, as we wish to review several articles upon the subject, which lately appeared in some of our exchanges.

We desire a fair investigation, and a free interchange of opinion, upon all religious topics, and ever have, and we trust ever will maintain the freedom of our press to these for whose benefit it has been established. But as the liberties of the press must be protested so must profligacy be avoided. Error is as readily disseminated as truth, and is more prolific.

There is one point in which we think many of our disputants fail. That is, they stop to contend about points that do not reach the question at issue. This prolongs the discussion to a length not required by the subject under consideration. If we, who want nothing but the word of God, can find occasion for so many disputations upon the manner of performing the ordinance of Jesus, is it to be wondered at when others will attempt to reason away the command entirely? We do think that the better way to come to a unity of opinion upon a matter is by reasoning together, but we fear that in many cases that desirable end is entirely lost sight of, and gain is taken for godliness.

One very prolific source of words is repetition. The same ideas are repeated by the different contributors. If only original ideas would be advanced, and those clothed in brevity of expression, we should not tire of the discussion. We want all the light upon the subject that can be gathered from a legitimate source. We have our preference of the two methods of performing the ordinance of Feetwashing practiced among the Brethren, and we desire to grant the same liberty to others, because we recognize no essential difference between the two. For the purpose of order and system it is good that we should have a uniform custom and rule of practising this command of Jesus, and we shall ever hold ourself free to fall in with those who practice the whole truth.—We have subscribed to nothing but GOD'S WORD, and are bound by no other ties than those of Christian fellowship in the Church of God. I have washed my brethren's feet, and they have washed mine. I hope we will still continue to wash one another's feet, and that in doing so we may not fail to realize the true intent of the command. If a brother washes and wipes my feet, be it so: I have been washed. If one brother washes my feet and another brother wipes them, so be it, I have been washed. If I wash and wipe my brother's feet, I do well, I have washed feet. If I wash and my brother wipes, we do well, for we have washed feet: If I wash my brother's feet and wipe them with a towel, and yet "defile the flesh, despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities," and of those things which I know not, I have washed feet, but I am not clean.—We want such a practice, such an order, such an observance of the command of Jesus, as will make us clean, as will make us humble. The Lord designed it for our good, and any practice that comes short of that end, is not the right way. This is as true touching the ordinance as it is of all other religious exercises. The religion that consists in ordinances and ceremonies without renewing the mind, converting the soul, and controlling the entire man, is not the religion of Jesus Christ, any more than a profession of Godliness without obedience to the word is an evidence of the love of God.

We do not wish to cut off the discussion. If our dear brethren have a word of instruction to impart, we will find room for it. But in order that we may have some space to devote to the benefit of those who have no light in them, we hope they will be brief, and cull their essays of all unnecessary words.

Brother Christian L. Holsinger.

While in the cove, Saturday afternoon, 20th ult, in company with brethren J. W. Brumbaugh an J. L. Wineland we visited this dear brother, who is very seriously afflicted, as we think, with consumption. Here is a family that we recommend to the prayers of the saints. Eight children, the elder not over sixteen, and the father—to say the least—almost without hope. We have every reason to believe that brother Christian has set his "house in order," and he can say with Paul: "I have kept the faith," and he need only patiently wait until the Lord will call him home to receive his crown.

Meeting at Clover Creek.

On Saturday 21st ult., we met with the Brethren in public worship, at Brumbaugh's meeting-house, where formerly was our nighest regular place of worship. There was a good attendance and a good feeling, and we trust a favorable impression for the cause of Christ.—After preaching there precious souls took upon themselves the cross of Jesus, and were baptized. They were all sisters to our young friend whose remains we had laid it the grave the day previous. This we think is the true way of showing our respect to departed friends, by following their good admonitions. Although sorrow bore heavily upon them, yet we know that in a measure they could go on their way rejoicing. We know "that he who began a good work within them will also complete it, until the day of Jesus Christ;" and it is our prayer that the Father will draw many more to love his dear Son.

Big Words.

Our readers will have noticed that brother Ward has replied to our remarks upon big words, and that therefore it would be our turn. We had thoughts of several nice points that we might clear up to brother Ward, while reading his manuscript, and had noted them, but when we came to the close of his article, where he relieves himself of his Latin, and then took a calm thought over the general tenor of his reply, we were forced to the conclusion that brother Ward was only writing because he had been contradicted. The simple words that he places in his lesson of hard words from the Companion was one of the reasons that brot this conclusion upon us; as, "orbs, walking-encyclopedia, iota, relumed, heaven-piercing-top, lave," &c., but more particularly by his own practice in the very things he is writing against. We may again refer to the matter.

Business.

H. Ellabergen, Cambridge, Ind. The money is received. Thank you.

J. R. Holsinger, Mt. Morris, Ill. Your $10 came to hand but was not acknowledged.

Michael Herman, Brooklyn, Iowa. You are right, we think. You have now paid to No. 44, present Vol.

M. Forney, Parkersburg, Ills. We enter the names on book, and charge to your account.

David Bowman, Hagerstown, Ind. The order came to hand, but it was only through the Post Master that I learned who it was from. It was not the right way of doing business, and your P. M. should post himself a little better upon the Money Order business.

Barbara Shively, White Springs, Pa. Your paper has been regularly sent to Mifflinburg, where the back Nos. can be had, if you pay postage at your place and present the receipt at Mifflinburg P. O.

Wm. Hertzler, Elizabethtown, Pa. It cannot be our fault, as his paper is regularly sent with D. M. Snaveley's to Middletown. See that his postage is paid, and that he demands his paper at the office. If Snaveley's paper comes to hand Moyers cannot fail, as the name of the post office is printed on Moyer's paper. This is a plain case.

I Young, Carrollton, Ohio. The paper goes all right. What numbers are lost?

Ephraim Brumbaugh, New Baltimore, O. John Blocher's name is on our book, at New Baltimore, and is credited with $1 50 and we know no better than that it is all right. Will you please request the P. M. to preserve the papers carefully until the end of the first quarter, when, if not called for he will return them to us with bill of postage.

M. G. Domer, Buena Vista, Ohio. Did you send the money in your former letter?—No money has come to hand that we know of. We are sending the paper and you can remit $1.50

Hannah Knauff, Covington, Ohio. You will find the money credited to you in No. 50, Vol. 4. We acknowledge the receipt of money to the 52d No.

Joseph Longenecker, Uniontown, Md.—You are right; "Union, Iowa" should have been "Uniontown."

Death of Miss Camerer.

As noticed in our last issue, death has been among us and taken away from our midst, one whom we loved. We could give a long chapter of the pains and sorrows that the king of terrors has brought upon the Companion family, but we shrink from repeating them, and will only discharge the duties of paying our weak tribute of respect to one whom we shall ever remember with kindest regards.

Sallie K. Camerer was born September 28th, 1843. Her father's name was Samuel Camerer, and her mother's name was Catharine Klepser. Her parents resided near Martinsburg, this county, where we made the acquaintance of the family, and where her father died some eight years ago. Her parents were both members of the Church of the Brethren. Being dependent upon her own labor for support, and thinking she would prefer a calling which would afford her opportunities for improving the mind, she applied for a situation, and was most cheerfully accepted, having had a desire to offer her employment. She came to our home on the 11th of November, 1866, since which time she has been engaged in assisting to prepare this paper for its readers, and has been one of our most industrious assistants. A little over a year ago she met with a serious accident, by getting her hand into our old power press, by which she lost two fingers from the left hand; but after it was healed it did not seem to hinder her in type setting.

She was not a member of the Church but was indeed one of its friends. So circumspect was he walk before the world that many r garded her as a member of our church. Not simply a church member for that would not require any peculiarity. She however felt the necessity of something more than morality, and hence had on several occasions almost become a Christian. In her first illness she avowed her profession to lead a life devoted to the service of God. When there was occasion for fears that she might not again recover, she deplored her condition in the most painful manner, and desired to be baptized; but for reasons which we will not mention she did not attain her desires. But from what we know of her life, and a conversation upon religion when on her death bed, we cherish a good hope that the Lord has taken her soul to rest.

She calmly breathed her last at a little after half past three on the afternoon of 18th ultimo, without moving a limb. Her age was 25 years, 4 months, and 21 days.

Her remains were conveyed to the house of brother George Ruderbaugh, her brother-in law, near Martinsburg, on Friday evening, and from thence to the Bethel, on Saturday at 11, A. M. where her funeral sermon was preached by brother John W. Brumbaugh, from the words: "We have no abiding city here," &c., and was followed by remarks by other of the brethren.—Thence to the grave-yard south of town, where we buried her by the side of her uncle John, who lies by the side of her father. Peace be to her ashes.

To her many relatives, friends, and associates, we say, O, improve with us, the solemn warning offered to all in this sad bereavement. May the Lord enable us all so to live that when death comes we may be prepared to say,

"Hinder me not—come, welcome death—
I'll gladly go with thee.

Brother Holsinger:—We had a little protracted meeting in the Newton branch, Miami Co., Ohio, commencing on the 6th of this month, and closing, I believe on the 10th. Brother Quinter, from Covington, labored for us with power. One of the citizens of the village got into great distress soon after the meeting closed and would be baptized. And when in readiness to go to the water, his old father—over 70 years old—came too. It caused much rejoicing, for we had about given up the old man. Nine members of his family have joined the church before him, and the tenth had made application.

HANNAH KNAUFF.

Dear brother Henry:—I feel like having a few lines in the Companion. When I take the Companion in my hand to read, I look to see if any of the dear sisters have any pieces in it. Oh how I love to read those good pieces It does me so much good to hear from my dear brethren and sisters in the Lord.—Dear sisters, you that are acquainted with me, both far and near, I would say, let us live faithful and pray for each other while we are in this world of sin and sorrow, that when we come to die we may meet in heaven where parting is known no more. I became acquainted with a great many kind and loving sisters while I was traveling through the Far West. I do not expect to see all of them again in this world I would say to all, I spend a great many lonely hours with my little children when my companion is away preaching. He started away last Monday: he is to be away 24 days. When the last hour came that we would have to part, oh how did my poor heart feel! I felt as if it were hard to part when I saw him giving his little children good-bye, and saw their tears streaming down their cheeks. What is all this for? It is to try to save poor sinners. Oh yes, I feel willing to do my part to have poor sinners saved. Oh what a thought that one poor soul should hear the voice, "Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." Dear brethren and sisters let us do all we can to save sinners.

NANCY WISE.

Scenery Hill, Pa.

Dear Brother; I feel to sympathize with you in your afflictions, hoping the good Lord may sanctify them to your good and the good of others. "It is good for me that I was afflicted," says the Royal Psalmist. (see Psalm cxix.) "yet no affliction," says an Apostle, "for the present is pleasant, but grievous, but afterward it bringeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness," and these fruits will be pleasant, and the more so, from the fact, as Bunyan, has it, if the bitter come before the sweet, it will only make the sweet sweeter.

"Our troubles and our trials here,
Will only make us richer there,
When we arrive at home."

And we sometimes sing in the language of another Poet:

"No chilling winds, nor poisonous breath,
Can reach that healthful shore,
Sickness, and sorrow, pain and death,
Are fear'd, and felt no more."

The state of my health is such, that I have found it needful for me to keep in doors for the last several months, hence, I have not assembled with my dear brethren as I have wont to do for the last 40 years or upwards; yet I am glad to know that our intercourse as brethren (in the ministry) has heretofore been such, that they can (as I think,) get along almost without me; but they frequently call to consult with me. On last Sunday I was permitted to meet with them once more for public worship; and since I met with them once, in order to pay the last tribute of respect to an aged friend, I have suffered some from the exposure.—The brethren have consented to hold meetings in this place for a season; some of our members cannot get out to our regular places of worship on account of the distance, and the state of the Roads, at this season of the year: our meeting Houses being 3, and 4, and 6 miles off.

The brethren of the Eastern District of Maryland contemplate meeting in District meeting on the first Tuesday after Easter, with our dear brethren in Middletown Valley congregation.

We contemplate meeting in Council at Pipe Creek, (preparatory to the District meeting) on Saturday the 6th day of March; when we also intend to make arrangements for our Spring Communion, to be held at the place where the Y. M. of 1857 was held. Some of our brethren are speaking about going to this year's Annual Meeting. They contemplate going by private conveyance, and stopping with the brethren by the way; several contemplate going in the same manner, and stopping to preach where the brethren have never preached. I would say to all of my dear brethren in the ministry, whenever you can do so, in going to or from the place of Y. M., try and do likewise. We have an example in the history of our Savior, when he went up to Jerusalem for the last time, he went by via, of Jericho, which was as some say, round about, but, by going that way, blind Bartimeus, had his eyes opened, "and followed Jesus in the way." And I entertain no doubt in case the brethren would consent, like the Master, to go around about way, that they might become instrumental in opening the eyes of at least some also. Brethren think of it. Yours as ever.

PHILIP BOYLE.

New Windsor, Md.

To the church in Fayette Co. W. Va.

Dear brethren and sisters; My mind often reverts to the time and place when and where we last enjoyed each other's association, and sweet fellowship one with another: and although we parted with grief and sadness, yet every remembrance of you brings joy and gladness to my soul. We parted but for a while and that too, with the bright hope that we would all one day meet again in the fond embrace of him who died for us. And while we are separated thus, let the watch word ever be, onward and upward, always remembering Lot's wife.

I am well aware of the fact that some think that we are among a wild and uncivilized people; but not so, we are in a fine and productive country, and in the midst of a kind and hospitable people, and especially do we rejoice to find ourselves surrounded by a group of kind brethren and sisters whose hearts are ever open and ready to respond to the cries of the needy. Others who are yet outside of the kingdom militant, have been our constant friends, ever ready to assist, and stood by us in every trouble, both in sickness and in health. May Heaven's rich blessings be theirs.

Now dear brethren and sisters, let us all be ever upon our guard, for we are told by the words of inspiration that the "adversary of our souls is going about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour;" and as your faith and zeal are spoken of where ever you are known, see that you abound in these christian graces more and more. And especially would I say to my young brethren and sisters, let no one despise thy youth—but be thou examples of the believers, and by your chaste walk and godly lives show to all your worldly associates that there is reality in the Religion of Jesus. Let not your seats be vacant in the house of the Lord, but ever be at your post, and in this way you will hold up the hands your speaker; you will thus be as bone and sinew unto him: yea, you will mightily strengthen his nerve, and give power to the word that is spoken. Let not the Lord's work stop for want of any thing that you can do. And to my aged brethren and sisters, I would say: the time is soon coming when you shall be gathered unto the fathers, and your hoary hairs shall no more be seen among us, to guide our youthful feet into the old paths, therefore in joyful remembrance of your wholesom counsel to me, I say to you, farewell for awhile. And to my fellow laborer, I would say, oft do I remember you, and the many toilsome marches which we took in company over mountain and dale that we might be instrumental in saving a soul from death. May God grant us grace still to persevere. Pray for me your weak brother.

Brother John Barnhart, Urbana, Ills., under date of Feb. 19th, writes: "We are well pleased with the Companion, but we do think there has been enough said on the subject of feetwashing. We think it would be more edifying if the brethren would write more on the great principles of the Christian Religion—Holiness, love, humility, self-denial, and many other bright examples of our Lord and Savior,—and warn against pride, and covetousness, and the many other evils that are surrounding the Church and destroying the very best principles of our holy religion. We know the word tells us that "without holiness no man shall see the Lord." Let us strive, then, to make the Companion an effectual auxiliary for the salvation of the Children of men."

One more Letter about the "Wolf."

Brother Holsinger :—Please state once more through the Companion, something about the "imposter," which I believe the brethren have rightly so called. The history which the brethren have given is correct. When here with us she gave her name as Anna Mohler, formerly Harshy. Said she resided near Chambersburg, Pa.; gave her age at 63; is tall; has black eyes and gray hair; has a long nose which she called 'a mark of benevolence;' is cunning and intelligent; talks fast, and reads both English and German. She also told my wife that she belonged to "no church;" but to me she was a Menonite.

We love to do all the good we can to strangers,—this belongs to Christians; but we found we had entertained a thief. This is written that the Brethren may not be imposed upon.

Queries.

Who will give us an interpretation of the following words? "And he cast down the prices of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself." Matt. 27: 5. "Now this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst assunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out." Acts, 1: 18. "That he might go to his own place." Acts, 1: 25. An explanation is desired.

1. Where did Judas put the money?

2. On the death of Judas.

3. That he might go to his own place. What place has the Apostle reference to?

Will some brother give an explanation of the 23rd verse of the 20th chapter of the Gospel by John.—"Whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained."

ABRAHAM S. LEER.

From Brother Heyser.

The second anniversary of my sojourn in Georgia seems to me a suitable time to speak through "the Companion" to beloved ones who feel interested in the spread of the Gospel thro' the southern country. A review of the past two years brings to mind little else than trials and disappointments; and a look into the future, gives promise of excessive toil for head, heart, and hands, and the same checkered pathway while here.

But I try willingly to press onward if God's will be so. Seeing with an eye of faith the assembled Throng, and hopefully listen to hear the Savior say, "In as much as you did it to the least of these, ye did it unto me," I do not regret the undertaking. Though in doing so I was forced to sever many pleasant connections. And deprive myself of many blessed occasions of rejoicing among Brethren and friends.

Some have said my services were needed at home, but I have not considered the subject in that light, knowing that the place of one poor, weak, little one, is easily supplied where there are so many better as examples, and more capable as teachers.

I have not changed my views with regard to the duty of Christians, to occupy so vast a field of labor as is open in the Southern States. We may differ as to whether it were the best plan to work in slowly along the borders, or strike out into the midst of the field. To me it looks like this:—Throw a pebble into the edge of the Lake and you see the waves circling outward only; but throw it far out, and all around the element is in motion. Consequently I have dropped far out with plenty room all around. There is room for all, and still the cry would come, "The harvest is great but laborers few."

So we may differ as to the plan of working; and, in fact, one plan will not suit all classes or localities. In coming here, I tried to study the the most effective way to accomplish good; and a sojourn of two years has strengthened me in the belief that ignorance is the one great bar to the prosperous spread of true Christianity, especially among the colored people. They really want to be Christians; but so much as has been wrongly done, must first be undone, that I sometimes feel discouraged.

Where associations have been formed, and have gone into the work, with men and means, gratifying results have followed. But little can be done by a single individual, without money or friends in a strange land, who comes to preach sentiments unknown, and unsuited to the taste of the people.

Were it man alone who was to do the work,—one, even with the energy and ability of the great apostle, might well shrink from the task Jonah-like. But when we hear Jehovah's promise to sustain weak ones, we feel willing still to work and wait. With his support, and through the aid rendered by those interested in the work, we have been able to do what has been done. With grateful hearts we accepted what was freely offered and tried to use it as was intended, feeling very anxious to make the mission (if allowed so to call it) a self-sustaining one. I believed that here the most good could be accomplished by teaching School; But when compelled to relinguish it, tilling the soil seemed to be the only occupation for a stranger. An unfavorable season for crops, coupled with other causes, interfered with our plans, and made me fear that a like failure the coming season would force me to abandon the mission.—I had been solicited by the citizens of this county to fill a clerkship, though undecided for a long time whether to accept or not. Seeing the position would bring me in contact with most persons in the county, and might open the way for future usefulness, I accepted the position so generously offered to me, more from that view than from any pecuniary reward that it would bring, hoping that the good Lord will hereafter direct as we trust he has in the past directed our footsteps in the path of duty. Our school is at present under the control and instruction of the American Missionary Association.

We have a flourishing Sabbath School, averaging about 150 in attendance. It is under the direction of two school teachers, my wife and and self, assisted by about twenty young colored men and women as teachers. As we dismiss the children we form the teachers and others to the number of about 40 into four separate Bible classes, and so do what we can to make the people familiar with the Scriptures.

Having been over-burthened during the past few months, I have not found time to answer all the communications that have been addressed to me, concerning inducements for brethren to settle here. Nearly all come too late to be of service, this year as all contracts are entered into and moving done at Christmas instead of April as at home; but I intend still to answer those inquiries, and will cheerfully give all the information I can, as I feel anxious to have brethren come here, and believe many could better their condition in a temporal point of view, and do more for the Master.

As ever in bonds of affection,

E. MILLS E.R.

Madison, Ga. Feb. 20th, 1869.

Brother Michael Forney of Parkersburg, Ills., says: "We have our meetings every Sunday, and sometimes two in one day. We had five additions by baptism last summer.—I trust my labor is not altogether in vain."

We trust, dear brother, your labor is not in vain, for the command is "Cast thy bread upon the waters." This we should all endeavor to do, and "patiently wait" for the manifestation of the Lord's part of the work, for one may plant and another may water, but God must give the increase.—E.

Brother James M. Hutchison of Lindside, W. Va. under date of Feb. 12th., writes: "I have been a reader of the Companion for twelve months. It has been a welcome visitor to our house. I think that all lovers of truth should be readers of the Companion as well as of the Bible. It appears to me to be a forbidden a against the influence of the evils of the adversary of souls. It brings to us the welcome news that sinners are being born of God, yea, receive that white stone, and in that stone a new name written that no man knoweth save he that receiveth it."

A Loud Warning.

Sometime in November, 1868, a woman who lived in —— Co., Ohio, died under peculiar circumstances. Last Summer the family to which she belonged, built a farmhouse. This house is the largest in the county, having thirty rooms, with an almost endless amount of fancy work; and it has been preached by some who know, that her whole heart seemed to be fixed on her house and the furnishing of it.

A few days before they were going to move into the house, she began washing; and not getting thro' with the work by daylight, she kept on after night. Her husband tried to dissuade her, but could not. He then helped her. About 1 o'clock at night she was so ill that they thought she could not live until day, but she lingered about a week with the strongest desire to get well. She had such a grasp upon the world she could not let it go until death took the power.

Although wealthy, it is said the needy stood a poor chance at her door, even for employment. O what a warning to those who set their affections on the things of this world! As the preacher said, she was like the rich man who said: "My soul take thine ease: thou hast much goods laid up for many days." But what was the answer?

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Prayer.

Fervent prayer is as necessary for the development of the spiritual mind of the Christian as that of air, light and food for the natural body. It is an indispensable auxiliary, tending to the promotion of spiritual life and activity; casting out fear, removing doubts, and thereby producing firm and relying faith in God's word. In connection with other graces, it has such an influence over the whole man as to model the body, soul, and spirit unto holiness, "without which no man shall see the Lord." By it the soul is drawn into such a close communion and intimacy with its divine Originator as to cause us to "walk with God." Without prayer it is next to impossible to stem the storms of life, surrounded as we are by the continued upheavings of opposing elements, where on every side is heard the continued commingling of horrid sounds and fascinating jinglings, emanating from an innumerable host that worship the "beast" and follow in the wake of him who "goeth about as a roaring lion." Prayer is the plaintive voice that moves upon the troubled waters and brings about a great calm. 'Tis the shield or rod that wards off the lightnings that flash from the dark and baleful elements of the world,—the heaven-ordained means whereby the muttering thunders of sin's doings are silenced. The pencil that clasps to the heart the vine of God's grace that reaches heavenward, and through which we draw continued supplies of vital essence from the very throne of the Eternal Father. The golden chain that links the immortal principle of man with Deity. The key that unlocks the store-house of heaven and causes God in the plenitude of his mercy to shower "holy manna all around." And by it kindred spirits are cemented together in one eternal bond of union and love.

Fervent and humble prayer is the "oil of gladness" that preserves the soul from rust, the body and spirit from all uncleanness. The sentinel at the door, ever ready to warn in time of danger. The valiant soldier that keeps at bay the legion of devils that seek to rob and plunder the heart. The spring of life from which flow the waters that quench the thirst of the fevered soul. The food that gives strength and vigor to "run the race." The bridle that curbs the tongue and so controls it that our "conversation be in heaven." The lever that removes "every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us." The money with which we "buy" supplies for our lamps that they may be kept burning. And prayer is the precious "Philosopher's stone," that turns everything we touch into pure gold. Heaven treasures secure in the saint's store house in heaven, where no "thieves break through and steal"—fixes them as glittering gems in our "laid up" crown of glory. In truth 'tis the magnet that draws our affections and our hopes heavenward. It is the great renovating principle that influences and draws around us a pure and holy atmosphere, in which the soul to move, free from the soot and smoke that "goeth up" from the chambers of darkness.

That prayer, to the heaven-bound pilgrim, is of signal importance, none can deny. It is one of the most prominent features that characterize the scheme of redemption. To say nothing of what was done by prayer under the old dispensation we have sufficiency of evidence in the new to convince any and all of its essentiality. The Savior, though "without sin" how fervent were his prayers and how often did he pour out his soul in this way, in what an emphatic manner did he command his disciples relative to this duty. "Watch and pray" was the watch word then, most assuredly it should be the same now; "seeing we also are encompassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses." Oh how many, it is to be feared, are seeking to enter in at the "straight gate" and "shall not be able." How often do resolutions arise in the mind and promises are made to "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called," and as often fail by reason of indwelling sin. Is there not a cause; the sequel if made manifest doubtless would be a neglect of prayer or want of firm reliance in the promises. Some by way of paliation or excuse say "I cant pray," thus virtually saying, cant be a christian! when the invitation is to come "whosoever will let him take the water of life freely." What! cant ask God for what you need? rather die than beg of Him who has said "ask and ye shall receive?" 'Long ere the child can lisp its parents name it makes its wants known, and does the loving parent withhold its daily wants; or turn a deaf ear to its needy requests, because it cannot ask in plain and fluent terms? Verily no. Much less will our heavenly parent stay his hand, when it is declared "all things whatsoever ye ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive" Matt. 21: 22. Though our petitions be in broken accents, or "groanings," He knows the heart and its desires. Often, in secret prayer, seek an interview with the Lord, and the weakest "babe in Christ" will be surprised at the rapid development of grace and power to overcome," be amazed at the at the prompt answers to petitions asked aright.

Not long since an aged man with whitened looks and trembling step a professed follower of the Lord from his youth, remarked to me, he was not gratified to pray in his family or in public! I told him he knew not what he could do, depending upon the Lord until he made the attempt not long after, he said I have made the trial and succeeded! Now he prays in public, and regrets that he so long gave way to the flesh. Knowing the dangers that beset us on every side, can any one consistently neglect this important requirement of high heaven? May we all pray "always," that is have at all times a praying disposition, ever ready to give God thanks for all things. God forbid that any one having named the name of Jesus in true faith should ever have only the "form of godliness but denying the power thereof," which we may to some extent do by neglecting to often to lift up our hearts in prayer and thanksgiving.

Kingdom of Heaven.

We frequently read in the Evangelists of the kingdom of heaven, a phrase in which the dispensation of the Messiah was revealed by the prophets in the Old Testament, particularly by Daniel, who mentions it as a kingdom which the God of heaven would set up and which should never be destroyed. Dan. 2: 44. The same prophet also speaks of it as a kingdom to be given with glory and dominion over all people nations and languages to one like unto the Son of man. Dan. 7: 13—14. See also Micah 4: 6—7. The Jews accustomed to their way of speaking expected the kingdom of the Messiah to resemble that of a temporal king, exercising power on his enemies, restoring the Hebrew monarchy and the throne of David to all its splendor, subduing the nations and rewarding his friends and faithful servants in proportion to their fidelity and services. Hence the early contests among the Apostles about precedency in his kingdom, and hence the sons of Zebedee desired the two chief places in it. According to the prophecy of Daniel this kingdom was to take place during the existence of the Roman empire, the least of the four great monarchies that had succeeded each other. And as it was set up by the God of heaven, it is it the New Testament termed the kingdom of heaven. It was typified by the Jewish theocracy & declared to be at hand by John the Baptist, and by Christ and his Apostles also in the days of his flesh; but it did not come with power till Jesus rose from the dead, and sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high. Acts 2; 32—37. Then was he most solemnly inaugurated and proclaimed king of the universe and especially of the New Testament church, amidst adoring myriads of attendant angels, and the Spirits of just men made perfect. Then were fulfilled the words of Jehovah by David: "I have set my King upon my holy hill of Zion." Ps. 2: 6. This is that Spiritual, evangelical, and eternal empire to which he himself referred when interrogated before Pontius Pilate; and in reference to which he said: "My kingdom is not of this world." His empire indeed extends to every creature, for all authority is committed into his hands both in heaven and on earth, and he is head over all things to the church. But his kingdom primarily imports the Gospel church, which is the subject of his laws, the seat of his government, and the object of his care. And being surrounded by powerful opposers he is represented as ruling in the midst of his enemies.

This kingdom is not of a worldly origin or nature, nor has it this world for its end or object. It can neither be promoted nor defended by worldly power, influence or carnal weapons, but by bearing witness unto the truth, or by the preaching of the gospel, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. Its establishment among men is progressive, but it is destined at last to fill the whole earth. Dan. 2: 35. Rev. 11: 15. The real subjects are only those who are of the truth, and hear Christ's voice, for none can enter it but such as are "born from above." John 3: 3—5.—Its privileges and immunities are not of this world, but such as are spiritual and heavenly. They are all spiritual blessings in heavenly things in Christ Jesus. Over this glorious kingdom death has no power. It extends as well to the future as to the present world, and though entered here by renewing grace, it is inherited in its perfection in the world of glory. Hypocrites and false brethren may indeed insinuate themselves into it here, but they will have no possible place in it hereafter, for at the coming of Christ the foolish virgins will be separated from the wise, (Matth. 25) for neglecting to take oil in their vessels with their lamps. They will not be ready to enter in with him to the marriage.

M. Neher's Query.

The "Urim and the Thummim," spoken of in Exodus 28: 30, according to my knowledge, means nothing else than "Light" and "Perfection." These words we believe were engraved in very beautiful letters on the breast-plate of judgment. And these two 'words Aaron was to wear in the breast-plate of judgment for the command was: "That they shall be upon Aaron's heart when he goeth in before the Lord: and Aaron shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart before the Lord, continually. Ex. 28 30.

I will here also give an extract from "Smith's Dictionary of the Bible," page 971: "URIM means 'Light' and THUMMIM means "perfection." We are told that the "Urim and the Thummim" were to be on Aaron's heart when he goes in before the Lord. When Joshua is solemnly appointed to succeed the great hero-lawgiver, he is bidden to stand before Eleazar, the priest "Who shall ask counsel for him after the judgment of Urim, and this movement is to determine the movement of the host of Israel. (Num. 27: 21.) In the blessings of Moses they appear as the crowning glory of the tribe of Levi: "Thummim and thy Urim are with the Holy One." (Deut. 33: 8, 9.) In what way the Urim and the Thummim were consulted is quite uncertain. Josephus and the Rabbins supposed that the stones gave out the oracular answer by preternatural illumination. But it seems to be far more simple, and most in agreement with the different accounts of inquiries made by Urim and Thummim, (1st Saml. 14: 3, 18, 19; 23, 2, 4, 9, 11, 12: 23: 6; Judges 20: 28: 2d Saml 5: 2, 3, &c,) to suppose that the answer was simply given by the word of the Lord to the high priest, (compare John 11: 51,) when he had inquired of the Lord, clothed with the Ephod and Breastplate. Such a view agrees with the true notion of the breastplate, of which it was not the leading characteristic to be oracular, but only an incidental privilege connected with its fundamental meaning.—What that meaning was we learn from Ex. 28: 30, where we read, "Aaron shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart before the Lord continually." Now the Judicial sentence is one by which any one is either justified or condemned. In prophetic vision, as in actual oriental life, the sentence of justification was often expressed by the nature of the robe worn. "He hath clothed me with the garment of salvation." "He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh him with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with jewels." Isaiah 61: 10 is a good illustration of this. In like manner in Rev. 3: 5; 7: 9; 19: 14; &c., the white linen robe expresseth the righteousness or justification of the saints."

For the Companion.

A letter to brother George Bateman.

DEAR BROTHER: I feel impressed in spirit to mingle my sympathies and emotions of the heart with your sore afflictions in the family circle. When the solemn message of the death of your dear companion in life, reached me, the cold chills rushed through my whole frame. In a moment, my thoughts reverted to the past, and opened to the mind's view the social and happy visits we enjoyed with each other, while you lived in the east. I remembered how pleasant, lively, and amiable sister Lydia was, and that her conversation was coupled with fear, being holy and chaste, which made her so attractive within the circle she moved.

Now she has gone to meet her Savior in the regions of eternal glory, to reap the reward of a sober, righteous and pious life. O why should we weep then? We know you weep not as having no hope of her future blessedness. But the ties of nature are strong, yet not so strong but the Almighty in his providential foresight can easily break it asunder, in a moment—a twinkling of an eye. There are chords within nature's attachment, which are very tender. These are closely watched with a father's, a mother's, a husband's, a wife's, a brother's, and a sister's care. When the withering hand of disease touches any of those chords,—what a painful anxiety does it soon occasion! and when death inflicts the fatal blow, a wound is made that earth cannot heal. If we had no hope of a future state, we would be, as the apostle Paul remarked, of all men the most miserable. When we think of the many mansions in our Father's house prepared for us all—dead and living—a happy consolation forces itself upon us; that "earth has no sorrows that heaven cannot heal."

I and my companion can somewhat appreciate your solemn and downcast feelings under your afflictions.—Last Thursday, (25 Feb.) we had to undergo the painful duty of following our little babe to its last resting place on earth, when the clods of the valley now hide its body from mortal view. Were it not that God claims his precious jewels to adorn his great Ethereal Kingdom, we would enter serious and grievous complaints. We try to resign our will to an all-wise providence with this holy consideration: The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." We also have the consolation that Christ, the Savior, has received it in paradise, where no pains are endured, no tears shed, no sighs heard, no sorrows felt, and no wounds inflicted. Where roses are without thorns, flowers without brambles,—where spring is perpetual, and light without clouds. There the tree of life is blooming, rivers of pleasure flow, and flowers never fade. Myriads of happy spirits are there, replenishing themselves with the bread of life, and anointing themselves with the oil of gladness,—surrounding the throne of God with the perpetual hymn of Moses and the Lamb. Angels with golden harps sing praises there continually, and cherubims fly on wings of fire. Well might inspiration say, "Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it ever entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love him." When we look forth and behold the earth; it is pleasant, and filled with many delightful things,—for it is God's earth, and he hath done all things well. But heaven is far better. There we shall not grieve any more, nor be sick any more, nor do wrong any more. There, the cold of winter will not wither us, nor the heat of summer scorch us. There we shall meet all good men, and all dearly love one another; for "Love is heaven and heaven is love." Wherefore, my dearly beloved brother, let us not pine our lives away, but try to comfort one another with these thoughts.

S. B. FURRY.

MEANNESS.—How difficult it is to be of a meek and forgiving spirit, when despitefully used. To love an enemy, and to forgive an evil speaker is a higher attainment than is commonly believed. It is very easy to talk of Christian forbearance among neighbors, but to practice it ourselves proves us to be true christians.

Feet Washing.

While Christians of almost every denomination profess to adopt the same Scriptures as the rule both of faith and practice, they yet draw, or seem to draw from the sacred volume conclusions widely different.—Many causes doubtless contribute to this effect; and none, perhaps, more than the corruption of our nature, which blinds the understanding, and hardens the heart; which, in one man, exalts itself against the humbling doctrine and truths of the Gospel, and in another refuses obedience to its self-denying precepts.—Still we find difference of opinion, which exist between those who do study with candor, the revealed "will" of our Blessed Lord.

This indeed seems to be the case with the Brethren in regard to feet washing. Since the controversy has been going on I have read with some interest the different views of my brethren and while each brother who has written on the subject has given his views as he believes to be right, I have thought, what a pity, a little band can not see eye to eye! But as such is the case, let us, above all things have CHARITY.

I have withheld my pen from writing on the subject of feet washing, and do not now write to agitate the question any more than it is. I would calm the agitation. When the committee visited us in November last, to confer with us, they requested that the subject of feet washing should not be agitated any more than it was to which I assented. But I wish to say to my Brethren, that no charge can be laid to the Philadelphia church for any trouble which has, or may arise about feet washing. To the best of my knowledge we never did contend with any of the brethren, who practice it differently from us. But when asked, why we practiced feet washing in the single mode, we did not refuse an answer. I feel to say further, I have been a member of the church for over thirteen years, and I never heard from a brother or sister, feet washing mentioned, (until about a year past) as differing from what is now (as I am informed) the general order of the brethren, (as we are told, "as we are the minority").

We have always practiced feet washing in the single mode. That is, that the one that washes wipes, and from which we do not want to change. "We stand united," contending that it was the old way the brethren first practiced it at Germantown. (The mother church.)

Now as much has been said and written upon the subject. I do not think it necessary for me to add any thing more, for all that has been written upon it, has not according to my view, made it any plainer than the plain words of our Savior, as recorded by St. John. No command, in the New Testament is more plainly given to us than the command of feet washing. And is it not strange, nearly every denomination of professed christians throw it away entirely, as nonessential, and we that do obey the command, and practice it. understand the way it should be performed, differently? Now if such be the case, let us be careful that we give no cause for offense; but let us have that charity and that forbearance which alone belongs to every child of God, and if we cannot now see eye to eye, let us trust the matter in the hand of an all wise God, and with a prayerful heart, and with a full belief that what even is "His Will," will be done.

Feet-Washing.

TO BRO. BENJ. LEER:—There is, as you say, considerable "stress" put upon the words "one another" in the communication to which you allude. The scriptural proof that they deserve all that emphasis and much more, if possible, is at hand, and will be given.

The words "one another," as illustrated by the Savior in his example, can include but two persons in its performance. Christ, who washed and wiped each disciple's feet was the one, and each disciple was the other.

The words "one another" certainly do allude to wiping as well as to washing, because the Master says, "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." Who can say the use of the towel is not included in this example or pattern?

The single mode of Feetwashing is a part of "The faith once delivered to the saints." The Savior, as proved above, delivered to his apostles; the apostles delivered it to the churches they established; and when the "man-child" was born, or primitive christianity was re-established by the Brethren, at Swartzenau in Germany, it was found by them in searching the scriptures with "much prayer and fasting," in the 13th chapter of the Gospel according to St. John.

After they had been driven to this country by persecution, they established the single mode of feet washing in the little church they organized at Germantown; and we still keep that ordinance as those "ancient brethren" delivered it to us. We do not however recognize any authority in those brethren to hand it down to us, aside from the word of the Lord; but we trace the power back to the great head and law-giver of the Church.

You ask, "Who was it that delivered the faith to the saints? Was it Germantown and Philadelphia, or even the ancient brethren of Germantown"? How you could draw the inference from the article you have criticised, that its author held any such idea is hard to understand. All that was intended to be shown by that communication were the facts mentioned above, that is, to prove that the single mode of feetwashing was instituted by Christ, and that the change to the double mode was never sanctioned by the mother church at Germantown.

A good opportunity is now offered to mention another fact. The change from the single to the double mode was made, but there is no record in the proceedings of any Yearly Meeting to show that it was made by the authority of the body. The inference is that the Brethren thoughtlessly allowed it to creep in gradually until it came to be considered an order in the house of God. There is no doubt that it was at first, in a few instances, temporarily adopted to gain time when the brethren had, previous to the administration of this ordinance, spoken a good while, where there were a large number of communicants.

While the proof derived from the word of the Lord, in favor of the single mode is unanswerable, I have been seeking in vain for a word of scriptural evidence for the double mode. The theory of representation, upon which many place so much "stress," has no foundation at all either in the precept or 'example' of the Savior. Admitting that theory, for a moment, to be correct, Christ represented himself when he instituted feetwashing, but where was the representative of his church? He did not even intimate that he intended to establish such a theory, by calling on one of his disciples to gird himself, and represent his brethren in the act of wiping.

You say at the conclusion of your article, "We have a guide to go by which we hold in higher reputation," and intimate that those who advocate the single mode are "contentious." Now brother Leer, I for one do not wish to be contentious, but love the brotherhood so well that I would be willing to sacrifice anything but the truth to be in accord with them. Bring your scriptural evidence in favor of the double mode. I am open to conviction, and will gladly yield when convinced. Your proof must however not be based upon any theory or device, but upon "Thus saith the Lord."

The Unpardonable Sin.

Being left altogether by myself this Sabbath afternoon, and taking a Testament and commencing to read, I soon reached the place where our Savior speaks of sinning against the Holy Ghost. Matth. 12: 31.—Whilst reflecting on this passage, I concluded to give a thought on this subject, without criticising, or even referring to any of the articles written upon this subject, which made their appearance in the Companion some time since.

I for myself understand the Savior from the beginning of the 25th verse to the end of the 45th verse of the chapter, to be talking to, and concerning the Pharisees. The Savior had just performed one of his wonderful miracles, by which he proved so clearly to all that he was in very deed the Son of God. The performing of this miracle did not only show the power and goodness of the Son of God, and prove his heavenly origin, but it had its desired effect upon the minds of the common people. See verse 23rd. The Pharisees being the open enemies of our Lord, mortified at being the people convinced of the divinity of Jesus, on account of his mighty works, most wickedly, against all reason and better knowledge, attributed the miracles of Christ to the work and power of the Devil; whereupon the Savior, from the beginning of the 25th to the end of the 45th verses, addresses himself to those notorious blasphemers, in words which they cannot gainsay nor resist; showing to them the unreasonableness of their argument. Now I am persuaded that these hypocrites knew full well that it was not by Beelzebub that our Lord cast out devils, for we hear one who was a member of their sect, and a principal man among them, confess: "We know that thou art a teacher sent from God, for no man can do these works that thou doest except God be with him." Now those Pharisees, with the scribes, were learned in the Old Testament Scriptures. Which scriptures the apostle informs us, came by holy men, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. 2 Peter 1: 21. It will be seen then that whatever knowledge the Old Testament student of that day acquired by the reading of the Scriptures, was transmitted to him by the agency of the Holy Spirit. Inasmuch, therefore, as these hypocritical characters had the wickedness to ascribe to the wicked one that which they knew by the scriptures as well as what they were daily permitted to behold with their own eyes, to be the work of God. I conclude they sinned against the Holy Ghost. See 45th verse. But I do not understand that the power, or possibility of sinning against the Holy Spirit, is limited alone to the class of characters to whom our Savior was here addressing himself. I believe that such as had been cleansed from their former sins, may fall away, and commit the unpardonable sin. I do not believe, however, that in every case such as fall, do by so doing sin against the Holy Spirit; for it is well known that even under the Mosaic system, God manifested himself as a merciful God; and we have instances on record under that dispensation, where God pardoned the grossest of crimes upon genuine repentance. How much more will he not pardon the penitent sinner under the gospel dispensation, which is represented as a system of grace and mercy.

"For all things are Yours."

Friendly reader, Christian brother and sister: I have been meditating upon the exalted position that the true christian occupies. And while meditating on the sublime promises of the gospel of our Lord, our mind reverted to the language that stands at the head of this essay. The apostle in this chapter (1 Cor. 3,) among other things brings to bear the fact that "the wisdom of the world is foolishness with God." Therefore saith he, "let no man glory in men; for all things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours; and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." What a beautiful illustration, setting forth to us that, possessing Christ and being possessed of him, we have the privilege of enjoying all things pertaining to the Church.

To illustrate farther: Paul, Apollos, and Cephas, were ministers; and the Corinthian brethren had the benefit of their united labors in the ministry: they no doubt labored very zealously in the cause, so that the brethren were much refreshed and strengthened. Just so we have the benefits of the labors of the ministry in this our day. And although our ministers are for the most part "local," or reside among us, yet we have the benefits of their labors. And in connection with this at times we also have the pleasure of a visit of some "strange" or foreign brethren, and they are permitted to enjoy the benefits of the united labors of the Ministry: sitting beneath the dripings of the sanctuary, and receiving wholesome admonitions, words of comfort and consolation, thereby becoming strengthened in the inner man. And just here we might say, that through the medium of our welcome periodicals, we have the privilege of hearing the brethren, from "far and near," speak words of comfort and consolation. Oh! how many hearts are made glad, through this means of grace. Truly when we consider the glorious Gospel Priviledges we enjoy in this land of Bibles; being permitted to worship God beneath our own "vine and fig tree," we may with propriety say, "all things are your's."

Again considering the matter from another standpoint; when we travel among the brethren where true Christians love prevails, although we may be many miles from our homes, yet all things that are necessary to make us comfortable, are ours. We are permitted to surround their tables with them, and enjoy the benefits of what they have provided. Yet more, we share their hospitality in being permitted to rest our weary heads on their downy pillows. Hence we repeat again "all things are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." In consideration of those facts, or in consideration of the fact, that we shall be permitted to enjoy the "life that now is," the Apostle may well say, "It does not yet appear what we shall be," but the fact that we are Christ's, and Christ is God's, inspires us with holy emotions; and we are assured that not only in this life "are all things yours," but that in the "world to come," we shall be "heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ," and thus be permitted to enjoy "all things," that God in the plentitude of his mercy has prepared, and holds in reservation, for all those that love and serve him.

Christian brother and sister, let us, O! let us endeavor so to live that we may be permitted to enjoy those blessings, and priviledges, that have been so dearly purchased for us, by and through the atoning blood of Christ: "who though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty, might be made rich." Unto his most holy name, be ascribed all praise, honor and adoration, now and forever more. Amen.

The Commission.

"And he said unto them; Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. Mark 16: 15.

The text above given should make deep impressions to every reader, and particularly to the minister of the Gospel, as the commission was given by our Lord to the Apostles to go and preach the Gospel. Now the question is, Do we the Ministers of the Gospel fill that commission that was given by our Lord through the Apostles? I am fearful that many of us ministers come short of making full proof of the mission given to us: for this reason I take the pen to investigate the subject.

"And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them." Mark 16: 20. Then turn to the "Acts of the Apostles," and we discover that they commenced the mission given to them by preaching the Gospel to the Jews and the Greeks, and as is declared in Acts 2: 46: "Continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart; again Acts 20: 7: "And, upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them." Taking these, with many other scriptures we might adduce, we come to the conclusion that it is filling the commission where there is an organized Church that only meet for worship once in two weeks.

I was much surprised when on a visit this winter to the state of Indiana, and found large, organized Churches with from one to three meeting houses in each branch, and only holding one meeting in every two weeks in each of those organized Churches. Could it be possible that the Lord has given us every first day of the week for to keep in honor to him, and a day set apart for worship, and yet we would only occupy half of the time. Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him. Preaching the kingdom of God. Acts 28: 30, 31: Paul was not only satisfied to preach on every first day of the week, but for two whole years at one place; and at other times he preached until midnight; and again, until the break of day. We need not fear of preaching too often, when we see the necessity of it in order to convict the sinner to repentance. The Apostle Paul exhorted Timothy, and gave him the charge to "preach the word: be instant in season and out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine." 2 Tim. 4: 2.

This proves to a full satisfaction of my mind that in order to fill the commission, we must meet every first day of the week for to preach the Gospel. And less that that would be losing the time given to us to preach the Gospel to sinners, to convict and convert them to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Passing Time Away.

As this side of the sheet is somewhat soiled, I will pass some time in scribbling on it, whatever may occur to my mind. Even the foregoing words, "Pass some time," afford a subject for serious reflection. First, this being Sunday, and I not at meeting, the question is: Have I a sufficient excuse for my absence from the house of God? The inspired man of God Paul says, "Redeeming the time, because the days are evil."—And, an old adage says: "For satan has some mischief still, for idle hands to do." May I then always, when not engaged in active duty, ask myself, How is it that I am not engaged in something useful?

Such questions are well calculated to remind us of our duty, as well as of our folly; and are in accordance with divine practice. When Adam, our first parent, vainly tried to hide himself when he heard the voice of God in the garden, the Almighty, (though he well knew where the man was) called him saying, "Adam, where art thou?" I have no doubt but this interrogation was intended for the man's reproof, and not at all for information to the enquirer.

Again, when Elijah the prophet fled from the persecuting Queen Jezebel, and was in a cave on Mount Horeb, after the storm, the fire, and earthquake had passed, the Lord passed by in a still small voice, calling to the prophet: "What doest thou here, Elijah?" Doubtless to remind him of his weakness, and also of the power with which he had been endued: for, but shortly before, we behold the elements at his command; at his bidding the heavens withheld their rain; again at his command there was abundance of rain. But though I may no. be permitted thus to act with the seal of God, visibly to crown my labors, may I still, though in an humble sphere, so pass my time, "that I may give for every day some good account at last."

Warning to Talebearers.

Brethren: If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Gal. 6: 1.

Brethren, let us see how this command of St. Paul to the Galations is observed in this our day? I am sorry to say that I have frequently seen quite the reverse among those who call themselves brethren, and profess to be spiritually-minded. If a man is overtaken in a fault, or even if they hear some evil report of a brother; if they even themselves doubt its being true; they take every opportunity to circulate it abroad; and forget that the Scripture makes it their duty to go to their brother and, in the spirit of meekness, endeavor to restore him, or at least see if the report is true or not.

How Near is Heaven.

Christians sometimes look far away to Heaven; but that rest is not far off. The clouds that hide their shining worlds are thin, they are transient, and soon will obscure no more; the journey may end this hour; one short step may place the Christian in a ray of light; one dark hour may hang upon him; but the morning come and shade behind it. Day, bright, peaceful and eternal, succeeds it. A pang may be left for a moment, and flies away forever. A conflict, sharp and painful, may continue for a night but victory, eternal victory, ensues. How soon, oh! how soon she Christian's cares are over, his eyes no more suffused with tears.—Near at hand is the land of his pursuit. Hope cheers. How glorious the object that hope embraces! How holy its spirit? Who can contemplate the home that our Heavenly Father is fitting for His children, and not fear in his soul a thirst for its enjoyment! Well, these delights, the happy clime, those ever verdant plains, are not far distant.

Life's Troubles.—Wisdom makes all the trouble, griefs and pains incident to life, whether carnal adversities or natural afflictions, easy and supportable by rightly valuing the importance of and moderating the influence of them. It suffers not busy fancy to alter the nature, amplify the degree, or extend the duration of them, by representing them more sad, heavy and remediless than they truly are. It allow them no force beyond what naturally and necessarily they have, nor contributes nourishment to their increase.—It keeps them at a due distance, not permitting them to encroach upon the soul, or to propagate their influence beyond their proper sphere.

For the Companion.

The Wisdom of the Just.

"The mouth of the just bringeth forth wisdom."

Justice and wisdom are prominent features in the character of a child of God, and marks which distinguish the Christian from the children of this present world. Intrinsic justice is inflexible. Wisdom can be found by all who seek it aright. In judgment, wisdom may pity the ignorance of the ignorant, and still offer instructions, but justice will fulfil its mission, and faithfully execute its work. "The just man walketh in his integrity," and will be abashed by no means. A wise man is "not wise in his own eyes," but "the wise in heart will receive commandments," and obey them. Prov. 10: 8. Justice and wisdom must go together. Wisdom without justice will lead astray, pervert and confuse. But wisdom, tempered by the genuine presence of unyielding justice will accomplish exceedingly great results. These are attributes of our God, in whom they have infinite perfection. And since justice and wisdom are perfect attributes of our Heavenly Father, can there be anything more rational than that his confiding, adopted children should follow justice and wisdom in all their Christian action, life and deportment?

A just man may be known by his speech—his words. Some men speak to please others; some to please themselves; and some again speak they know not what. Of the latter class there are not a few. But the just man or woman knows what words escape the lips. There is a principle held by some that a man may as well speak his mind as not; but this principle, like many of the same hue, is untenable in its foundation and unchristian in its origin. One of old had wisdom enough to know whereof he averred when he wrote this line: "A fool uttereth all his mind, but a wise man keepeth it in." They that love and follow the Lord have the Lord's promise: "I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay nor resist." This is a precious promise to the timid, watchful follower of Jesus who desires to "live a quiet and peaceable life" in the midst of a perverse, presumptuous people. The unwise speak all they know, and when all is said there is so much airiness and immateriality that it is difficult to find the terra firma or substance. But the wise will speak wisely, and their speech will be "seasoned with salt." A wise man in his discourse "brings forth wisdom" for the good of others; but it is hard to remember continually that we are examples or giving example to our associates, no less outside the Church than within. God gives to his children that which is good in his sight, even "wisdom and knowledge, and joy," (Eccl. 2: 26.) but what a pitiful sight to see one of his children defend, with many words, some worldly principle, or partisan opinion! The Christian is taught of God who gives him wisdom and understanding, and therefore should be very mindful of the Source of such wisdom and understanding, and if God be not the source, self or sin must be.

In the Law-book of Heaven it is recorded that the resurrection of the dead is composed of two classes:—"The just and the unjust."

A just man, then, must be a living, hopeful, Gospel believer, who will exercise himself, "to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men." In this is contained the essence of true Christianity. He whose Christian character is thus framed, is a just man, and his words are words of wisdom, for "the mouth of the just bringeth forth wisdom." A just man is a good man, and a good man is a wise man. "A good man, out of the good treasure of the heart, bringeth forth good things;" this is one definition of a good man, given by our Savior. The person that answers this description, practically, is a just man. He studies to please God whether it be pleasing to his companions or not. Though those of his own company would declare their disapproval of so strict a manner of life, yet will he hold his integrity with God. The just man, however, will strive to please both God & man, but never at the expense of truth & equity. It is seldom that the just and wise are not well spoken of; and I have never heard else but good report of such of my brethren and sisters in our Brotherhood as are firm in the Faith, and live consistently with the holy, just and wise principles of our Gospel Christianity. May "every one that nameth the name of Christ," strive for the mastery over sin and self, and endeavor to lay before an observing world, a life blameless before God and the Angels, and which will bring to every ear nothing less than a "good report." To say little and think much is better than to say much and and think little. Notice is taken of what we say as well as of what we do. Matth. 12: 36. If we live under the influence of what the New Testament teaches us, our "conversation will be as it becometh the Gospel of Christ." Just men are righteous men in God's estimation; hence they have righteous hearts and hopes, joys and fears, holy lives and godly conversation. Col. 3: 17. Children of this world may have deep learning, brilliant talents, and rank high in the Church, and yet be perverse. They deride the Gospel while they profess to uphold and obey it, and thus the cause of truth will suffer in its extension and acceptance. We must beware of the Lord's enemies. It would be well, in our associations with the world, never to tarry longer than duty requires, where our mouths cannot bring forth the wisdom of God. 1 Cor. 1: 18. "Think twice before you speak once," and "never suffer your tongue to outrun your wisdom." These maxims are good. "Beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath." James 1: 19.

D. B. MENTZER.

Shall we meet again?

Through the many different circumstances in life, there is but little certainty as to how we are going to get along with anything we undertake to perform, which is of a worldly or temporal nature. It seems that disappointments fall to the lot of every one. The uncertainty of our intentions cannot well be avoided, from the fact that we are fallible creatures, imperfect beings, short-sighted, not knowing what to-morrow will bring forth.

There is always a time when friends must part. When we meet with friends and brethren and part with them, it is uncertain whether we will ever meet again. It is a great comfort and consolation to us to meet with loved ones after the absence of many years. Our conversation often goes back upon the pleasures we enjoyed together in riper years; but when the time comes for us to part from each other, O the thought! Shall we ever meet again?

It has been but a few months since we have had the happy privilege of meeting with friends and neighbors after some years of absence. It seemed like heaven on earth when taking the hands of my old fathers and mothers, and companions of my youthful days. It was a feast of fat things. But alas! dear friends and brethren, in a few days we leave you again, and shall we meet again? No, no never. Many of you I will never see in the flesh. Some have gone since I have been with you, and some others are almost ready to bid farewell to earth and its sorrows. Old fathers and mothers in Israel: we leave you, we bid you an affectionate farewell, we never expect to meet you here again in your earthly home. I cannot forget your kindness. If I cannot recompense you, my God will. He will supply your wants. "Thou shalt be recompensed in the resurrection of the just." We will long remember you, young brethren and sisters. Shall we meet again? Not here. Then farewell. I love you this God knoweth. Let us try to be faithful. A few more storms, then we will meet in our Father's house. "We have often sat together around the Communion board and communed with each other, and with our Lord Jesus Christ. But I have sat with many of you my last time. May we at last sit together around our Master's table and feast on the blessings and rich things of heaven.

Brethren, you who are commanded to feed poor, hungry souls with the bread of life, and clothe the naked with the garment of salvation, we bid you adieu. We do not expect to hear your voices again in the Mountains of the East, in defense of the Word of God. We say, go on: yours is a good work; by you the work of salvation is carried forward. With a tear we say, farewell.

Brethren, remember the tender vine that is just making its appearance in Missouri. We take our last survey of our native home—the Knob Creek meeting-house, where our souls were first blessed, where we have oft obeyed the form of doctrine delivered to the Saints, and where we first learned to love all men and to do unto others as we would be done by.

SAMUEL C. BASHOR.

Old Things.

Give me old songs, those exquisite bursts of melody which thrill the lyres of the inspired poets and minstrels of long ago. Every note has borne on the air a tale of joy and rapture—of sorrows and sadness.—They tell of days gone by, and time has given them a voice that speaks to us till life shall end; as I "launch my boat" on the sea of eternity, may their echoes be wafted on my ear, to cheer me on my passage from earth.

Give me old paths where I have wandered and culled the flowers of sweet friendship in the days of "Auld Lang Syne," sweeter far, the dells whose echoes have answered to our voices, whose turf is not a stranger to our footsteps, and whose rills have, in childhood's days, reflected back our forms and those of our merry school fellows, from whom we have parted and met no more in the old nooks we loved so well. May the paths be green in my memory forever.

Give me the old house upon whose stair we seem to hear the light footsteps, and under whose porch a merry laugh seems to mingle with the winds that whistled through the old elms; beneath whose branches lie the graves of those who once trod the halls and made the chambers ring with glee.

Explanation as requested by Brother Arch Holland.

The passage to be explained is found in Paul's letter to the Hebrews (7: 3.) and reads thus: "without father, without mother, without decent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, but made like unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually."

Now from the preceeding verses of the same chapter, we see that the apostle has reference to Melchisedec as being without father and without mother, &c. It has been a great question among the learned men, who this Melchisedec really was, some concluding that he was God; others, one of the holy angels; and others that he was Christ. But according to my humble opinion by what I have learned from the Scriptures, he was only a mortal man, but a priest of the Most High God, and a type of Christ and of his priesthood. It was in the capacity of a priest that Melchisedec met Abraham when returning from the slaughter of the kings and received tithes at his hand. See Gen. 14: 18—20.

Scripture tells us nothing of his father or mother, nor of his genealogy, his birth or his death. He stood alone without predecessor or successor until Jesus Christ, the great antitype, made his appearance, who was also a priest, appointed of God after the order of Melchisedec, (See Psalm 110: 4,) and not after the order of Aaron, which priesthood was claimed by generation. No one could become a priest of Aaronic order but by birthright of father or mother of decent from Aaron, and according to Jewish History, name of father and mother, date of the priest's birth, how he served in that capacity, and date of his death.—And such names as Melchisedec, and his father and mother, could not be in the record of priests, because he was a priest at the time when he met Abraham when returning from the slaughter of the kings, when Aaron was yet in the loins of Abraham for generations before the Levitical Priesthood was established. He was without father and without mother, without beginning of days or end of life, and having no decent from Aaron; neither had our Lord Jesus Christ, for it is evident that our Lord sprang from the tribe of Judah of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood. Heb. 7: 15. so we see that Christ was a priest after the Levitical Priesthood was abolished.

Now Paul does not claim Christ's priesthood after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchisedec, the type of Christ, who was born of a woman in order to become a man. So we believe of Melchisedec, that he had a father and a mother in order to become man and king of Salem which was the ancient name of Jerusalem, where Melchisedec was "King of Peace" when Abraham was a stranger in Canaan.—So Melchisedec was a type of Christ in humanity; and secondly as to his divine nature as being in the highest sense without any of these limitations. We should therefore notice carefully that the Apostle describes Melchisedec, the type in terms which in the full meaning holds good only in Christ the great Antitype.

Long prayers and repetition of words.

In No. 5 of this vol. I noticed an article under the above heading, and it appears that our beloved brother has not altogether understood the language of our Master, as recorded by Matth. 6: 7: 8. He left the latter clause of the 8th verse almost unnoticed, as he noted the words, "O Lord, our Heavenly Father." It appears these words of the 8th verse were taken into consideration in the repetition. The text has no reference to these words (above stated.) "Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before you ask him."—This has reference only to asking of the Lord, such things as we wish him to give, as he knows our wants; therefore no repetition is required. But I must still agree with the brother to a certain degree, concerning the words noted. Bear with me Brethren.

One Drop at a Time.—Have you ever watched an icicle as it fromed? You noticed how it froze one drop at a time, until it was a foot long, or more. If the water was clean, the icicle remained clear, and sparkled brightly in the sun; but if the water is but slightly muddy, the icicle looked foul, and its beauty is spoiled. Just so our characters are forming; one little thought or feeling at a time, adds its influence. If each thought be pure and right, the soul will be lovely, and sparkle with happiness; but if impure and wrong, there will be deformity and wretchedness.—Selected.

Prayer, to make it accepted, requires neither genius, eloquence, nor language; but sorrow for sins, faith and humility. It is the cry of distress, the sense of want, the abasement of contrition, the energy of gratitude. It is not an elaborate string of well-arranged periods, nor an exercise of ingenuity, nor an effort to the memory; but the devout breathing of a soul struck with the sense of its own misery, and of the holiness of Him to whom it is addressed.

———:o:———

Some men think religion bears the same relation to life that flowers do to trees; that the tree must grow through a long period before the blossoming time. But the Bible represents religion not as the latest fruit of life, but as the whole of it—beginning, middle and end.

Apprentice Wanted.

We wish to employ a young woman, a sister in the Church preferred as an apprentice to the printing business. She should have a good common school education, and should not be under 16, nor over 21 years of age, and must be neither ashamed nor afraid to do work. If a stranger, she must furnish recommendations of character. Apply in the applicant's own handwriting, giving age, size, weight, condition of health, reference, &c.

No More Back Numbers.

We can no longer send back numbers of this volume. By the time this reaches our readers we will be entirely out. A few odd numbers, and very few, are preserved for those who may fail to get theirs. Those wishing them should order them soon.

The American Ecclesiastical and educational Almanac for 1869 has been received.

It gives an abstract of the proceedings of all the important Church Assemblies in America and Europe, the operations of the Religious, Missionary, Temperance and other societies, the Progress of religious Liberty, the preparation made for the coming General Council of the Roman Catholic Church and for the coming General Assembly of the Evangelical Alliance, the important movements in the Mohammedan world and a large amount of other information on great religious movements of the year.

Those Premiums.

According to our proposition March first, instant, was the time for closing the competition for the premiums offered for the largest list of subscribers to the Companion. They have been footed up and are as follows:

	No. of Subs.
John R. Holsinger, Mt Morris, Ills.	64.
C. G. Lint, Meyers Mills, Pa.	64.
J. L. Wineland, Clover Creek, Pa.	42.
Stephen Hildebrand, Johnstown, Pa.	42.
Franklin Forney, Stony Creek, Pa.	36.
A. H. Snowberger, Huntington, Ind.	29.

It will be seen that the competitors for the first and second premiums are a tie. As we claim the right of being judge in the matter we have decided to send each of them the premium offered; viz; to the first two, a copy of Bible Dictionary and to the second two a bound copy of Vol. 3, of Companion. Brother Forney will receive a copy of Debate on Immersion; and all these brethren, with all others who have so liberally used their influence and time in our behalf, have our warmest thinks.

Error.

It the advertisement of brother Bechtelheimer, last week we said "Warren" instead of WARSAW. It is corrected this week.

Book Orders.

Those who have ordered Plain Sheep and Arabesque Hymn Books, Debate on Trine Immersion (Quinter and McConnell, and Christian Harp, will please have patience. We are out, and expect a supply shortly. We solicit no orders for the debate on Trine Immersion for the present, the edition being exhausted.
Hymn Books have since arrived.

Business.

Hannah Knauf, Covington, Ohio. Brother G. W. Wine has kindly sent us the address of the brethren in Pocahontas, and we will now forward the paper to them.

L. H. Dickey, Fostoria, Ohio. The fault is not at this office. Perhaps we can supply lost numbers for file if informed.

H. S. Jacobs, Congress, Ohio. We will send the Companion for the balance of the year to the sister for the money sent. We have no knowledge of having received a former letter from you with one dollar. What was the money for?

Daniel Metzler, Locke, Ind. The address was changed and the paper sent to New Bremen, where the numbers can be gotten.

Jacob Christner, Indian Creek, Pa. We have no knowledge of receiving letters from you. At what date did you send the letter which should have contained the money? and how? We send the paper hoping all will be made right.

John Martin, Washburn's Prairie, Mo. We charge you $3.75 (for the three copies from the present time) to be paid some time during the year.

Adam Hollinger, Bermudian, Pa. The address of brother Lerew is "Pappillian, Sarpe Co. Nebraska." Your letter containing money must have been received in Jan.—You can see it acknowledged in No. 4. It is all right now.

Thos. M. Haley, Westminster, Md. Will you please say in what numbers the acknowledgements appeared. We have no account of more than one in our books. We want to make all right as far as we possibly can.—Will send you paper from now until No. 25.

Anonymous, New Holland, Ind. You speak as one having authority, yet we cannot take your voice without your name.—Back up your assertions by your honor.

J. T. Lewis, Elmira, N. Y. You have now paid to No. 7, Vol. 6, as indicated thus: "6—7."

H. F. Long, Millerstown, Pa. Please have patience with us. We do not profess to answer questions of the kind. It is not part of our duty. If we can find time to do so, we should take pleasure in giving you all the light in our power. If your query turns up again, and is suitable for our columns we will lay it before our readers, and perhaps some of our contributors will answer for us.

E. Mishler, Yellow Creek, Ills. The duplicate check has been received. How it occurred that it was not acknowledged, we are unable to account for.

John Tucker, Perry, Ind. The price of the "Debate on Trine Immersion," postpaid, is $1.25. What shall we do with the 15 cents?

Mary I. Kingery, Mt. Carroll, Ills. Please send on the answer that we may prove it, and if the answer is found to be correct we will insert. We will publish no more puzzles until we have the solution.

For the Companion.

Oneness in Christ.

"For by one spirit are we all baptised into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free, and have been all made to drink into one spirit." 1 Cor. 12 : 13.

"For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God : and if children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." Romans 8 : 15—17.

From the above scripture we can learn our relation with God and with his Son Jesus Christ; and also from the scripture we learn that God has always had a people upon the earth, and he has always given them a law, with life and death set before them, and men could choose which they would. In olden time the Lord chose Israel to be a special people unto himself, above all people upon the face of the earth : and he gave them commandments, and statutes, and judgments ; which he commanded them to keep, that if they would hearken and do them, the Lord would keep the covenant and mercy which he sware unto their fathers, that he would love them, and bless them, above all people. But if they would mix among other nations, and serve other gods, his wrath would be kindled against them. They were not even to inquire how the nations served their gods, and were not to sow their vineyards with divers kind of seeds, lest the fruit of their seed which they had sown, and the fruit of their vineyard, be defiled. And they should not wear a garment of divers sorts, as of woolen and linen together ; and were commanded, that if there arose matters of controversy within their gates, they should "come unto the priests, the Levites, unto the judge that should be in those days, and inquire ; and they shall shew the sentence of judgment", "and according to the judgment which they shall tell thee, thou shalt do: thou shalt not decline from the sentence which they shall shew thee, to the right hand or to the left." And God has yet a people upon the earth, and has sent his only Son into the world; and he has brought a law, his Father's will, which if the children of men observe and do, they may live forever. Now Paul says, "For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward: How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and confirmed unto us by them that heard him." Heb. 2 :2, 3.

Now if by "one spirit" we are all baptized into "one body," why not all walk by the same rule ? And as the children of Israel were to go to the priests, the Levites, to get sentence, or judgment, in matters of controversy, etc., so the Church of Christ is not left without a directory. The 13th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles is the gospel rule and order of the Church of Christ to settle differences and dissensions in the Church. We learn that there were brethren sent by the Church to Jerusalem with their matters of disputation, and were received of the Church, and of the Apostles and elders ; and we learn they gave judgment in the matter.— Then it pleased the Apostles, and elders, with the whole Church, to send back chosen men, and also a written decision, in which, when they had read, they rejoiced for the consolation. Now according to the gospel rule, we have our council meetings, where the elders, and the Church meet in council, and give judgment in matters of controversy and differences of understanding, we hope in the fear of God ; and these decisions are written down and sent back to the whole Church to satisfy and make an end of that controversy. Now when these decisions are read, do we "rejoice for the consolation?" I fear not ; but many murmer that it is not as they wished; they will bear no cross, nor deny themselves according to the gospel, and as it were, scorn government, and go and do as they did before.— Under the law in the Church of Israel, that man had to die, who presumptuously disobeyed the judgment of the judge ; and "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" The Apostle says we "have been all made to drink into one Spirit." Why is it when we have all drank into one Spirit, which Spirit, the Savior says, "shall guide us into all truth," that we walk in so many different ways, for Christ says "I am the way." Then all other ways are evil, and the Spirit that will lead us into any other way than where the Savior went, must be an evil spirit, for John says, "He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked." 1 John 2: 6. But in these last days we frequently see our Brethren dressed in the uniform of the world, appear in the style of the world, and attend political meetings and elections, contrary to the counsel of the Church and above all, contrary to the gospel, which is our salvation, if we obey it from the heart.

Here we see mixed seed sown in our fields, and in our vineyard, and thereby many are defiled. As the church of Israel were not to inquire after the nations, so the Church of Christ must come out from among the world, and be "a separate people, a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation." The Savior commands us to watch, and pray always. Do brethren pray in the Spirit, on their way to political elections, that the Lord would direct their steps aright?

Now dear sisters, I must write a few lines unto ourselves, for we are as often walking out of the narrow path as the brethren. If we would watch our walk and conversation better, we might be the means of keeping our husbands and brethren out of many errors. The Apostle's advice is that we should be teachers of good things, and our adorning should be that of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. The Church of Israel were not to wear garments of divers sorts, as of woolen and linen together. So also the Church of Christ is forbidden to wear the world's apparel, and mix that abomination—pride—with our religion, and thereby spot our robe of righteousness, and defile our souls with these vanities.—Dear sisters, let us avoid these indulgences of self, and of the flesh, and clothe ourselves with meekness and humility; and let us nourish that inward purity of heart, from which all outward holiness proceeds. Self-denial and a separation from the world in all its allurements, is a sincere test of our profession in the faith of Christ; and if we live the religion and faith of Christ, we must live in self-denial, and take up our cross, as our glorious Redeemer has given both precept and example. We are living in a time that men and women can be called Christians, and be right with the world in all its vanities and inconsistencies. In some districts of the Church we see sisters wearing hoops, and fashionable nets, the world's covering; but no plain cap, the elders and the Church have (we believe) through the influence of the Holy Spirit decided for a covering for the Christian women. The Savior says, "the tree is known by its fruit," fruit does not grow in the heart, but on the branches, where it can be seen. Christian fruit must be external and visible, as well as internal and spiritual. The Savior says, I am the true vine: ye are the branches. Now if we are branches of the true vine, we must bear fruit unto the vine. Hear the Savior's prayer for us, shortly before he was crucified: "Neither pray I for these alone, (the Disciples,) but for them also which shall believe on me through their word: that they all may be one; as thou Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them as thou hast loved me." John 17: 20—23. Who that profess the name of Christians, can read this prayer without reflecting in their own hearts, to see and know whether they are in union with God and the Lord Jesus Christ, and with the Church which is the Body of Christ? We should take heed unto ourselves, lest we be found like unto the Church of Sardis. Rev. 3: 1—5. Oh brethren and sisters, if we walk worthy to be clothed in that white robe, we will all be in uniform, for there will be no spotted garments there.—Therefore let us labor to obtain that robe of righteousness. When God had commanded Jacob to arise and go to Bethel, and dwell there, and make there an altar unto God, Jacob said unto his household, and to all that were with him: "Put away the strange gods that are among you, and be clean, and change your garments: And let us arise, and go up to Bethel; and I will make there an altar unto God, who answered me in the day of my distress, and was with me in the way which I went." Dear brethren and sisters, if it were necessary for the people of God to put away their idols, and change their garments, when they went to build an altar to God, is it not more necessary to put away all our idols, and change our garments, that we may have "boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus?"

Notice of District Meeting.

The District Meeting for the second District of Va. will be held, the Lord willing, in the Beaver Creek meeting-house, on the 7th and 8th of May. Brethren coming through the Valley on their way to Annual Meeting, are invited to be with us at that time.

By order of the Elder.

G. W. WINE.

Dear Brother Henry :—I hereby give you a brief sketch of our visit to Pennsylvania. Myself and wife left home on the 7th of Dec. Arrived at Dayton, Ohio, on the 9th, and remained four days. Visited a brother-in-law, and in consequence of having no knowledge of the brethren in these parts, we had but two meetings in Liberty, in the United Brethren meeting-house. Much interest manifested in the word preached. We then took our leave for Millerstown, on the Penna. Central R. R. In this congregation (Lost Creek) we remained several weeks. Associated with the brethren at a series of meetings held at Free Spring meeting-house (9 in number). We also had quite a number of meetings besides through the congregation. I then visited the lower congregation in Cumberland Co., and the brethren in Tuscarora Valley, having left my wife to visit among her friends. We then proceeded to Lewistown congregation, remained about a week; thence to Aughwick, remained another week. Then took the cars westward. Stopped over night with brother Henry Holsinger. We were much disappointed however, in not meeting him at home; and finding the young woman scorching with Fever, (As noticed in Companion, No. 7.) we felt it an imposition to remain in the family over night; and would have gone to the hotel, but the loving entreaties and countenances of sister Holsinger and brother Mentzer (Assistant Editor) constrained us; and they have not only our thanks and good wishes, but we try to remember them at a throne of grace in their afflictions.

We then resumed our journey westward, in company with brother John Emmert and sister Hannah How, and safely arrived at Burnettsville, 12 miles west of Logansport, Ind. Remained with the brethren 5 days; had interesting meetings.—I would here say, in general, on our visits, good interest was manifested in spiritual things. The brethren strongly contending for for the faith, notwithstanding we saw none baptized.

Once more we resumed our journey homeward and arrived home on the 11th of Feb., and found all well, for which we try to be very thankful to our heavenly Father, in whose hands our lives are. On the 12th we started for Mount Carroll, Ill., by request of brother C. Long, to a church meeting: where a brother was to be chosen to the ministry.—The lot fell on brother Joseph Switzel; hope he will manfully and courageously respond to his call.—We spent a week in the Carroll and Hickory Grove congregations.

Dear Brother; I have lately seen a good many that seem to be well pleased with the Companion; I therefore thought it no more than my duty to inform you what I think of it. First,--I must say, that I have been a reader of it ever since the seventh number of first volume.—Further, I must say, that I could hardly be better pleased with it than I am at present. I would not be without it for twice the amount it costs. It does what it claimes to do; it cheers me on my way to Zion. I have often tried to encourage others to take it. The reply sometimes is, "I have the Old and New Testaments to read." This we know that they have the Scriptures, and well would it be if they would read them; but while they study how to accumulate wealth, they are neglected as well as the Companion. Some even consider it a great evil in the Church; and, according to their expressions, would immediately prohibit you from printing it, had they the power to do so. They think, and even say, that it is the Companion that causes the discord and disunion in the brotherhood at this time; but all hath never discouraged me yet.—In conclusion I would say to you, dear brother, go on; dont be discouraged in a good cause; if the Lord is with you, who can be against you? So fare you well.

J. D. NEHER.

Rossville Ind.

Brother Holsinger; My heart says amen to what brother Forney and brother Smith say about prayer or social-meetings; as brother Smith says he wants some more said on the same, I feel like trying to help to advance the good cause, having enjoyed the happy privilege of attending such meetings for 12 years, and having often felt that it was a little heaven on earth to be there. Brother Forney and brother Smith have enumerated the blessings attained, but there is still another.—All backbiting, malice and evil-speaking, is banished from the circle of those who meet regular in such exercises. If any meet with hatred, they cannot hold it: satan is made to flee. And it is common for those who get entangled in Satan's net, to absent themselves or take a back seat; and after a while confess their faults with sorrow.—When a member's seat is vacant without a just cause, and the inquiry is made about it, the answer is common: "they have got into a difficulty." But then is the time they ought to come to get help and comfort. We are commanded to exhort one another, and to confess our faults one to another. Brother Smith says some are opposed to such meetings. We know some Elders and Ministers, who are; but how will they account to God in the day of judgment for the prayer and exhortations they have hindered; the luke-warmness of some, and for the blank leaves of God's book of remembrance, which the Lord keeps for those who often speak together of his name. Some say the sisters must keep silent, for Paul says so. Sometimes things take place in churches that the brethren can best settle alone; but what was the use of Paul saying a woman shall cover her head, when praying or prophesying, if she was always to keep silent. Although I am too weak to understand Paul exactly, I am sure that he did not mean for them to keep silent in praymeeting, because he says they shall ask their husbands at home; and the exercises of prayermeetings are in such simplicity that even a child can understand them. We are glad there are still some who are not afraid to declare the whole counsel of God.

HANNAH KNAUFF.

About the German Hymn Book.

Brother Holsinger:—I sent you a short communication some weeks ago, but nothing having as yet appeared, I came to the conclusion that it had not come to hand, and as it regarded a matter in which the Brotherhood is concerned, I shall make mention of it a second time.

A request to last Annual Meeting to have a selection made of German hymns, to be added to the English, caused the Standing Committee to appoint four brethren for that purpose. It being understoodby this committee was to meet on Christmas at brother Henry Kurtz's, I, as one of that Committee, repaired there, but being disappointed in meeting brethren Wetzel and D. M. Holsinger, conversed with brother H. K. about it; he being of opinion that it required longer time than I thought, and that the selection would have to be presented to next Annual Meeting for adoption, which I thought was not the case. Now, as I left and mingled with the brethren in North Eastern Ohio, from that time to this, I have found my mind established, since all that spoke their mind expected to see the selection printed and added to the English at the earliest date possible. Many have kept back from purchasing books in the hope of soon to being furnished with what they looked for. All said that they had full confidence in the selected committee to make the selection of hymns.

So I thought to inform the brotherhood at large how this matter stands, and at the same time inform the committee of the mind of brethren as stated above. As I do not expect to be at my home before April next, I wish to inform those concerned that I expect to be here near Louisville, in Stark County, Ohio, till Monday, 8th of March; then with the brethren near George town then, by the 15th, near Pierceton, Indiana; then from the 22nd in my former home near Milford, Kosciosko Co., Ind., till after the District Meeting of Northern Ind.—Brethren of the Committee know where to address me, if they feel inclined to do so.

Yours in love,

F. P. LEHR.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

On the 24th of January, in the Tulpehocken church, Lebanon Co. Pa., MARY ELIZABETH, daughter of brother Jesse Y. and sister Barbara HECKLER, aged 1 year, 7 months, and 15 days. On the 27th the corpse was conveyed to Skippack, and interred in the Brethren's burying ground, when the occasion was improved by brother Henry Cassel.

JAS. Y. HECKLER.

In the Middle Creek branch, Somerset Co. Pa., Sept. 28th, 1868, sister SUSANNA SCHROCK wife of brother Jacob C. Schrock; aged 54 years and 15 days. Funeral services by brother Josiah Berkly, from Rev. 14: 13.

In the same church, February 20th, sister DINAH SCHROCK, wife of brother Christian Schrock; aged 50 years, 10 months, and 13 days. Funeral services from Rev. 14: 13, by brother Josiah Berkley and the writer.

TOBIAS MEYERS.

In the Coldwater branch, Floyd Co. Iowa, Jan. 24th, DAVID ADAMS, son of friend Samuel and sister Adams, aged 11 months, and 2 days. Funeral sermon preached by the writer, from Matth. 19: 14.

JOHN F. EIKENBERRY.

In Upper Conowago branch, Adams Co., Pa., Jan. 29th, SAMUEL BROWN, son of brother George Brown, aged about 30 years. He leaves a wife and two children, and an aged father to mourn for him, with many friends.

ADAM HOLLINGER.

In the Yellow Creek congregation, Pa., February 23rd, ANNA FRANCIS, infant daughter of brother Samuel B. and sister Mary Ann FURRY; aged 2 months and 28 days. Her suffering in sickness appeared to be great, but she fell calmly to sleep leaving her corpse almost as natural as life.

The bereaved parents have our sympathies in their afflictions, and we would offer them consolation in the thought that though little Anna will not come to them any more they may go to her. Their family though young, has been broken, and can no more be restored in this world. One of its members has gone to the spirit world, and there alone can the circle again be completed. Death has its sorrows, but in this case it was a bright side: A member of the family—and a fit representative—in the kingdom of glory! What an honor!—EDITOR.

In Waynesboro, Franklin Co. Pa., Dec. 24th, 1868, AMMON B. HOOVER, son of friend Daniel Hoover, aged 1 year, 11 months & 8 days. Funeral services rendered by bru. D. F. Good and J. F. Rohrer. "And they shall be mine," saith the Lord of hosts, "in that day when I make up my jewels."

THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Peace in Heaven.

The above exclamation, recorded by Luke 19: 38, was made upon that important occasion when Christ, the King of the Israel of God, rode into Jerusalem, and his disciples sang Hosanna, shouting, "Peace in heaven, and glory in the highest." The above words appear only once in the New Testament: and we consider them full of meaning. They imply, perhaps more than they clearly express. We consider they express, [illegible] peace in heaven, which implies that peace was not in heaven. — Though an unfavorable state of things, [illegible] where all is holy," seems to be quite doubtful, yet after duly investigating the scriptures, we come to the conclusion, that such was really the case. And to prove this we need only consider a few points.

Omitting to detain ourselves with the cause which brought "sin and death into the world and all our woe," we pass on to the time when God separated from the world for himself a people. But his people rebelled against him: and God was angry against them insomuch that he slew them in the wilderness. However he spared a few who had been faithful, and about the body of one of those, Michael, the arch-angel, disputed with the devil, when contending with him, being greatly displeased, he said "The Lord rebuke thee." Now, from this we may well conclude, if Michael, one of the brightest arch-angels in heaven, and no doubt one of the highest in authority, was displeased at the rash, crafty, and contemptuous conduct of the adversary, when contending with him, that there must have been a breach of the peace, or a dissatisfied state of things in the heavenly world.— And it seems still more likely that such a state of things existed there already immediately after, if not before the fall of our first parents, whom God had created in his own likeness, for his own glory and honor.

But it appears as if the design which God had was frustrated, and the glory and honor which was due to him, was usurped, or stolen by the father of lies. And furthermore, the Lord sent prophets and wise men into the world, "of whom the world was not worthy," "who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens." But "they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheep skins and goat skins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented." And during the endurance of all these fiery trials of the enemy here in this world, they were also accused "before our God day and night." Rev. 12: 10. Now we might well ask, How could there be peace where the proved and approved were continually accused?

But we read further, "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ," who "made peace thro' the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say whether they be things on earth, or things in heaven." Col. 1 : 20. Now, if things in heaven needed reconciliation, it is another evidence that there was a breach of the peace in that bright abode. Thus we think it is clear that there was an unpeaceable state of things in heaven, and that the most precious being in heaven was required to descend a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, that he might conquer death, and do all the wonders which he did, to restore peace and reconcile all things unto himself.

Reflections on the Second coming of our Lord.

"For the the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God : and the dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. 4 : 16.

In entering upon a slight investigation of this subject, I do not propose to proceed in the way some have, that is, to tell you the day and hour our Lord will come again. But I do propose to tell you the day and hour that you and I should be ready to meet him —that is, "To-day"—"Now." Of all the events that have taken place since the creation of the world, and the formation of man, I look upon the second coming of Christ as second to no one. Because it is the winding up of one of the most glorious dispensations that ever has or will be given to men. It is one to which even the most inveterate enemies of Jesus will at last have to bow the knee, and confess to the glory of God. It is also an event that is much desired to take place by those that "love his appearing," for it is to them he is going to appear the second time "without sin unto salvation." To such an one I believe there will nothing be lost through the fall. What he lost in Adam he will gain in Christ. It will also be the announcement of one of the most glorious reigns of peace that was ever known or ever will be on the face of this earth. "A thousand years" of peace and harmony.—His coming will also be the announcement of the end being nigh at hand of those that would not have him "reign over them,"—that would not "obey the gospel."

"For the Lord himself shall descend from the heavens with a shout, with the voice of the archangel:—We may notice from this reading that he does not come in the manner he first came—in great humiliation. But now it is with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God." We notice in the ancient mode of warfare it was customary for for the contending armies to make an attack with a shout, and the trumpet was also used upon such occasions. Saith the Revelator,—"And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses." Thus we behold our Lord coming, (instead of a babe wrapt in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger,) upon a white horse clothed in a vesture dipped in blood. And he hath on his vesture, and on his thigh, a name written: "KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS."

Let us now consider and reflect for a moment; imagine ourselves standing with heaven's artillery in full view of us; and then all hopes of our deliverence cut off from the fact that we have failed to comply with all the requisites of the word of God. And now it appears before us arrayed with vengeance. No mercy now.—Too late. Too late. Our blood soon will help to swell the stream that will "flow to the bridle bits of the horses." And our bodies seemingly not worthy of a burial; the fowls of the air will feast thereon. Oh! wretched state indeed of that man that will set at naught the counsels of high heaven, and will put off his return to God till it is too late. Further says our subject: "The dead in Christ shall be raised first." There may be a short interval between the rising of the dead in Christ and the time that "we which are alive and remain" at his coming "shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air." Here I think we come to the "midnight cry." See Matth. 25 : 6. "And at midnight there was a cry made: Behold the Bridegroom cometh: go ye out to meet him." We find that from the time the cry was made to the time it was announced the door was shut, (the wise virgins having entered in) it was of too short duration for the foolish virgin to set his house in order, and be ready to go out and meet his Lord. For, saith the 10th verse, "And while they went to buy, the Bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage and the door was shut. Hence, then, how great the absurdity of him who not long ago was traveling among us announcing the Midnight cry as being something over twenty years in the past, and the coming of the Lord in the past, thus greatly advertising himself not as one of the signs of the "last days:" a false prophet.

I believe the "happy gate of gospel grace" is not yet shut. But I know not how soon it may be. So I think it would be wise of us to be making good use of "to-day"—"Now" "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith quit you like men, be strong 1 Cor. 16 ; 13.

On Matthew III.

In this chapter we have "the voice of one crying in the wilderness; prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight," who "had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins, and his meat was locusts and wild honey." John kept down "to men of low estate,"— strictly no sup flaity in either his food or raiment. "Then there went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins." It is supposed by some that John's mission was not under the Gospel, but under the Law, to prove the contrary, I will refer the kind reader to what brother Mark says on this subject.

"The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God; as it is written in the prophets, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee: &c." The German says: "Dies ist der anfang &c." "This is the beginning &c."

By comparing our popular Christianity with the facts above, we find a great difference. At John's Baptism "they went out:" popularly "they come in, or are carried there:" there it was performed "in Jordan," here "in a house," there they "confessed their sins," here they are generally sinless and senseless," in matters of religion.

Not all that went out were baptized, for "when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of Vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance: and think not to say within yourselves, we have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." John was an ultra and straight reward preacher. If there was any one wrong he told him his fault, Herod not excepted. He never said, "I dont mean anybody"—"I hope there is no one here," &c. No: he preached repentance to rich and poor, high and low, king and slave. Like Christ, "unless ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." Like Stephen, "Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, you do always resist the Holy Ghost: as your fathers did, so do you." Like Paul, "O full of all subtilty and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord."

Peter Cartwright, a noted Methodist preacher, once preached at a certain place, and during his sermon Gen. Jackson entered. The preacher there regularly officiating secretly advised him "to be careful as that was Gen. Jackson;" to which he replied at the top of his voice, "who is Gen. Jackson? If he dont get converted he will be lost as well as any sinner!" The Gen. praised him for his courage remarking "if he had a well equipped army with officers sufficient of his type he were able to take Old England." The [illegible] usually concerns ministers, and as they generally are a wise [illegible] of folks, and as "a word to the wise is sufficient," further comment seems unnecessary. I will close abruptly by asking the prayers of the right sort.

What is the Urim and Thummim.

This query I noticed in Companion Vol. 7, page 111 and caused me to examine the subject with care. The querist wishes to know what the Urim and Thummim is like and what it is composed of. I will try to sum up this in a few words; but if I should fail I ask pardon of my readers and of God.

In the first place we notice this to be a breast-plate of judgment. I need not state what material this was made of. Exodus 28 will answer the requirements. I will give an explanation of the same kind, providing we should read part a sentence found in the 11th verse of the same chapter.

"Foursquare it shall be, being doubled a span." This would give us to understand something different to the Bible. The correct way to read it is, "Being doubled, a span shall be the length thereof," instead of a double span.

As I promised to be brief, I will conclude. I do not wish my brethren and sisters to think that I wish to teach them. But we must go hand in hand to the mark of our high calling in Christ Jesus.

TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW.—To-day we gather bright and beautiful flowers—to-morrow they are faded and dead.

To-day a wreath of leaves shade us—to-morrow, sear and fallen, they crumble beneath our tread.

To-day the earth is covered with a carpet of green—to-morrow it is brown with the withered grass.

To-day the vigorous stalks only bend before the grain—to-morrow "the land is taking its Sabbath after the toil."

To-day we hear sweet songsters of meadow and forest, the buzz and hum of myriad insects; to-morrow—breathe softly—all nature is hushed and silent.

To-day a stately edifice, complete in finish and surroundings, attracts the passer by—to-morrow a heap of ruins mark the site.

To-day there are cattle on a thousand hills—to-morrow they fall in slaughter.

The fashion of the world passeth away. But let Christ dwell within us, and though we may pass away like the faded leaf and the sapless stalks, we shall "arise to newness of life,"

We are too apt to regard every one's life much more uncertain than our own.

Light.

There is no branch of natural science more deserving of our study and investigation than that which relates to light. It unfolds to our view many grand and magnificent objects. If air, which servesas the medium of sound and the vehicle of speech, enables us to carry on an interchange of thought and affection with our fellow men, how much more extensively is that intercourse increased by light, which presents the images of our friends and other objects! We will consider in the first place, the light that "rules over the day," which is the SUN.

The sun acts as the vicegerent of the Almighty, who has invested in that luminary the power of giving light, life, and motion to all the beings susceptible of receiving impressions from his radiance. When the Sun's rays illumine the eastern sky in summer, after a night of darkness and tempest, there is nothing which so strikingly displays the beneficial and enlivening effects of light. All appears gloom and desolation in our terrestrial abode until a faint light begins to whiten the eastern horizon. The flowers expand their buds and put forth their colors; the birds awake to melody; man goes forth to his labor; the sounds of human voices are heard, and all appears life and activity as if a new world had emerged from the darkness of chaos. This splendid luminary whose light embellishes the whole of this lower creation, forms the most lively representation of Him who is the source and center of all beauty and perfection. "God is a Sun"—the Sun of the moral and spiritual universe from whom all the emanations of knowledge, love and felicity descend.—He dwells in light inaccessible, and full of glory."—The glory of God enlightens the Celestial City. Its inhabitants are represented as the "Saints in light." It is declared that "their sun shall no more go down," and that "the Lord God is their everlasting light."—When man in his present state of existence, chained down "as it were" to his terrestrial mansion here below, attempts to form conceptions of such amazing magnitudes as the magnitude of the vast luminary I have been referring you to, the imagination is overpowered and bewildered in its boldest efforts,and gives way before it has realized the ten thousandth part of the idea which it attempted to grasp. And as such things can not be comprehended in this life, it goes to show that man is destined to an immortal existence, where his faculties will be enlarged and the boundaries of his vision extended, so as to enable him to take a large and comprehensive view of the wonders of the universe. The Sun which enlightens our day is but one out of countless millions of similar globes dispersed throughout creation, some of which may far excel it in magnitude and glory. I will say to you, dear reader, whether you are young or old, the first and main thing for you and me to do is, to examine our selves,and see if we are ready to face death. If not we should be up and doing: we should get into Christ who is the light of the world. He that followeth Him shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." If that is once done, & we come to die in that state, we will be in such a state as to comprehend what I have hinted at above. I will close on this part of the subject by saying, what a glorious idea, then, does such an object as the Sun present to us of the grandeur of the Deity, and the energies of Omnipotence! There is no single object within the range of our knowledge that affords a more striking and august emblem of its Great Creator.

> "Great source of day, best image here below
> Of thy Creator ever pouring wide.
> From world to world, the vital ocean round,
> On nature write, with every beam, his praise."

We will consider in the second place the light that rules the night, which is the MOON.

Of all the celestial bodies, the telescopic view of the moon presents the most interesting and variegated appearance. We perceive as it were a map or model of another world, resembling in some of its prominent features the world in which we dwell, but differing from it in many of its minute arrangements. It bears a certain analogy to the earth in some of the Mountains and vales which diversify its surface, and which we have reason to believe was created for good and wise purposes. For whatever may be the arrangement or construction of the moon, we know that it forms a most beautiful and beneficial appendage to our globe. When the sun has descended below the western horizon, the moon lights up her lamps in the azure firmament, and diffuses a mild radiance over the landscape of this earth. She pours her lustre on spacious cities and lofty mountains, glittering on the ocean, the lakes and rivers, and opening a prospect wide as the eye can reach, which would otherwise be involved in the deepest gloom. She is the beauty of heaven, the glory of the Stars, an ornament giving light in the high places of the Lord. In the Moon we behold a display of the parental care and beneficence of the Almighty Being who ordained "the moon and stars to rule the night" as an evidence of his superabundant goodness, and his mercy which endureth forever.

While the apparent revolution of the Sun marks out the year and the course of the seasons, the revolution of the Moon round the heavens marks out our months, and by regularly changing its figure at the four quarters of its course, subdivides the months into periods of weeks and thus exhibits to all the nations of the earth a "watchlight," which every seven days presents a form entirely new for marking out the shorter periods of duration. I will close my remarks on the second luminary, for probably some of my brethren and sisters will think I am writing just to be heard from. I wish to make this statement to all before whom this may be placed for perusal: when I contemplate upon the goodness and kindness of my Redeemer, I can not express it to you in fewer words, to bring to your what I wish to present. There are many grand and magnificent things in this our Lower world. We hear it said by some who profess to have entered the Church militant that this world is nothing but trouble and vexation. Such language I consider unbecoming for any Christian professor to utter. We must have our intellectual capacities fixed on such things which will not lead to the utterance of such language. We all have our cross to bear: let us bear it with christian fortitude, for we have striking evidence of Divine benevolence, which appears in the construction of the animal system, in the constitution of the earth and the waters, and the atmosphere, and the variety of beauties and sublimities which adorn the face of nature, all of which proclaim in language which can scarcely be mistaken, that the Creator has a special regard to the happiness of his creatures. Yet, the scriptures uniformly declare that man has fallen from his primeval state of innocence and has violated the laws of his Maker,—that "his heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked,"—and that "destruction and misery are in his ways." Observation and experience also demonstrate that a moral disease pervades the whole human family from the most savage to the most civilized tribe of mankind.

I will call your attention, to prove the above, to the United States of America from 1861 to 65. Meditate for a moment, dear reader. There are thousands of reflecting minds to day paying silent tribute to ones whose remains are beneath the sod of some battle-ground. Where is the grand army of the Potomac? Thousands of them passed from time to eternity by the hands of their fellow-men. A world inhabited by agents as we are, and of the description I have given, would display in physical constitution certain indications of its Creator's displeasure. This is what we should naturally expect from a consideration of those attributes of his nature with which we are acquainted. Accordingly we find, that amidst all the evidences of benevolence which our globe exhibits, there is not wanting certain displays of "the wrath of Heaven against the kingdom and righteousness of men," in order to arouse them to a sense of their guilt and to inspire them with reverence and awe of that Being whom they have offended. But to the subject of light.

There is a subject I wish to speak of and that is the RAINBOW. The vivid colors which gild the rising and setting Sun must necessarily differ from those which adorn its noonday splendor. Variety of atmospheric scenery will thus necessarily be produced, greater than the most lively fancy can well imagine. The clouds will sometimes assume the most fantastic form, and at other times will be irradiated with beams of light or covered with the darkest hues will assume a lowering aspect prognostic of the thunders roar and the lightning flash, all in accordance with the different rays that are reflected to our eyes, or the quantity absorbed by the vapors which float in the atmosphere.—Light which embellishes with so much magnificence a pure and serene sky by means of innumerable bright starry orbs which are spread over it, sometimes in a dark and cloudy sky, exhibits an ornament which by its pomp, splendor and variety of colors, attracts the attention of every eye that has an opportunity of beholding it. At certain times when there is a shower either around us or at a distance from us in an opposite quarter to that of the sun, a species of arch or bow is seen in the sky, adorned with all the seven primary colors of light. When we contemplate the works of the Supreme Ruler, particularly the scenery of the heavens, the mind is irresistibly inspired with sentiments of admiration and wonder, to the vulgar eye as well as to the philosophic. The heavens declare the glory of God. Their harmony and order evince his wisdom and intelligence; and the numerous bodies they contain, and the astonishing motions they exhibit on whatever hypothesis they are considered, demonstrate both to the savage and to the sage the existence of a power which no created being can control. In the language of the poet, I will say,

"View the amazing canopy,
The wide, the wonderful expanse;
Let each bold infidel agree,
That God is there, unknown to chance."

"Let there be light" and light was. I will affirm here, and I think it is in full accordance with the truth, that the efflux of light in the dawn of the morning when a rainbow is visible after a dark and cloudy night, is even more magnificent and exhilarating than at the first moment of its creation when the Lord gave the commandment. At that moment there were no spectators on earth to admire its glorious effects, and no objects such as we now behold, to be embellished with its radiance.

The earth was a shapeless chaos, where no beauty or order could be perceived. The mountains had not reared their heads, the seas were not collected into their channel, no rivers rolled through the valleys, no verdure adorned the plains, the atmosphere was not raised on high to reflect the radiance, and no animated beings existed to diversify and enliven the scene. But now when the dawning of the morning scatters the darkness of the night, it opens to view a scene of beauty and magnificence. The heavens are adorned with azure, the clouds are tinged with the most lively colors, the mountains and plains are clothed with verdure, and the whole of this lower creation is arrayed with diversified scenes of beneficence and grandeur, while the contemplative eye looks round and wonders. Such then are the important and beneficent effects of light which every moment diffuses its blessings around us. Hence we my say the Divine Being is metaphorically represented under the idea of light as being the Source of knowledge and felicity to all subordinate intelligences. "God is light and in Him is no darkness at all," and he is exhibited as "dwelling in light unapproachable and full of glory, whom no man hath seen or can see." I will use the language of the poet Milton:

"Hail, holy light! offspring of heaven's first born,
Or of the eterna', co-eternal beam!
May I express thee unblamed? Since God is light,
And never but in unapproached light,
Dwelt from eternity, dwelt then in thee.
Before the heavens thou wert, and at the voice
Of God as with a mantle didst invest,
The rising world of waters dark and deep,
Won from the void and formless infinite."

I would treat upon the subject of the stars, but suffice for the time. I will now say, dear reader, if you are in Christ Jesus, I am of the opinion that if you leave this world in that condition, the time is coming when you can continually behold all the magnificent sceneries which I have spoken of and probably countless millions more. But if you are outside of the pales of the Church, you have no promise, and I am of the opinion that as the saint beholds the beautiful sceneries, you will behold the reverse. Let as all so live that if our spirits shall wing their way from this earthly scene, we may look upon the cross and pass on to glory. Amen.

Who must Yield, man or God?

A LETTER TO A RENEGADE.

Your letters are invariably interesting, although I can never read them without laceration of heart. Were it not for the faint hope of effecting a little good by our correspondence, I could not consent to its continuance. The honor of the Almighty, the rectitude of his Government, and the veracity of his Word, no less than our eternal destiny, are involved in the principles that underlie the points at issue between us.—All you say in relation to your personal difficulties, which are indeed many and formidable, is wholly irrelevant. The principle on which hinges the work of God for us in his Only Begotten, and which is the basis of all our activities in a saving relation to him, is neither ascertained nor supported by our personal history. On the contrary, all that can possibly befall us, or enter into our experience, from the dawn of responsible life to the grave, must find its adjustment by a principle that is universal as the race, and immutable as God. Your very isolation is of itself sufficient, without further argument, to demonstrate your antagonism to the arrangement of God for our appropriation of the benefits of redemption. The principle that originated all the sects and isms in Christendom, lies at the bottom of your individualism. The will of Heaven was done by incarnate Deity to prepare a ground of salvation, and out of him came the will of God for us to do, as well as the righteousness of the will done. The Theanthropic constitution that made the living and dying of Jesus available for our righteousness, also gives absolute authority to every commandment that proceeded from him. His human form was not more essential to the work he accomplished, than the work itself, in its precise form, was essential to the embodiment of the life that was the impelling cause of all. Such a life being at work, such a form must follow. And while he was making atonement, so as to make salvation possible, he was at the same time giving precepts and commandments as moulds for the life we get by faith in his atonement. His vicarious sacrifice could not take another form any more than Deity could take upon himself the nature of angels, and redeem us. No nature above or beneath man would do. The assumption of humanity was not arbitrary, but an absolute necessity. And the manifestations peculiar to so strange a union between characters so diverse, were determined by laws as fixed as any in the universe. The same is true of his life in the believer. As soon as we repent and believe, and are grounded on the basis provided in the atonement, the life thus imparted runs into the mode of expression prescribed in the Gospel as naturally as water descends through the force of gravitation. It may be hindered by self-will, but meeting with no obstruction, it will unfold itself according to the Divine order, as certainly as the river finds its way to the ocean. And if another mode is adopted under the impulse which eternal realities beget, no life will flow into the mould thus made, save that which is natural. The graee of God appears to all men, and the sense of deep necessities and urgent wants is awakened by the convicting grace of God; but when the peace that follows trust in the atonement is not succeeded by the form of life which is the outgrowth of the atonement, our faith in Christ will be of no more avail than faith in Tom Thumb. If man can be recognized, or retain his identity, by clothing himself in the form of a tree or elephant, then, and not till then, may it be shown that the scheme of redemption recognizes a principle that allows the Divine life in the individual believer to shape for itself a mould independent of that in which the life of the God man expressed itself.

Feet-washing, the Lord's Supper, and the Communion, you hold as glorious privileges, even going so far as to denominate them "the grandest themes of the sublime plan of salvation." This broad, unqualified confession you supplement with the astounding declaration that "to forego these life-instilling privileges is yet no sin." If there is such a thing as inconsistency there is no possibility of reconciling your premises and conclusions from fairly coming within the scope of its definition. If to neglect what is so important as to be properly designated "the grandest themes," of what is above all other things "sublime," is "no sin," then, by parity of logic, sin is nothing but a myth, and not a syllable of the Bible has sufficient authority to command respect, or awaken fear. If these ordinances are so "glorious," so exalted as to merit the high honor of being entitled "the grandest themes of the sublime plan of salvation," and yet their non-observance be "no sin," on what principle can a minor transgression be culpable? If disregard to the "grandest themes" is venial, how can God in justice punish any violation of his law? These ordinances are privileges indeed, but they are much more. They are not optional, as you plainly intimate, but they are solemn, imperative commandments; & no man can omit them without incurring the displeasure of the eternal, infallible Righteousness in which they have their authority. No one can reject these ordinances, and claim to be a christian, without maintaining a principle that must have its root in the caprice, inconsistency, and self-contradiction of God.—All ordinances are in themselves lifeless. But they are of Divine origin, and symbolize the spiritual vitality of the renewed soul; and as all life must have expression, we are as powerless to institute the symbols as we are to generate the life. Your rejection of the institutions that symbolize the "grandest themes in the sublime plan of redemption," is to cut yourself off from the provisions of grace, and recommend to us a God who is neither wise nor just, and a salvation which is too incongruous to be worth procuring.

He that said, "love the brethren," also requires the "feast of love," which is a material and sacramental embodiment of the other. He that shed his blood for us, also said, "take eat," and "drink ye all of it." The same principle that required him to do the former, required us to do the latter. From this obligation there is no escape. If there was no alternative for God but to be bound by this principle, or leave us to our ruin, it is the consummation of folly in us to expect salvation in the repudiation of it. If we may with impunity reject what is "grandest," and most "sublime," we may disown all that remains, and yet be as acceptable to God as if we had observed all. Is this reasonable? Can any sane person plead for a principle that stands vitally connected with such woful consequences? The liberty which you take, were it consistent or allowable, and exercised by all intelligent creatures, would inevitably result in disintegration and universal anarchy. God would be as impotent in the control of his dominion as if he were a creature himself. You have power to use your hand as you please, but you lack the power to give it the shape of an ox's foot. The one results from your will, the other from the involuntary operations of life. The ordinances are as much the product of Christ's life, as your hand has its shape from your own life; and to omit or reject them is to come in direct and hostile collision with the Eternal.

I call Heaven and earth to witness that with kindly feelings I make these strictures; but I cannot for a moment admit the correctness of your position, without embracing the cheerless conclusion that the Bible is the "grandest," fable, the most "sublime," imposition that was ever concocted. If you reconsider the whole ground from the Godward side and not from the standpoint of your personal history, you will not question the validity of a single ordinance, any more than you will the righteousness and veracity of Jehovah.

Novels.

The word novel has several definitions; the one we expect to attack and expose to the best of our ability is as follows: "A fictitious tale in prose."—Webster.

As our country is teeming almost to an unlimited extent, with such reading matter, and as it is sown broad-cast, at a very cheap rate too, so that it is within reach of nearly every person, and as they are gotten up with great skill and made very interesting, especially to the young; we believe it to be the duty of all truth-loving people to remonstrate in the most earnest terms against all such soul-destroying and time-killing matter.

We read in Psalm 117: 2:—"The truth of the Lord endureth forever." Ps. 119: 30:—"I have chosen the way of truth; thy judgments have I laid before me." John 7: 28;—"And I am not come of myself but he that sent me is true." John 1: 9:—"That is the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." 2 Cor. 1: 18:—"But as God is true our word toward you was not yea and nay." Rev. 3: 7: "These things, saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth and no man shutteth, and shutteth and no man openeth."

From the above and numerous other quotations, which we might cite, we learn that one of the characteristics of God is TRUTH. Then, whatever is in opposition to truth, is in opposition to God. And to be in opposition to God is to be in league with the opposite of God, which is satan. And as novels are the opposite of truth, it follows that they must belong to satan and and the kingdom of darkness; and whoever indulges in novel-reading, indulges in that which belongs to the kingdom of satan, and encourages the practices of said kingdom, and is the means, perhaps, of sinking precious souls to the realms of darkness. John, the Revelator, in giving a list of those, who are excluded from the Holy City, finds the novelist or "whosoever loveth and maketh a lie" in that unfortunate class.—Here, (John 22: 15,) we find the novelist classed with the dogs, sorcerers, whoremongers, idolaters and murderers; and yet we find many professed christians poreing over novels, who would shudder at the idea of even being seen in company with participants of either of those abominable practices! And yet, such will undoubtedly be their company in a future state of existence; at least they will all be without the City, and that not only for a few days, months or years, but forever.

No one should be willing to spend time on such matter, until all that is true is fully explored and comprehended. We have enough truth in Revelation, Nature, Science and History, to occupy the most prolific mind, though it should remain on this earth as long as Methusalah did.

Dear reader, are you using your influence to counteract this evil? If not, let me entreat you to do so.

Parents, what kind of reading matter are your children perusing? Let me entreat you as one who has had the care of many precious minds to furnish them with something more wholesome than novels. We would suggest, that either of our Christian periodicals would be a happy change. The young mind is active and vigorous, and will not be idle; and if it is not furnished with healthy food it will feed upon trash, or what is worse—poison. You, who are willing to spend five, ten, or fifty dollars for the improvement of your stock, and consider it well invested, please do as much for the immortal part.

Sabbath School.

I wish to impress on the minds of our brethren and sisters the beauty and necessity of Sabbath-schools.—How beautiful to see children array themselves in modest apparel, on Sabbath morning, and go to Sabbath School, there to read, sing, and to worship the true and living God! What is more beautiful than to hear a band of children singing songs and making melody in their hearts! It reminds me of that heavenly choir when God shall gather his children together to sing songs to him through the endless ages of eternity. And how needful it is to teach them of God's love and goodness in this benighted age, since the surrounding influences of this age are so apt to call them from the paths of virtue and goodness. We can be the means of storing their minds with scriptural lessons which are truly noble, and which will never be erased from their minds. Is it not much better to teach them lessons from the word of God which will be the means of strengthening their intellect, dialect and de pursuit in a graceful manner, than to permit them to be loitering over the fields, sporting, fishing and hunting, on the Lord's Day. I am forced to believe that our brethren and sisters are too backward in taking hold of this great and noble work. Why is it that we cannot have Sabbath-schools throughout the brotherhood? which I claim is the working of soul salvation. We might all say: What can I do? Brethren, we all have something to do. We all have a talent to improve, and I think there is no better place to improve it than at Sabbath School. We may be the instruments of winning souls to Christ. And he says, search the scriptures for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me. I know no better place to search the scriptures than at Sabbath-school where we can exchange views by asking questions which strengthen the mind as well as the inner man. I know from experience that it is the means of children reading and studying the scriptures. I always found it better to study a sabbath school lesson than to be reading some story book. I participated in a school last summer, and I know there was good done, for we taught nothing but the true Word of God. Some may think this is a new thing, but it has been carried on by the brethren in the East for a number of years; and if it is right for them to carry on this noble work, it is right for us in Illinois.

Christ said to the Pharisees and Sadducees, "Think not to say within yourselves that ye have Abraham for your father," and Christ called them a generation of vipers. Let us not harbor the thought that if we are only members of the Church, we can sit down upon the stool of do-nothing and be saved.

Look at a report of the Huntington (Ind.) Sabbath school carried on six months only, and there were fifty souls added to the Body of Christ.

Dear brethren and sisters I entreat you as one that feels for sinful mortals, to look at this work as it is.—Not with blasphemy and prejudice, for 'tis a matter worthy of serious consideration. If we repudiate or condemn this institution, we may be the means of keeping souls from the fold of Christ, and eventually their minds will be stored with corruption, cultivating a spirit of carnality which is not subject to the laws of God, neither indeed can be. Raise your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. I have the fond hope that the brethren and sisters will establish schools, for there is danger of our lambs being caught in the snare of the sectarians, (and not become brethren and sisters,) especially in this vicinity. The sabbath school is a grant of the A. M. to which we should be subject as professors of christianity in its primitive purity. "Suffer little children and forbid them not to come unto me for of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

Piety.

Piety is demonstrative and enthusiastic, but its real power for demonstration and its flaming fire of enthusiasm are its secret, winning attractiveness. Piety is magnetic, not repulsive. Piety loves and is beloved, not scorns and is disregarded. Piety goes out, but better than that, it draws in towards itself those like itself, and those who would become like itself. And to such piety, be it remembered, God always opens the way for the manifestation of its Divine efficiency. It accepts its orbit from God, and when he says work, it pitches its tent, strips its arm bare and begins. He always opens the way. To one he says, "Work here, in this lowly spot, under this shadow, unseen by man; and like the labor of the mother, the reward is found in the fingers of her son, lying cold and dead on the field, as they clasp the precious Bible, pointing to the precious passage, "Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me." "Work there," says he to another. "Lay foundations. Lay them out of sight. Put them down in the depths of the sea. Pile upon them fields of gravel and mountains of rock. Toil on. The structure will rise; not in your day, perhaps, but it will go up. Your fellows will call you visionary; no matter for that. Let it only be a firm foundation for some pyramid of human beneficence."

Study the Bible.

Life is short and art is long. In the secular sphere it is conceded that the powerful minds are those who rigorously confine themselves to one department of thought. Newton cultivated science and neglected literature. Kant wrought in the quick-silver mines of metaphysics for fifty years, and was mighty happy in his own work. These made epochs, because they did not career over the whole encyclopedia. And the same is true in the sphere of religion. The giants in theology have dared to let many books go unread, that they might be profoundly versed in Revelation.—And the mighty men in the practical religion, the reformers, the missionaries, the preachers have found in the distinctively evangelical elements of Christianity, and their application to the soul, enough to employ all their powers and enthusiasm.

JESUS A HIDING PLACE.—What a beautiful appellation is given to our Savior! How rich and full of meaning! What a strong hold to run to in time of trouble! What a refuge wherein to flee as the storms of life beat hard upon us! What a filial confidence does it encourage, mingled with child-like simplicity! A little child wearied with its petty cares, runs to its fond mother for rest—as trials come too severe to endure alone, fears enlarge to its own weakness—how soon throbbing heads find a resting place in the mother's warm embrace! Faint emblem of the Christian's refuge.

The most powerful way of teaching truth is to show what it has done for you.

POETRY.

Selected by JOEL YOUNG.

"Standing Idle." Matt. 20: 3.

Standing idle in the market!
While the Lord hath work to do;
See! his vineyard needeth tending—
Room to work for me and you.

Oh, go forth, 'tis early morning:
"Work to-day," the Master saith;
Train the fragile vines and tendrils—
Work in patience, work in faith.

Standing idle at the noontide!
See the Master draweth nigh:
Go ye also in my vineyard,
Work, for yet the sun is high.

Standing idle! shades of even Gather over hill and plain;
Yet go forth, go forth to labor
While the beams of day remain.

Work for all in his great vineyard—
None too feeble, none too weak;
But the Master finds some duty,
If his blessed work we seek.

Standing idle! while one sinner
Lives to heed a warning voice;
If to one afflicted brother
We can say, "Poor heart, rejoice!"

Oh, go forth with strong endeavor,
Now to do your Master's will:
'Tis to-day he calls his lab'rers;
Oh his earnest work fulfil.

And when even comes, the Master
Gives each lab'rer his reward—
May we feel the blest assurance,
That in faith we served our Lord.

Life.

"My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle." Job 7: 6.

My vanished years,
Oh whither are ye fled?
Weak, human tears,
Oh, wherefore are ye shed?

The time must fly,
Dear friends must pass away;
Soon, too, must I
Depart as well as they.

Death, dread decay,
Grim darkness and the worm,
Soon, soon will they Demand this mortal form.

Swift as a dream
My moments pass away;
Brief my years seem
As twilight's latest ray;

And briefer still
Each fleeting day shall seem
An hour until
Fades out life's transient dream.

Why, then, complain
At any suffering,
Toil, care, or pain
Which this short life may bring?

If there be aught
Worth ceaseless care to win
It must be sought
Beyond this world of sin.

Beyond the range
Of earthly toil and strife,
Beyond this strange,
Sad dream that we call life.

Treasures worth more Than all this world can give
Are held in store;
Seek these, my soul, and live.

MISCELLANEOUS.

"Father, Come home."

This popular song, which has moved so many hearts in this country, has been received with equal favor in Europe, and The Stationer gives an account of the singing of it in one of the music-halls of London. There was a stage, with gaudy drop scene, orchestra, etc. After various performances this piece was announced. The account says:

"Presently a female came in front of the curtain, amidst great applause, and commenced, 'Father, dear Father,' etc. Every word was distinct, and she sang the ballad with great feeling. In order, however, to fully describe the scene which followed each verse, it is necessary to give little Mary's song:

'Father, dear father, come home with me now,
The clock in the steeple strikes one! (Gong.)
You promised, dear father, that you would come home
As soon as your day's work was done.
Our fire has gone out—our home is all dark,
And mother's been watching since tea,
With poor little Benny so sick in her arms,
And no one to help her but me.

Hear the sweet voice of the child,
Which the night winds repeat as they moan,
O! who could resist the most plaintive of prayers?
Please, father, dear father, come home.
Come home, come home, come home,
Please, father, dear father, come home.'

"At the conclusion of the last line the drop scene drew up, disclosing the father sitting at the door of a public house, in a drunken, bemuddled state, with pipe and pot before him. Little Mary was trying to drag him from his seat, at the same time pointing to a curtain behind, as she took up the refrain from the lady, and touchingly sang, 'Come home,' etc.—This other curtain was now drawn aside, disclosing a wretched room with a sickly-looking boy in her lap, and in the act of feeding him with a spoon. Simultaneously with the drawing of the curtain the lime-light was brought to bear upon the tableaux, giving them a truly startling effect. After a moment or two the act-drop came down, and the lady proceeded:

'Father, dear father, come home with me now,
The clock in the steeple strikes two! (Gong, gong.)
The night has grown colder, and Benny is worse,
And he has been calling for you.
Indeed he is worse, ma says he will die,
Perhaps before morning shall dawn,
And this is the message she sent me to bring—
Come quickly, or he will be gone.

Hear the sweet voice of the child,
Which the night winds repeat as they moan,
O! who could resist the most plaintive of prayers?
Please, father, dear father, come home.
Come home, come home, come home,
Please, father, dear father, come home.'

"The act-drop rises again, and now the child has hold of the pewter pot, trying to take it from the drunken parent, and, as she continues the last two lines, 'Come home,' etc. the other curtain is drawn aside, and we next see the child stretched out on its mother's lap, and as it just raises its little head and falls back with a gasp, with the lime-light reflecting strongly upon it, there was a reality about the whole terrible to view. Sobs were heard from all parts of the hall, coming from the female portion of the audience, while tears trickled down many a male cheek. Even the lady who sang the song was affected, and could scarcely proceed with the third verse:

'Father, dear father, come home with me now,
The clock in the steeple strikes three! (Gong, gong, gong.)
The house is so lonely, the hours are so long,
For poor weeping mother and me:
Yes, we are alone—poor Benny is dead,
And gone with the angels of light!
And these were the very last words that he said—
"I want to kiss papa—good night?"

Hear the sweet voice of the child,
Which the night winds repeat as they moan,
O! who could resist this most plaintive of prayers?
Please, father, dear father, come home.
Come home, come home, come home,
Please, father, dear father, come home.

"Again the drop arose, disclosing little Mary on her knees, appealing to her father, who, with pot elevated, is in the act of striking her with it, as she sings, 'Come home,' and then the back curtain draws aside showing the mother praying over a child's coffin. But now the sobs burst out still more freely, and two females were carried out fainting. The scene was truly harrowing and we gladly turned our eyes away.

"An additional verse was sung about "Poor Benny being with the angels above. The drop rose; the father, sober now, is weeping over the coffin with the mother, and little Mary, on her knees, singing, Home, home, father, dear father's come home!" At this moment the curtain was drawn aside, and little Benny is suspended over the coffin with wings, smiling down upon them and pointing upward. The father falls forward on his face, the act-drop descends, and for a few minutes all is hushed save the sobs of the females.

"'There!' said a working man by our side, as he heaved a sigh of relief, 'Mr. Spurgeon never preached a better sermon than that!'—an expression to which we assented and then left the hall."

A Poor Memory.

There are various reasons why some persons have a poor memory. They may have overworked their brain, and exhausted the energies of the nervous system. A majority of the people tax their mind to the utmost, and instead of reinvigorating themselves after exhaustion, continue their labors until their systems are deranged by excessive mental application, and the brain loses the power of receiving or retaining the impression made upon it. Many have disqualified themselves for labor by overcharging their brains with more than they can do. It requires great pressure of mind, much firmness and decision of character for an ardent and enthusiastic person to take rest when duty presses upon him, and opportunities for labor multiply, and frequently continues in business till sickness entirely disables him from pursuing his calling.

Inactivity of mind is another fruitful source of a poor memory.—However strong and vigorous the mind may be, originally, unless exercised, it is like gold and silver laid away in a napkin, which soon becomes tarnished, though if used daily, they would be bright for years.

Irregularity of life is another reason for poor memory. If persons are subject to extremes, sometimes getting up early and sometimes late in the morning; if they indulge in excesses of any kind, or trifle with their organization so as to impair its power, they cannot expect to have clear ideas on any subject—especially a good memory. It is important to live systematically and methodically if we would wish to preserve the brain in a good condition.

Dissipation spoils the memory.—When the nervous system is overstimulated with alcohol, tobacco, opium, or by anything that excites the brain, the result is unfortunate. It may increase the brilliancy for a time, but soon the constitution becomes affected by the over stimulation, and the mind will be consequently more dull and obtuse than ever.

Saving for Old Age.

No one denies that it is wise to make a provision for old age, but we are not all agreed as to the kind of provision it is best to lay in.—Certainly, we shall want a little money, for a destitute old man is indeed a sorry sight, and suggests to every one the suspicion that his life has been foolishly, if not wickedly spent. Yes, save money, by all means. But an old man needs just that particular kind of strength which young men are most apt to waste. Many a foolish young fellow will throw away on a holiday a certain amount of nervous energy, which he will never feel the want of till he is seventy; and then, how much he will want it! It is curious, but true, that a bottle of champagne at twenty may intensify the rheumatism of three score. It is a fact, that overtasking the eyes at fourteen may necessitate the use of spectacles at forty instead of eighty. We advise our young readers to be saving of health for their old age, for the maxim holds good with regard to health as to money: waste not, want not. It is the greatest mistake to suppose that any volation of the laws of health can escape its penalty. Nature forgives no sin, no error. She lets off the offender for fifty years, sometimes, but she catches him at last; and inflicts the punishment just when, just where, just how he feels it most. Save up for old age, but save more than money; save health, save honor, save knowledge, save the recollection of good deeds, and innocent pleasures, save pure thoughts, save friends, save love. Save rich stores of wealth which time cannot diminish, nor death take away.

A Word to Young Men.

Wishing and sighing, imagining and dreaming of greatness, said William Wirt, will not make you great. But cannot a young man command his energies? Read Foster on decision of character. This book will tell you what is in your power to accomplish. You must gird up your loins and go to work with all the indomitable energy of Napoleon scaling the Alps. It is your duty to make the most of time, talents and opportunity. Alfred, King of England, though he performed more business than any of his subjects, found time to study.—Franklin, in the midst of his labors, had time to dive into the depths of philosophy and explore an untrodden path of science. Frederick the Great, with an empire at his direction, in the midst of war, and on the eve of battle, found time to revel in the charms of philosophy, and feast on the luxury of science. Napoleon, with Europe at his disposal, with kings in his ante-chamber, at the head of thousands of men, whose destinies were suspended on arbitrary pleasure, found time to converse with books. And young men, who are confined to labor or business even twelve hours a day, may take an hour and a half of what is left for study, and this will amount to two months in the course of the year.

God hears the heart without the words, but He never hears the words without the heart.

The Bible.

Who composed the following description of the Bible we may never know. It was found in Westminster Abbey, nameless and dateless.

A nation would be truly happy if it were governed by no other laws than those of this blessed book.

It contains everything needful to be known or done.

It gives instruction to a senate, authority and direction to a magistrate.

It cautions a witness, requires an impartial verdict of a jury, and furnishes the judge with his sentence.

It sets the husband as lord of the household, and wife as mistress of the table—tells him how to rule, and her how to manage.

It entails honor to parents, and enjoins obedience to children.

It prescribes and limits the sway of the sovereign, the rule of the ruler, and the authority of the master—commands the subjects to honor, and the servants to obey, and the blessing and protection of the Almighty to all that walk by its rule.

It gives directions for weddings and burials.

It promises food and raiment, and limits the use of both.

It points out a faithful and eternal guardian to the departing husband and father—tells him with whom to leave his fatherless children, and whom his widow is to trust—and promises a father to the former, and a husband to the latter.

It teaches a man to set his house in order and how to make his will; it appoints a dowry for his wife, and entails the right of the first born and shows how the young branches shall be left.

It defends the right of all, and reveals vengeance to every defaulted, over-reacher and trespasser.

It is the first book, the best book.

It contains the choicest matter—gives the best instruction—affords the greatest pleasure and satisfaction that we ever enjoyed.

It contains the best laws and most profound mysteries that were ever penned; it brings the best of comforts to the inquiring and disconsolate.

It exhibits life and immortality from everlasting, and shows the way of glory.

It is a brief recital of all that is to come.

It settles all matters in debate, resolves all doubts, and eases the mind and conscience of all their scruples.

It reveals the only living and true God, and shows the way to Him, and sets aside all other gods, and describes the vanity of them, and all that trust in such; in short it is a book of laws to show right and wrong; a book of wisdom that condemns all folly and makes the foolish wise; a book of truth that detects all lies and comforts all errors; and a book of life, that shows the way from everlasting death.

It contains the most ancient antiquities, strange events, wonderful occurrences, heroic deeds, unparalleled wars.

It describes the celestial, terrestial and infernal worlds, and the origin of the angelic myriads, human tribes and devilish legions.

It will instruct the accomplished mechanic and most profound critic.

It is the best covenant that ever was agreed on; the best deed that ever was sealed; the best evidence that ever was produced; the best will that ever was signed.

To understand it, is to be wise indeed; to be ignorant of it, is to be destitute of wisdom.

It is the king's best copy, the magistrate's best rule, the housewife's best guide, the servant's best directory, and the young man's best companion; it is the schoolboy's spelling book and the learned man's masterpiece.

It contains a choice grammar for a novice and a profound mystery for a sage.

It is the ignorant man's dictionary, and the wise man's directory.

It affords knowledge of witty inventions for the humorous, and dark sayings for the grave, and is its own interpreter.

It encourages the wise, the warrior, the swift, the overcomer, and promises an eternal reward to the excellent, the conquerer, the winner, and the prevalent. And that which crowns all is, that the author is without partiality, and without hypocrisy.

"In whom there is no variableness or shadow of turning."

Good Rules for All.—Profane swearing is abominable. Vulgar language is disgusting. Loud laughing is impolite. Inquisitiveness is offensive. Tattling is mean. Telling lies is contemptible. Slandering is devilish. Ignorance is disgraceful, and laziness is shameful. Avoid all the above vices, and aim at usefulness. This is the road in which to become respectable. Walk in it. Never be ashamed of honest labor. Pride is a curse—a hateful vice. Never act the hypocrite.—Speak the truth at all times. Never be discouraged, but persevere, and mountains will become mole hills.

The Difference.—The young lady who rises early, rolls up her sleeves, and walks into the kitchen to get breakfast, or assist in doing so, and afterwards, with cheerfulness and sunny smiles, puts the house in order without the assistance of her mother, is worth a thousand parlor beauties, who, from want of exercise, almost die of laziness. The former will make a good wife, and render home a paradise; the latter is a useless piece of furniture, and will, to the annoyance of the household go whining to her grave.

In matters of great concern, and which must be done, there is no surer argument of a weak mind than irresolution—to be undetermined where the case is so plain, and the necessity so urgent; to be always intending to lead a new life, but never to find time to set about it.

If the Spring put forth no blossoms, in the Summer there will be no beauty, and in Autumn no fruit. So, if youth be thrown away without any improvement, riper years will be contemptible, and old age miserable.

Christian Family Companion.

Tyrone City, Pa., March 16, 1869.

The way to our next Annual Meeting.

It is desired that some of our brethren in Virginia give the best route to the place of next Annual Meeting, from Harrisburg. Whether by way of Baltimore, Washington, &c., or Hagerstown, Winchester, &c. We want the best route by railroad. We wish, also, an outline of a route for private conveyance from Blair, Huntingdon, Bedford, and Somerset counties, by way of Cumberland or vicinity. Invitations and directions from brethren along such route or routes, are now in order. The editor of the Companion contemplates going in that way, passing through Somerset county, providing we can get a traveling companion. We want a preacher by all means, and prefer one who would be willing to do more than the half of the labor. One who has a horse and buggy of his own would supply a want in that line. We would be willing to start by the middle of April, and therefore we should have an early response. Other brethren contemplate going in the same way and have an interest in the above.

Meeting at Conemaugh.

On Saturday evening, 6th instant, the Brethren at Conemaugh, Cambria, Co., Pa., commenced a series of meetings.—Elder Grabill Myers and ourself assisted them in the work. Meeting on Saturday, and Sunday evening, Monday evening, Tuesday forenoon and in the evening. We left for home on Tuesday afternoon. The meetings were all well attended, and good order observed, and a deep interest manifested by the members and the congregation. The Brethren have a good place for meeting right in the town of Conemaugh, having an interest in a union meeting house. Ministering brethren passing over the Pennsylvania Rail Road will receive a warm reception by stopping off at Conemaugh, and will have an opportunity for preaching at short notice.

We trust there has been planting and watering done during the meeting, and we wait for the blessing of God to give the increase.

One Dollar Subscribers.

We not unfrequently have applications from our agents to send the Companion to some poor person for $1.00, and sometimes for 75 cents. Now, to settle this question, we will say that we will grant every such request. We cannot refuse, no more than we could refuse bread to a starving brother; but we are not certain that we can afford it. Our increased expenses in publishing the enlarged paper, with improved machinery, would seem to require a rigid adherence to the rules of economy. Nevertheless, our ideas of charity forbid a refusal of requests like those referred to. We say, then, let all who know of persons who really want to read the Companion, and are actually not able to pay full price for it, obtain their dollar and send it with their names. But we would propose, that, before you send it, you give your rich brother or sister, if you have any, an opportunity of paying the other 50 cents. A great many would no doubt cheerfully respond, and some perhaps are waiting for an opportunity of doing good in that way.

To our Agents and Friends.

Brother Daniel Smith of Hagerstown, Indiana, after giving us a list of names of subscribers, maks the following suggestions:

"These, with the others I sent you, I obtained by introducing the subject to them. * * * * I have learned by experience that if brethren will make it a point to speak to persons upon this matter they will almost invariably take the Companion.—Your agents too often make up a club at the end of the year and then stop."

We have no doubt much might be accomplished by keeping the interests of the Companion constantly before the people. For our sakes we could not expect such untiring efforts and continued labors, but for the sake of the spread of the "good news of glad Tidings," we could ever ask it. Brethren, wherever you have an opportunity of gaining a foothold for the Truth, in a family or neighborhood, by getting a subscriber to the Companion, see that you do it. We ought to have at least as much zeal for the cause of our Master, as men have for their own doctrines and institutions.

Although we can no longer furnish full sets of the volume, we see no good reason why we should not add new names to our list. We will send the balance of the year at the rate of three cents a week. Reckon the number of the weeks to the end of the year, from the time you order and send us three times as many cents. Or if preferred send $1.50 and it will pay until the same time next year. There is no reason why our subscription list should not reach 4000 by the close of this year. We think we could stand it.

Answers to Correspondents.

LUCINDA RANCK, Hancock, Md. Yes; we will send the Companion and Phrenological Journal as before, for $3.50.

"Friend of the Companion." Come, now, if you are a "friend of the Companion and a lover of the Truth," let us know where you live and what is your name. If you love the Truth you should not attempt to hide from it behind our back.

J. Shank, Greencastle, Pa. You are right. You have paid to No. 42, Vol. 6. The mistake was made on the old books. We wish all subscribers would thus explain our faults.

Jacob Bahr, Orion, Wis. We will send the paper to I. D., commencing with No. 10, and charge $1.25 to your account.

Elias S. Jones, Wolf Lake, Ind. 50 cents in addition to what brother M. sent will pay to end of present Vol.

Catharine Bolinger, Marmaton, Kansas. $1.25 for remainder of the year.

J. Brillhart, Chatfield, Ohio. Right. Excuse us.

John Nicholson. You have sent us $3.00 as we perceive. Her subscription commenced with Vol. 3, No. 11, hence expires with the present number. $1.25 will pay for balance of volume.

Wm. S. Shepherd, Bulls Gap, Tenn. We have no record of any credit in your favor, except for the $1.50 sent by brother Sharp. But if you have positive recollections of having sent it, and we corrected the error in name, then we "give in."

M. Bashoar, Mifflinburg, Pa. The money was received and the paper has been sent.

TOBACCO. We have no doubt that some persons have quit the Companion just because we have taken a stand against the use of tobacco. Others have forsaken us because we have advocated reform in other things. So it goes. Not every member that is received into the Church can be retained. Some soon get tired of such a pious life, and would rather go back to the world, where their hearts are. That is not the fault of the church. Because persons come into the church who love to do evil is no argument that the church should tolerate that evil. So we occasionally get upon our list a person whose desires for tobacco are stronger than his desires for religious knowledge; and of course what he loves most he will keep longest.

We are not so radical upon the tobacco question. We think nobody ought to be compelled to quit using it, and especially not if he can be persuaded to do so. But we think every-body can quit it, and every one that has not used it over fifty years ought to quit it; every poor man, and every one who is in feeble health, ought by all means to quit it. Every brother of the Church, who loves his brother as himself, ought above all others, abstain from the use of tobacco. Others need not be so particular, but we who kiss each other ought surely manifest love enough to divest ourselves of everything that is offensive to our brother, and especially when it is at the same time injurious to ourselves—or at least unnecessary. Above all others the Brethren ought to discard tobacco. Our religion would appear to demand it. We ought to be cleanly, and we ought to avoid superfluity.

We have said nothing about the sisters using tobacco, and would not if we did not fear that we might be accused for partiality, if by no one else by our own reflections.—Our sisters ought not to use tobacco by any means. We are willing to bear with our old mothers, if they can't quit it, but any young woman who will use tobacco after reading this admonition really depreciates her character in our estimation.

"How are you to quit it?" Easy enough. We'll tell you how we did it. Humiliating as it is, we confess that we chewed tobacco for fourteen years. Being diseased, as we think, beyond the reach of the medical aid of man, we began to pray the Lord to interpose his power and heal us. We received in reply a suggestion that if we would cease to violate the laws of health it might be so.—The use of tobacco was suggested to be one of those violations. We assented, and accordingly dusted our pockets, rinsed our mouth, and said: "By the grace of God I will use no more tobacco." We prayed the Lord to help us carry out our resolution, and he did. To-day we have no more desire for a chew of tobacco than we have for a dose of salts. We quit it because we thought it was a sin to us. Our health is certainly better than when we used the weed.—Besides we have a clear conscience, which is no small consideration.

We rejoice to learn as we travel among our brethren, that our efforts are not in vain. Many of our dear brethren have told us that they have yielded to our persuasions and now rejoice in being freed from the bondage of tobacco. Brethren, and especially all young brethren, we entreat you to heed our advice. Do quit it right now. Just say "I WILL;" and you will be surprised to find how much relief you will feel. Then be an honest man, keep your word sacred, and you will never regret it. Adopt every measure that leads to health, freedom, purity and happiness. If you have not yet adopted this rule, do it right now, and commence at once to carry it out.

CHRISTIAN KEEFER.

Brother Reuben Young, Camden Ind., says: "Some of the brethren plead poverty; and at the same time are taking a political paper. Some refuse to subscribe on the ground that it is paying for preaching. I think it would be better to pay for this kind of preaching and then put it into practice, than to read political papers, and have worldly affairs their main topic of conversation, not only at home, but even at meeting. It seems strange that some brethren will refuse to take the Companion and Visitor because there are expressions and sentiments in them that ought not to be, and at the same time be taking a strong Democratic or Republican paper. It always seems to me that what we like the best we pay the most attention to."

CEDAR CREEK BRANCH }
March 1st. 1869. }

Brother Henry:—Perhaps a little church news will not be amiss to you; and if you think that it will be of any interest to the readers of the Companion you may publish it.

The brethren of the Cedar Creek branch met in council on the 20th of February. Though the day was stormy, still the meeting was well represented. Our speakers have a large territory to travel over and as there is a great demand for preaching the gospel in its primitive purity. The brethren concluded to have four regular places for preaching; and as there are but four speakers in our branch, and two of them young in the ministry, there will be two of them to fulfil the appointments for one month, and then they are off for one month; then the other two take their places for a month; and thus you can see that the two that are off can preach the word in destitute places, and thus spread the gospel where it is seldom preached and then only in part.

I often hear the ministers tell their members to be obedient to the commands and testify to the love of God; but so far so good. But is that all that is commanded of men? Do they not know that nothing short of strict obedience to the gospel will ever gain a home in heaven for them? Well I would say to them that are outside of the Church of the true and living God, be obedient to the commandments. If they should appear simple to you, remember they are the commandments of God and must be obeyed by you if you expect to be happy.

Brother Holsinger:—While reading Companion, No. 8, I noticed an article selected by sister Snowberger, treating on the evil of using tobacco in church, which I thought was very suitable, and I take this method of thanking sister Snowberger for clipping said article from the paper and having it published in the Companion. Hope it may do good. I do think that some of our brethren are guilty of using too much tobacco while at church, saying nothing outside of the house of worship. A hint to the wise should be sufficient.

"Idle Words."

Brother Holsinger:—Some of the brethren have given us several interesting articles on "Big Words."—Will some of them be so good as to give us one on Idle Words? Such for instance as "Good La's; My Mercy; Good Gracious;" and others of the same class. All of which in my opinion are substitutes for more profane words. Our Lord has given us a text which would be a good foundation for such an article.

E. WILLIAMS.

Sister Catharine Bolinger, Marmaton, Kansas, under date of Feb. 28th writes: "I would like to have it (the Companion) for we do not have much preaching here. We have not had any preaching since the last of September when brethren Enoch Eby and Daniel Deardorff were here and preached for us, and also baptized two candidates for baptism. Now you have an idea of how lonesome one gets without preaching."

Brethren, here is a field for gospel labor and gospel laborers.

Dear Brother Henry:—In my article of "Church news," some time ago, I made an error unknowingly. I should have stated that brethren Jonas Harley of Montgomery Co., and Jacob Booz of Bucks Co. were also with us at two of our meetings, who also labored to sustain the cause of our Savior, and to encourage us on our way Zion-ward.

Yours in love.

Queries.

In reviewing the Companion, I find, on pages 70 and 100, present volume, an article concerning John the Baptist and the Prophet Elijah, intimating that they were the same person. Was not Elijah the prophet born of a woman, and had a natural body and a soul? And was not John the Baptist born of a woman and had a natural body and a soul? The question is: Will they sit in the kingdom of God with one soul, or will they each one have a soul? Will brother Crosswait answer?

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Departed this life, February 13th, brother SAMUEL MILLER jr., son of brother Sam'l. Miller, sr., in the Upper Cumberland District, Cumberland Co. Pa., aged 29 years, 3 months, and 23 days.

Brother Samuel Miller like many others delayed the day of grace to a late hour, which he regretted much on his sick-bed. By his earnest request he was taken from his bed carried to the water and baptized, about two weeks before he died. Shortly before he died, he solemnly warned his brethren and sister and former associates not to delay their day of grace as he had done, but to become reconciled to God in the days of their health. He then gave directions concerning his funeral, chose the text from which his funeral sermon should be preached &c., and fell asleep. Funeral services by brother Daniel Hollinger and the writer, from Rom. 6: 12, 13.

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Coming late to Meeting.

We could not receive that as good fruit which does not outlast the time of maturity; neither can we nominate that as Christian endurance which does not survive the season of trial. That is true endurance which brings us to do the right, notwithstanding any circumstances. It is written on the pages of Divine revelation that the Christian's trials are not greater than the ability to bear them. If we cannot hold fast the profession of our faith in any trial, and in every temptation, there need be given no better evidence that we are not in the element we should be, and not in the relation to Christ that we should be. And though our temptations are none other than "such as are common to man," yet "God is faithful," and will not suffer us to be tempted any more that we shall be able to bear or escape. How wise the arrangement which the All-wise has made! No more than we are able to bear! Yes, if we hold our integrity with God, and stand up in His cause as we ought, he will surely not suffer us to be overcome, for we are his, and we look to him, and he will care for his own alway. O rejoice, ye who are tempted for "the Word's sake," rejoice, for ye suffer in a noble cause.

Personal Christianity does not consist in talking of Christ and making a profession his of name; but in obeying and following him "whithersoever he goeth." We may be necessitated to go quite far down the valley of humiliation, and deny ourselves of many things near and "pleasant" to us; but "the Spirit and the Bride say, Come;" and it is not only our prerogative to come, but our needful and imperative duty to walk in the foot-marks of Jesus. As soon as we find that we are walking in the way of the perversion of the word of God, or in the broad road of disobedience, the best thought we can possibly conceive, is, to leave the ways of perversion and disobedience; and the best act that we can perform, is, to take the right way, and walk in it. Jesus has uttered these words and they are written: "I AM THE WAY:" him we should follow in Spirit and [illegible] compromising with no temptation, but pressing forward for "the prize," and "he that endureth to the end shall be saved."

To accomplish this, will require no little energy and determination of soul, for Jesus has many who follow him in the calm of Christian feasting and enjoyment, but flee from him at the approach of the storm. Nerve and genuine resolution are essential to enable us to endure to the end. We must overcome, for if we be overcome, the victory is not ours. The world is wicked; the enemies of Jesus are carrying on their work of destruction all around us; the most expert in all the legions of the ruler of darkness are placed in mysterious ambush on either side of our pathway; and the fuming bombs of Apollyon's works are roaring and exploding over and in the rear of the army of the Lord. Not a few of those whom we deemed as the chosen of God, have fallen victims to the destroying elements around us. But I am of the opinion that in all the regions of Apollyon's empire, there is no power to destroy, or hurt, or harm them that are followers of good. 1 Peter 3: 13. "The eyes of the Lord are over the righteous," and "the face of the Lord is against them that do evil." Seeing that we have like promises as those of our spiritual relations who have passed on before us, let us take courage, ye that love the Lord, and hasten onward, striving with true Christian endurance to "fight the good fight of faith."

"He that endureth." This suggests the idea that there is something to be endured. Man's return and entrance into Eden will not be found so easy as it was to come out. Man is fallen; and to regain his exalted primeval position requires no meagre effort, and no "inch of time;" but it does require a riveted confidence in, and an earnest grasp of the Unseen Hand, and a full resignation of the whole of life to the will and service of God. Many temptations can be avoided; and if we feel the real import of the words, "Lead us not into temptation," we will avoid many a temptation. Asking our Heavenly Father that he would not suffer us to be led into temptation, would imply that we have fears of temptations, and that we have an eager desire to avoid all that is possible. Our temptations are presented in divers forms: sometimes in the form of trial; at other times, of persecution; and again, of sore affliction. The causes of these may be natural or spiritual. The natural are more easily detected than the spiritual. The enemy of our profession is wonderfully shrewd, and cunning, and skillful. By his artful seductions, he has succeeded in taking many from their posts. His attacks are numerous and various. Do not presume, O ye who have risen with Christ from the baptismal grave, that the true and faithful followers of Jesus shall be "* * * * carried to the skies

On flowery beds of ease."

If our crown in this life be a "crown of thorns," we know that so it shall not always be. Christian endurance will enable us to endure all things, "esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt." "He that endureth" temptation, as gold does the refiner's fire, shall lose nothing but what the gold does, namely, the dross. In the most severe and trying temptations, the believer will have consolations, for he knows that his sufferings will have an end, and that, "he that endureth to the end shall be saved. And as these things are not everlasting, they shall not be so distressing, but what we shall be able to bear them, and endure them to the end. 1 Cor. 10: 13.—What a commingling of bitter and sweet! The bitter to make us better, the sweet to give us a foretaste of joys unrevealed. Who would not put the world in his rear, and set his face toward Zion, for the joys held in reservation for the believer "that endureth to the end?" Trials here, joys hereafter. But we need now to watch and pray: we need to run with patience. Go on, faithful one, go on, for your "crown of thorns" shall be exchanged for "a crown of righteousness."

Thoughts by the Wayside.

"Two things well considered would often prevent confusion and strife; first, to have it well ascertained whether we are not disputing about terms rather than things; and, secondly, to examine whether that which we differ in is worth contending about."

To write for the press now-a-days, to submit an article to the glare of public scrutiny, to be read and commented upon by an enlightened and intelligent people, when the critic's eye is ever open to detect an error, however minute, and the fault-finder is ever on the alert to superinduce, if possible, confusion and controversy, is indeed hazarding a great deal.

It has been said, and perhaps truthfully too, that "the pen is mightier than the sword;" and certain it is that he or she who wields the weapon skillfully for challenge or defence does accomplish much for weal or for woe.

And if this small and silent instrument of destruction, that is so easily handled can become "mightier through God, to the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan," let those who employ it for a righteous purpose use it valiantly. And if there is a certain prospect of becoming victorious in the struggle for right through its aid and influence, the position should never be resigned until the battle is nobly fought and the victory fairly won, when the whole christian armer will perhaps be laid aside together by the order of our greater Commander.

In writing as in fighting, there is always a design and "merit has its own reward." In all cases, causes must precede effects; and in order to obviate the latter, the former must of necessity be removed. It becomes us at all times to be careful not to mistake rashness for "zeal in a good cause," lest in our undue haste to overtake and subdue the prejudices of an enemy, we may blunder over and seriously wound the feelings of a friend. When we take an understanding view of the whole matter, comparing probabilities with results, and calculate the amount of evil that is wrought in this way by the pen, as well as the press, by those even who profess to be the heirs of heaven and immortal glory, we feel like burying our one talent deep down in the depths of obscurity; but silence and inactivity will excuse no one. "Occupy until I come," is the injunction of our king. Exercise and improvement are enjoined upon all who engage in the Master's service. We are just as accountable for thinking and speaking as we are amenable for writing, and will have to render a strict account of all that we have, and all that we are, in that "great day for which all other days were made."

The silent language of the pen, as it speaks in unheard accents to the heart, and moves unseen upon the troubled waters of conscience, often reminds us, by its measured process in its steady, onward course, of the effects produced by the tiny pebble that was chosen from the brook by the shepherd boy who kept his father's flocks in Bethlehem, to slay the mighty giant; and of Sampson's folly too, in yielding in an unhappy hour to the solicitations of a designing woman. Thus he became shorn of his strength in manhood's prime and was forever after blind. While we pity the weakness of the stronger, we admire the determined will of the weaker one, and desire to imitate his example, to remain undaunted by threats and oppositions, until, like David, we have accomplished the word that is given us to do. And when that Savior who was born of David's line, "shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation," "that we may also appear with him in glory," is the prayer of the writer.

Idleness is the key to beggary.

"Love not the world," says the Beloved Disciple. Pride, Vanity, and Self-gratification, are elements or "rudiments of the world," to which the disciple of Jesus must become dead, for the things of the world are at enmity with the things of God. From Paul's letter to the brethren at Colosse (II. 8 and 20,) it is evident that Paul, the missionary to the Gentiles, not only believed, but taught the contrariety of the rudiments of the world and the principles of Christ. He taught that to follow the world was to forsake Christ. Blessed is he that standeth.—Æ

Christian believers should be quick to hear the counsel of brethren, and should allow it great weight. He who tosses his head and sets himself up as an independent thinker, and boasts that he has no master, will usually turn out a heretic in doctrine and schismatic in practice. And since every true Christian loves to be guided by his brethren, it follows of course that "the brethren" should give their counsel freely, and responsibly to any brother that asks it. "Yea–all of you be subject one to another."—1*st. Ep. of Peter* v. 5.

If you love, love more. If you hate, hate less — Life is too short to spend in hating any one. Why war against a mortal who is going the same road with you? Why not expand the flower of life and happiness by learning to love? Your hands may be hard, but your heart need not be. Your form may be bent or ugly, but do you not know that the most beautiful flowers often grow in the most rugged, unsheltered places? The place, the home of love. Not that there is no love in the mansion, but somehow if we are not very careful, business will crowd all there is of beauty out of the heart. This is why God has given us Sabbaths and Saturday nights, that we may leave business in the office and have a heart cleaning.

The Test of Love.—"I do love God," said a little girl to her papa one day, when he had been talking to her about loving God. "Perhaps you think so."—"Oh, I do, indeed I do, papa." "Suppose, my child, you should come to me, and say, "Dear papa, I do love you," and then go away and disobey me—could I believe you?" "No, papa." "Well, dear, how can I believe that you love God, when I see you every day doing those things which he forbids? You know the Bible says, "If ye love me keep my commandments."

The Natural Man.

"But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they foolishness unto him: neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned." 1 Cor. 2: 14.

Since there seems to be a diversity of opinion concerning the above text, we will try to give what we understand to be a true scriptural definition of the term "natural man." What idea does the apostle wish to convey by this term? Evidently his "natural man" is a character just the reverse of the one whom he calls spiritual, in verse 15. This we would infer from the construction of the language. The subject is continued by using the disjunctive conjunction "but;" this conjunction, grammarians tell us, continues a subject by expressing opposition of meaning. According to the use of language, then, a natural man must be just the opposite of a spiritual man.

The apostle, in addressing weak believers, or those who had made little advancement in christianity, says: "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you, as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat; for ye were not yet able to bear it; nay, nor even now are ye yet able. For ye are yet carnal; for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and do ye not walk as men?"

It must then be a person who has made considerable progress in the Divine life; who walks not after the flesh but after the Spirit; whose life is hid with Christ in God, that properly is entitled to the appellation of spiritual.

The opposite then being true with regard to the natural man, he must be one who has advanced in the science of nature. That the apostle does not select his "natural man" from among those who are in a rude state of nature, whose faculties have not been cultivated by learning and study, and polished by an intercourse with society, as some seem to think, we believe can be made plain.

There are three states or conditions in which a person may be placed. First, a state of nature. From this he may rise or fall. He whose mental or physical faculties have not been distorted by vice, or purified by grace, properly occupies the former. Such may, and many do, indeed, possess many amiable and noble qualities; to prove which we need but refer to some whose names shine brightly on the pages of history.—One of these names, a name which every true-hearted American delighteth to honor, is that of Washington. We are aware that many award to him a high position in the Christian ranks, but as the weapons of his warfare were not such as Paul tells us belong to the Christian armament, we dare not assign him such a place. But his many noble and excellent qualities, his pure patriotism, his fatherly care for his soldiers, his indefatigable labors, all preserve for him an enduring monument in the hearts of his countrymen. There are others whose characters are perhaps equally as beautiful, and whom we cannot think of but with respect and admiration, such as Cyrus, that wonderful man, whose name was pronounced by the spirit of inspiration more than one hundred years before his birth: Socrates the philosopher of Greece: Kosciusko, the hero of Poland, and many others whose names we cannot mention.—These persons were beautiful indeed, and we are willing, yea glad to give them all the honor that belongs to them; but when we view them in the light of the blessed gospel, that perfect standard of excellence, we must say they come far below that. They are models, indeed, of human greatness; but the christian looks for a higher model. This perfect pattern we find in Jesus Christ, and in him alone. In him concentrates every grace, and every virtue. His character as far transcends those whose characters we noticed above, as Deity transcends human nature.

The gospel also, is as far superior to the systems of morality, as taught by men, as is its blessed Author superior to the authors of those systems. That they taught many excellent things we cannot deny. Who can help being struck with the beauty and sublimity of some of those ancient systems, especially the Platonic system.

It has been said, and perhaps truly, that "Philosophy is the noblest stretch of intellect which God has vouchsafed to man." But, continues the same author: "If it had not been for revelation, we should have known no more of the Deity than the Heathen philosophers knew before:" and to what did their knowledge amount? They felt the necessity of a First Cause, and they saw that that Cause must be intrinsically good; but when they came to systems, they never went farther than the point from which they first set out, that evil is not good, and good is not evil.

Let us now take a brief view of christianity, and then we can see the contrast between it and the noblest systems of heathenism.

"Nowhere except in the Scriptures," says Watson, "have we a perfect system of morals; and the deficiencies of Pagan morality only exalt the purity, the comprehensiveness, the practicability of ours.—The God of the Bible is holy, without spot; just, without partiality; good, boundlessly benevolent and beneficent; and his law is the image of himself, holy, just, and good." "Behold," says one, "Christianity in its native form, as delivered by its great Author. See a picture of God as far as he is imitable by man, drawn by God's own hand. What beauty appears in the whole! How just a symmetry! What exact proportion in every part! How desirable is the happiness here described! How venerable, how lovely is the holiness! "If" says Bishop Taylor, "wisdom, and mercy, and justice, and simplicity, and holiness, and purity, and meekness, and contentedness, and charity be images of God, and rays of Divinity, then that doctrine, in which all these shine so gloriously, and in which nothing else is ingredient, must needs be from God. The infinite superiority of Christianity, its pure spiritual character, and the lofty tone of its precepts, place it so high that it cannot be appreciated by those who are in a state of nature." No matter how great may be their mental acquirements, or how many virtues they may be in possession of, yet if they lack "the one thing needful," they must be ignorant of that wisdom, in comparison to which all other wisdom is insignificant. "For," says the apostle, "after that in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." This sublime wisdom God saw fit to reserve; and when the time came he himself delivered it to the human family; and as the world by wisdom could not find it, so the world by wisdom could not receive it, for said he who first revealed it: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Again "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God." From the above Scriptures we are to understand that we must be spiritual, we must be pure, before we can comprehend the things of God. Paul tells us then in exact agreement with the above: "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him." They are foolishness unto him from the very same reason that Paul's preaching was foolishness; they could not comprehend it; and how natural it is for persons to pronounce a thing foolishness, which they do not understand. Examples of this are abundant.

All great discoverers have had to encounter the same intolerant spirit. Christopher Columbus, Galileo, William Harvey, Eli Whitney, Mr. Kingsley, Robert Fulton, and many others have endured this kind of persecution. The learned men of Greece and Rome, could not through their philosophy comprehend that blessed gospel which Paul so ably declared, and as he came not to them with excellency of speech of man's wisdom, as his preaching bore no marks of metaphysical reasoning, but was uttered with plainness and simplicity, so that the most illiterate could understand; they would not receive it, but denounced it as foolishness. But Paul being thoroughly convinced of the rectitude of his conduct, and the intrinsic value of his doctrine was not daunted at their opposition, for although "Christ crucified" was a "stumbling-block to the Jews, and to the Greek, foolishness," yet says he "Unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ is the power of God, and the wisdom of God." Knowing this, this great moral hero exclaimed in spite of all the ignominy that was attached to that cross, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world."

Having shown, or at least tried to show what kind of character the Apostle alluded to, by his term "natural man," and that he took him from among those whom the world hold in the highest repute for their natural parts, their learning, and their religion; we will now try to show, the great contrast between such an one, and an humble christian. The latter is influenced by entirely different motives; his knowledge is of an entirely different character, and proceeds from an entirely different source. It influences not the head only, but also the heart. The latter must be changed, before the former can be instructed by that heavenly Teacher who is sent to impart that wisdom which cometh from above, & is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality without hypocrisy. The child of God, though he may not have made much advancement in literature, though he may be ignorant of the sciences, yet if he enjoys a spiritual union and communion with God, his knowledge is greater, far greater than the highest flights of human genius. What encouragement is this! Here is wisdom which is far beyond the reach of human intellect, and yet is attainable by all. The sage and the unlettered rustic, must receive it in the same way, by the tuition of the Spirit of God.—The spiritual only can receive his instructions; for the apostle says not only that the natural man doth not receive the things of the Spirit, but that he cannot receive them. What wisdom is here manifested, what love, what tender care for the downtrodden of earth, in this way, more than in any other, all can be brought on an equality; the high brought down, and the low exalted. No wonder that it drew from our blessed Savior a prayer of thanksgiving: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in thy sight." "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will show them his covenant."

Thoughts for Reflection.

The current of time is swiftly bearing us along the journey of life, to its final goal! Not one moment stays its course, but, onward, onward, is the voice of its murmurings, as they faintly die away! Let us earnestly engage with its action, continually casting garlands of life's flowers along the strand, that may be gladly gathered by our fellow comrades, as they linger on the way. Let us stamp our foot-prints on the sands of time, worthy of imitation, which, perhaps, may encourage some disheartened pilgrim—friend, sojourning with us on earth's rugged pathway! Soon the tide will cease to flow! Our frail bark is launched. And whence the final port? On the sunny banks beyond Zion's Jordan, to strike the golden lyre and join the heavenly chorus,—or, in the dismal vale of eternal night, where there is no peace, but "wailing and gnashish of teeth! Let us cautiously heed its rapid flight, that we be not found in a listless demeanor, suddenly awakened to the sad realization of its final flow into the Ocean of Eternity!

Never defend an error because you once thought it to be true.

On Preaching the Gospel.

It is to be feared that too many preachers of the Gospel in this our day, do not feel nor consider the great responsibility that rests upon them, as watchmen or shepherds of the flock; but are like the prophet Isaiah said: "They are shepherds that cannot understand, they all look to their own way, every one for his gain from his quarter." Isaiah 56: 10.

A profession of religion at the present day has indeed become popular. Men are not called good citizens unless members of some church, professors of Christianity. Hence we see in our large cities, large and fashionable houses built, with their tall steeples reaching perhaps higher to heaven than their prayers do. "May we not enquire," why is this? The answer is, because the Gospel is preached without the cross: "whosoever will come after me," says Jesus, "let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." Now this self denying doctrine, if preached, would not be so well received. But on the other hand, church members are allowed to follow all the fashions of the world, attend theatres, and places of amusement, and enjoy themselves in all worldly enjoyments. No cross, no self-denial, no sacrifice to be made; only believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, that he was the Son of God, and that he came into the world to save sinners, is all that is required, and you will be saved. This indeed seems to be the case with many professing christians. They hope to get to Heaven, alone by this dead faith. They tell us God is very merciful, and does not require so much at our hands. They therefore seek the easiest road to Heaven. How often have I thought when I have heard ministers of the Gospel make the way so broad, and the road so smooth, as if it were an easy thing to gain Heaven, forgetting that the Savior said the "Kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."

I feel to relate, as it comes to my mind, what a certain minister of the Gospel told his hearers on a Sunday morning in my own neighborhood. He was preaching in a large and to a full house. Before him was all the fashion of the world. Now to preach this self-denying doctrine of the Savior, he knew they did not want to hear; hence his discourse was none to please the ear; told them he seen no harm in dress. "Why," said he, "it displays good taste." I thought that man did not preach the Gospel.

How will shepherds, who have not warned the flock of every sin and wickedness, be able to stand in that great and coming day, because God has spoken through the mouth of the prophet: "When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die, and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked ways to save his life, the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood shall I require at thine hand." Ezek. 3: 18. Thus we see the great responsibility that rests upon every minister of the Gospel. Now if preachers of the gospel fail in pointing out to a dying people, that the great end of Christ's coming in the flesh, was to purchase to himself a "holy people," who being made partaker of a Divine nature, and delivered from the corruptions of the world, and thereby teaching us, "that we must deny ourselves of all ungodliness, and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present evil world"—"Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity and "purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." They do not preach the Gospel, for their preaching is at variance with the main design for which the gospel was given. "For if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ."

But what is it to preach the Gospel? It is to point out the effects of sin, for by the gospel man is evidently in a state of sin and guilt, under the just displeasure of God. Therefore sin must be pointed out, in all its various forms. The numerous lusts of the flesh, which lurk disguised in the human heart, must be stripped of their disguise and exposed to view. The love of ease, and the love of pleasure must be exhibited in all their workings. Pride in its several branches of self-conceit, vanity, ostentation, and such like, must be held up to view. The love of money, the love of worldly honor, the desire for human applause, envy, resentment, all these with many more, must be fully explained, if we would know the true meaning of the corrupt state, from which it is the design of the gospel to set us free. He therefore who is thus exposing sin, is preaching the Gospel and truly as effectually, as if he were proclaiming the glad tidings of forgiveness in Christ Jesus.

But lest I weary the patience of the reader, (for I feel the subject indeed one of interest,) we will inquire if faith alone is sufficient to save the soul. "What," asks the Apostle James, "doth it propfit, though a man say he hath faith and have not works, can faith have him?" 2: 14. If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto him, "Depart in peace: be ye warmed and filled: notwithstanding, ye give them not those things which are needful to the body," "what doth it profit." What sincerity, what worth is there in such professions of kindness? What benefit do they confer on those who are the objects of them? "Even so faith, if it hath not works is dead, being alone."

All professions of faith, which do not give evidence of the truth by a holy life and conversation, are false, vain, and unprofitable: yea a man may say, to such a professor: "Thou hast faith," or pretend to have it, "and I have works:" show me thy faith with thy works; give me, if thou canst, some other proof of it, "and I will shew thee my faith by my works." "Thou believest there is one God; thou doest well: the devils also believe and tremble." Wherein doth thy faith differ from theirs, if it produce not the fruits of righteousness, and holiness. "But will thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead," wholly unprofitable to salvation. "Was not Abraham our father, justified?" Did he not show forth a living faith by obedience, when he offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Did he not by that act of obedience prove and display that living faith in the truth, and power, and promise of God, which "was imputed to him for righteousness?" "Seest thou how faith wrought with works," producing a full obedience to all the commands of God, and of our blessed Lord and Master Jesus Christ?

In conclusion, let it be remembered, that nothing new, can be expected in the preaching of the Gospel.—"If any man preach any other gospel unto you than what ye have received, let him be assured, Gal. 1: 9, It has ever been the policy of Satan rather to undermine the church, and the commandments of the Savior, than to attack them openly. An open denial of any truth would be rejected: but the disproportionate exaltations of part of the Gospel to the depression of the rest is not so soon perceived to be full of danger. What will avail, as has been already said, the speculative belief of any religious truth or commandment, unless that truth or commandment be brought into effect by true obedience to the word of God.—The knowledge of our sinfulness will benefit those only who through their convictions confess their sins before God, become deeply humbled on account of them, implore his forgivness through the atoning "blood of Jesus," confess him before men, and keep his commandments. So much will the knowledge of the pure precepts of the Gospel benefit any but such as are purifying themselves even as he is pure, and who are watching over their whole conduct that the temper and disposition of a Christian may be found in them to the honor of their Blessed Master. The hour is fast approaching, as on the wings of a whirlwind, when empty speculation, and show, will not be allowed as a substitution for a living faith, and a holy practice. God grant that every one who reads these lines, may be found in that day to have received the truth in the love of it, and to have brought forth abundant fruit to the glory of our Blessed Lord and Master Jesus Christ. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22: 14.

ISAIAH G. HARLEY.

The Past.

There is something peculiarly sad in looking back upon one's past life—we see ourselves as another person—toiling up the steep in scorching suns, in cooling shade, here pausing to slake our thirst at some well-spring of pleasure; there sitting down weary and faint by the way-side, or shedding bitter tears over some lost treasure; to live over again, even in imagination, the thoughts, feelings, hopes, fears, joys or sorrows experienced day by day, in the years of the irretrievable past; to turn at some landmark in our pilgrimage and look with sad yet earnest eye to the places over which we have toiled with bleeding feet and aching hearts.

To the glimmering sheen of hope which oft lured us, only to dazzle and deceive—we would gladly close our eyes and shut out the vision, but in vain.

The disappointments, vexations of spirit, false friendships, crushed hopes, even the remembrance of hours of pleasure, have a melancholy tinge, as mayhap they were too quickly succeeded by hours of anguish and bereavement.

Looking upon the past of one's life is like opening a grave of a long buried treasure—an idolized child perhaps. Has the reader ever stood by the open grave of one who was laid away long years before the coffin was raised to the air, and the sunlight of Heaven and the rush of tender feeling and of bitter anguish at parting surged over the soul with an overwhelming power as we gaze upon the gloomy casket that contains all there is left, or what we once held in our arms and upon our bosoms of a darling child? How we long, yet dread to have the lid removed, that one more glance at the face may satisfy us that one feature only can be discerned. When the precious form was laid away, it was pure, waxen and fair—robed in soft white linen and merino—now, we cannot even trust ourselves to fancy of what is hidden there—the change that damps of the grave have wrought. We turn away with a sense of loneliness & despair creeping about the heart, and feel, oh, how deeply, the vanity of life. Lay it down reverently, carefully in another place. Lay it down for the last time. And turn to thy God for comfort, since no human tongue can offer comfort or consolation at this second burial. It is only the poor, perishable body, we know, that lies there; the soul that animated it, the life, the divine part of our being, still lives and will live throughout the ages of eternity yet. But, oh! how we have missed them in our daily walks. How we hunger for their presence, their bright smiles and loving voices, and these longings can only be gratified after we have ourselves passed through the "dark valley" to clasp hands on the other side.

Every man is a volume if you knew how to read him.

For the Companion.

A letter to a young Brother in the flesh.

DEAR BROTHER: Notwithstanding you roam amid the fertile valleys of the far off State, the shores of which are washed by the swelling waves of the great Pacific Ocean, your thoughts come to me through the medium of the pen, breathing sentiments of affection, and laden with attestations of brotherly regard. Nourishing the hope we may some day, not far distant, be brothers in the highest sense of that endearing appellation, permit me to offer a few thoughts to your maturing mind as well as to the considerate minds of all my young readers. Am glad to learn your intelligent mind is not averse to a careful perusal of the columns of the "Companion" and that you allude to the people of God in terms of proper respect. I have reason to believe your heart is susceptible to principles of morality and the avenues to your soul yet open to the renovating influences of pure religion.

You have reached that period of life when ambition gives strength to every energy and awakens every impulse—when hope buoys up the struggling spirit and elevates every aspiration of the heart, and when the fascinating influence of the world dazzles the eye,—when Dame Pleasure smiles never so charmingly, and all the enticing paths of worldly happiness seem opening in an inviting manner. Be not too hasty to enter the bowers of apparent ease, or to wander in the labyrinths of earthly happiness, they have an ending not so much to be desired.

As the happiness or misery in after life depend in a great measure upon the habits and resolutions formed in early manhood, how important that at his age a foundation be laid that will insure future usefulness and happiness. Youth is the seed time of life, and, "as a man sows so shall he reap," is a law as unalterable as the Divine mind from whence it emanated.

You are climbing the hill of science, "storing the mind," you say, "with useful knowledge." You further say, you "find the assent difficult and slow; and the hill a high one, but they that persevere will eventually reach the top round." I would not say a word to dampen your ardor or check your course after useful knowledge, but would admonish you to go onward and upward and true to the line. Set your mark high, but within the bounds of reason and prudence.—To reach the top round of the ladder of knowledge is beyond the capacity of the human mind; and when you get so high as to discover how little you know or can know, you are beginning to be wise. And doubtless when you get in reach of the wreath of fame, perched on the highest pinnacle of your burning ambition, you will discover naught but a gilded, emtpy godess! facinating only while at a distance!

There is, in consideration of this subject, one danger I wish to impress your mind with. It is a high culture of the head unaccompanied with a proper culture of the heart. Upon this reef millions have become shipwrecked, and thousands are following close in their lamentable wake. Some, owing to this fact, hardly get a start up the rugged path of knowledge ere they grow giddy-headed and fall; others go higher and higher and alas! fall and great is their fall. It is only those, as a general thing, who have the heart aright can keep the position they through great labor have attained to, and become burning lights and models of excellence in the world. Such were the characters that have left their names high and bright on the monuments of moral worth; and such the heroes and heroines that have shed a holy religious influence on the pages of the Christian history of this world.

It is a fact worthy of note, a high state of mental culture, properly made use of, has rather a tendency to fit man or woman for usefulness and future happiness, than otherwise. It is the abuse of acquired knowledge that is so much to be deplored. Beware of that light top dressing that only puffs the head and leaves the heart a habitation of every foul spirit!—You are as a mariner starting out on the ocean of time. The facilities for building your boat are thrown around you and others may assist you, but upon you devolves the burden of constructing it aright.—Let the patterns be nothing short of morality,—unfurl to the breeze the white and spotless sails of virtue and honesty,—stand at the helm and maintain a firm persevering nerve, and unflinching integrity. And eternal truth for it, you shall draw around you the genuine atmosphere and Divine favor. He who rules our destinies will lead you into positions of usefulness, and doubtless create within you a thirst and longing for the waters of eternal life. You are born for a more noble purpose than to live alone for self, or to the end of satisfying selfish propensities. He who is willing to live and labor for the good of mankind unmoved by selfish interests, has already begun his immortality.—Let your lot be cast where it may, so live that the world may be none the worse for your having lived in it. If possible may the world be the better by you having lived in it.

As you become more and more versed in the sciences, you will, doubtless, become more acquainted with the wonders displayed in the handiwork of the Creator; and be made to wonder yourself at the marvelous workings of the Divine ruler of the boundless universe.—By all, may you be made to reverence and adore his Holy name. In every object in nature we see the finger-prints of the invisible. O, may you, with us all, learn to read them aright, may they teach us there is One above and around us that sees and knows all that we do, say, or think. That it is "in him we live, move, and have our being." That it is by his mercies vouchsafed to us we are what, and where we are, and enjoy the things we do. His hand has shielded you from harm while traveling to that distant land, and has been with you ever since, even in the late serious accident that befell you his mercy was apparent or you might have been ushered in a moment of time into his presence. It was his mercy to thus warn you on what a slender thread your life hangs. I must close this letter. Though penned in haste I humbly submit it to your serious consideration.

Yours in hope of a blessed immortality.

"Are we Immortal?"

Do we, dear reader, thus seriously inquire? It certainly becomes us as rational creatures so to do. The inquiry simply is, Shall our conscious minds never cease to exist? Irrespective of any future condition or relations, happy or miserable in heaven or in hell, it is of moment for us to get upon this subject the best possible information. Our consciousness teaches us that we have powers far superior to the insect of a day, to the eagle or elephant that numbers its years by scores, or to the monarchs of the forest that live for centuries. Unceasing thought, anxious solicitude, and yearning curiosity, direct our views and hopes at every stage of life to others yet future: when a child, to manhood; when a youth, to married life; when in old age, to death, the grave, and what lies beyond these. This looking forward has the force of an instinct. It is not the result of education, and, therefore, as here on earth the successive stage of childhood, manhood, and middle life, are wont to be moulded according to assumed expectation, why should not analogy alone suggest that another cycle of existence, to which the mind spontaneously directs its thoughts, may succeed the period of age at the death of the body? We see the ephemeral insect make its short and rapid flight, and think there is the end of it. But will we persuade ourselves that our end will be like its?

We will look a little further around us. We see the creature of but a year's or more continuance, assume various phases of existence—the egg, the worm, the chrysalis, the beetle or the butterfly—in each state so perfectly unlike the preceding that, without careful marking, the eye would not indentify it. The curculio, for example, that makes such ravages with plums and smooth-skinned fruits, etc., might afford an illustration of benefit to us. The egg deposited in the young fruit late in Spring or early in Summer, is hatched by the hot sun of June or July, into a worm which, feeding on the tender germ and penetrating to the kernel, causes it to fall to the ground where its habitation withers and decays, and the temporary tenant passes thence into the earth and disappears, so that we might say, it has perished. But the next season it rises from its grave a winged beetle, to deposit its eggs and send them through the same rounds it had gone itself. Analogy fully here inquires: May not our death and entrance into the earth but introduce us to a new cycle of existence? This the blessed Word of God, which is a much better instructor, distinctly teaches, and takes its illustration from vegetable life. "That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die: and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain; it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain: but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body. . . . . So also is the resurrection of the dead." 1 Cor. 15: 36—42. "The dust shall return to the earth as it was, and the spirit to God who gave it." Eccles. 12: 7. The mode of its existence may vary but the conscious spirit has not ceased to be. It is not annihilated. The fact of death, the dissolution of the body in the grave, is no proof of the absolute cessation of existence. As in the vegetable and insect worlds, there is a process of revivification: so with man. Our blessed Redeemer has assured us that "this is the Father's will, which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." John 6: 39. "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead yet shall he live." John 11: 25.

Paul says: "To depart and be with Christ; which is far better." Phil. 1: 23. "We are confident, I say and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord." 2 Cor. 5: 8. "For we know that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." 2 Cor. 5: 1.

Language cannot be plainer than the above in asserting an immortal existence, joyous and glorious, for the true believer. Somewhere in God's universe the blessed Redeemer sits at "the right hand of the Majesty on high." There he wills that those whom God has given to him shall be with him to behold his glory.—John 17: 24. If we my dear readers, are his, our living, conscious mind therefore shall be with him. If not, then let us hear the word of God: we "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from his presence." 2 Thess. 1: 9. That destruction, however, will no more be annihilation than would be that of the house we dwell in, or was that of the antediluvian world destroyed by the deluge. The destruction of our hopes, our plans, our pursuits, our pleasures, and our opportunities, and means for prosecuting them in this world, does not include or imply the destruction of our being, no more than does the change of shifting scenes, or sundering of present relations, annihilate our consciousness. Here the blessed Redeemer offers to us eternal life—life felicitous and glorious forever. "If a man keep my sayings," says he, "he shall never see death." John 8: 51. None but Christ can give such a guarantee of immortal life. He died that they might live who believed on him. He only is "the resurrection and the life." Let us take him by faith, and eternal life is ours.

An outcry against others' sins does not always imply an abhorrence for sin; for the man who truly dreads sin, will abhor it most of all in his own heart.

By-and-By.

There's a little mischief-making
Elfin, who is ever nigh,
Hind'ring every undertaking,
And his name is By-and-by.
What we ought to do this minute,
"Will be better done," he'll cry;
If to-morrow we begin it,
"Putt it off," says By-and-by.

Those who heed his treacherous wooing,
Will his faithless guidance rue;
What we always put off doing,
Clearly we shall never do;
We shall reach what we endeavor,
If on Now we more rely;
But unto the realms of Never,
Leads the pilot By-and-by.

The Bible a Book of Poetry.

One reason why the style of the Bible gratifies the taste of all cultivated minds, may be found in the abundance, the simplicity, and naturalness of its illustrations. In the highest and truest sense of the term, it is a book of poetry. For if it be the poet's noble task to express truth in vivid and striking language, so as to impress the heart while pleasing the imagination, then surely in that task the inspired writer have neither rivals or equals. To them was granted the divine faculty of making things, visible and invisible, live and move and have their being, in forms so well defined to the inner eye as to secure for them something of the mingled beauty and grandeur of a most livid landscape, wherein every color contributes to heighten the charm of every object. Among all the sacred writers, the sweet-singer of Israel was pre-eminent in this —that he found a figure for his every thought and an illustration for every virtue he celebrated and for every vice he condemned.—One wonders with increasing pleasure, as he familiarizes his mind with the psalms of David, at the perpetual fullness and the variety of their figures and smiles. In them "day converses with day," the floods "clap their hands," the sun "runs a race," the mountains "speak peace," the clouds "chariot" the Divinity, "snow and hail and vapor and stormy wind," sing their hallelujah chorus of praise. All nature, in a word, seems to have been made vocal by the inspired art of the Psalmist. Everything was invited to sing in unison with the well-strung harp.

All the first-rate poets have borrowed the chief part of their imagery from the Bible. Job, David, Isaiah, Ezekiel, and John have furnished, not only the sublimest thoughts, but the noblest figures to our chief writers. It is said that several modern towns in the East have been constructed with materials taken from some immense temple that had long since fallen into decay. So, too, modern writers of eminent fame have come and gone to the great temple of the Divine Word, and taken from it the choicest material for their verse—only, they have left this temple itself just as stately and as magnificent as when first revealed to the world.

Casket of Jewels.

To be thought perfectly happy, pride often makes itself perfectly miserable.

Observed duties maintain our credit, but secret duties maintain our life.

He who can at all times sacrifice pleasure to duty, approaches sublimity.

Speak little, speak truth; spend little, pay cash.

He who blackens others, does not whiten himself.

Every time you avoid doing wrong you increase your inclination to do that which is right.

Good works are essential to true religion, not as meritorious, but as evidence of the reality and glory of such religion.

He is happy whose circumstances suit his temper; but he is more excellent who can suit his temper to any circumstances.

"The happiest conversation," says Dr. Johnson, "is that of which nothing is distinctly remembered, but a general effect of pleasing impressions."

If I held truth captive in my hand, I should open my hand and let it fly, in order that I might again pursue and capture it.

Man and Wife.

The theory of man and wife, that special theory in accordance with which the wife is to bend herself in loving submission before her husband, is very beautiful; and it would be good altogether if it could only be arranged that the husband should be stronger and the greater of the two. The theory is based upon the hypothesis; and the hypothesis sometimes fails of confirmation.—In ordinary marriages the vessel rights itself, and the stronger and greater takes the lead, whether clothed in petticoat, or in coat, waist-coat, and trowsers; but there sometimes comes a terrible shipwreck, when the woman before marriage has filled herself full with ideas of submission, and then finds that her golden-headed god has got an iron body and feet of clay.

A Home Thrust from Flavel.—"Two things a master commits to his servant's care," saith one, "the child and the child's clothes." It will be a poor excuse for the servant to say at his master's return, "Sir, here are all the child's clothes neat and clean, but the child is lost!" Much so with the account that many will give to God of their souls and bodies at the great day. "Lord, here is my body, I am very grateful for it. I neglected nothing that belonged to its content and welfare, but for my soul that is lost and cast away forever. I took little care and thought about it."

Fall of the Leaf.—The season of the fall of the leaf has come again, with all its sad and salutary teachings. Who can shut his heart against its lessons? Who as he sees the frost-withered leaf driven by the fitful winds, is not reminded that such is human life? Even as a leaf when the frost have dried up its sap, and its stem clings no more to the parent tree, so is our life.—It may be green to-day and float gaily upon the summer breeze, but the frost of death are gnawing at its stem, and we know not if it shall wave there to-morrow, or be driven away by the wintry blasts to eternity. Happy are we, if nature preaches not to us in vain, in this her solemn day.

Parties and Schisms.

"Now I beseech you, brethren, to mark those who cause divisions and offenses, contrary to the teachings which ye learned, and avoid them." Rom. 16 : 17.

It appears from the above texts as also from other portions of the Scriptures, that the sacred writers entertoined fears, that the Church through all ages should be subjected to severe troubles and trials on account of "unruly members" among its number. And especially of our age it is prophesied that "perilous times will come; for men will be lovers of themselves, lovers of money, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, implacable, false accusers," &c., "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." 2nd Tim. 3 : 1—5. The letters to Timothy are specially pointed upon this matter. At another place we read: "For the time will come when they will not endure the sound teaching, but according to their own desires will to themselves heap up teachers, having itching ears; and they will turn away their ears from the truth and will turn aside to fables." 4 : 3, 4.

The above prophecies appear to us to be applicable to the church at the present time.—Differences, dissentions, and contentions, are constantly being brought before us; and we long with the apostle that our brethren may be "wise as to that which is good, and simple as to that which is evil." These all have their causes, either real or imaginary: "For it must needs be that causes of offense come; but woe to that man throngh whom the cause of offense comes!" We think the most fruitful source of these schisms is SELF LOVE. Men love themselves, and hence they imbibe a very high estimation of their opinions and prejudices. When these are not recognized by those with whom they are associated, love of self urges it upon them as an imperative duty to take heed that no indignity be allowed to "Beloved self." True to this principle in their actions, a disruption must soon take place between such characters and the people of God; for the Christian seeks not his own, but that which is another's. The Christian must deny himself, take up his cross and follow after Jesus.

But we did not so much intend to write an essay upon the subject of factions as to impart some items of historical information of our day, relative to them. In the first place we present a revised extract of a report of an organization, sent us in the form of a communication for publication. It appears that a call was made for a meeting of "cut-off-brethren," by one Peter Deardorff of Elkhart county, Indiana, by whom the report is signed, and also accompained by a letter from him.—The meeting was held on Monday following the 20th day of November last, we presume in Elkhart county, Indiana, and perhaps at the house of Peter Deardorff. Read the report.

"Monday morning, 9 o'clock we all met, to see if we could form a union of the cut off brethren from the so called order of the German Baptist church, for not being willing to follow those things laid down by men in the Annual meeting; for not being allowed to point out those things that are not supported by the word, thus forbidding any opposition to its councils. We see no bounds to its power, even to disannul a positive ordinance of the gospel to wit: Baptism in East Tennessee. After the first day of October, 1866, they must be baptised again, which is ratified by the Brethren in Annual Council.—This we look upon as being a bolder stroke than the Pope ever made. He changed the mode but never required the subject to be baptised over. We view such things as despotism, and beg leave to reform and come to the purity of God's holy Word, as our dear old brethren did in 1708, and as Paul directed the elders at Miletus. Acts. 20. Accordingly, the following brethren agreed to take the word of God for their only rule of faith and practice; lay aside the doctrines and traditions of men viewing such as an impeachment upon the character of Jehovah, to say that the word is not sufficient to govern his church according to his will. It goes to say his will is not revealed, until men in council perfect it.

John Flory, Jacob Spitzer, Rockingham county, Va. David Studebaker, ——Cloppart, Montgomery county, Ohio—by letter; Peter Deardorff, David Evans, Elkhart county, Ind.; Isaac Latshaw, Clinton County, Ind.; Isham Gibson, J. D. Bowman, A. P. Gibson, Virden, Macoupin county, Ills. The last two have sanctioned. The brethren present, except the two brethren Leedys, [Jacob and Samuel Leedy of Ohio.–EDITOR.] formed a firm union, and on the 25th administered the holy Communion. Then Elder Flory and Spitzer started to Clinton county, Ind., to organize a church on the South Fork of the Wild Cat river and then to return home."

Thus we have given our readers the account of the organization of a new sect. As all of the founders were once members of the Church, and are more or less known to our brethren, we make the request that some brethren give us a history of these persons, stating the cause of their separation from us, their reputation for morality, piety, &c., which statement should be signed by the officers of the church in which they were expelled.

Next week we expect to expose another schism which is just now coming to maturity.

Brother Henry:—Please announce through the "Companion" that it is desired that when our ministering brethren go to Baltimore City, or when they in traveling pass through, that they consent to preach for the members and friends living in the city; which can be arranged, by addressing a few lines to brother L. J. Grove, No. 215 Biddle street, a week or a few days previous. There is a large meeting house, built on the Brethren's lot, at the corner of Lombard and Paca streets, which can be had at any time. We hope our brethren will attend to this request on their way to and from this year's Annual Meeting. Please take a note of brother Grove's address, and if there should on any future occasion be time to inform us, one or the other of the brethren at Pipe Creek, Md. would try and meet them also.

PHILIP BOYLE.

New Windsor Md.

BALTIMORE, Mar. 5th 1869.

Dear brother Henry:—As many of the "brethren" throughout the country feel an interest in the effort we are making to re-introduce the cause of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, into this city, I have concluded, with your approbation, to keep them advised of its progress. At present but two members, sister Mary A. Woods and myself, reside in the city. There are two applicants for baptism, and as soon as we can get regular public worship, I have no doubt, we will have many knocking at the door for admission into the fold of Christ. The people are becoming tired of the enormous tax on them to support a paid ministry, and for the erection of immense and costly edifices, christened, churches. Indeed from present appearances, all the different sects of the city (and their names are legion) appear to outvie each other in the magnificence and splendor of their houses of worship. Many candidly acknowledge that they do worship their pastors and their fine meeting houses. Verily is their idolatry equal to that evinced by the people of Athens, when Paul preached to them of "the UNKNOWN GOD" whom they ignorantly worshiped. I pity them; hence my efforts to have one place of worship in the city, where the substance, not the shadow is worshiped in Spirit and truth.

By request, our beloved brother, Elder Jacob Trostle of Bush Creek, preached an effective discourse on Tuesday evening last. The congregation was respectable in numbers, and a more attentive audience, I never witnessed. There is considerable interest manifested in the doctrine of the "Brethren," which is simply an obedience to the commandments of the blessed Savior.—I feel assured that there are hundreds, if not thousands, of honest individuals here, who would eagerly accept, adopt and practice the commands of the Lord Jesus Christ if they could be made acquainted with them, and had the opportunity of doing so. It may require some sacrifices at the hands of the brethren. I may name a few of them.

1. A properly organized Sunday School, under the control of the church, where the poor children, that are now excluded from other schools on account of their being too poor to dress fine enough, may be taught to read the word of God; and learn that God has a chosen people in the world that humbly worship him by obeying Him IN ALL HIS COMMANDMENTS.

2. Those ministering brethren, who take Paul's advice to Timothy, "and study to show themselves approved unto God, workmen that need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the truth," must do themselves the violence to visit the city, and expound the truth in all its purity and simplicity, and thus win souls to Christ.

3. In order to carry out the first and second propositions, it will require a small amount of funds. As God has blessed many of our brethren with much of this world's goods, I have no doubt they will willingly assist in the work.

The movement is under the care and control of the Pipe Creek branch of the Church, of which brethren Philip Boyle and David Miller are the Elders.

We ask the fervent effectual prayers of all God's people for a mighty outpouring of his Holy Spirit upon us; that we may see the ark of the covenant moving forward.

Yours in the Lord.

L. J. GROVE.

Brother Holsinger:—As church news are desirable by many, I will give a short sketch of a mission of love I made to Dauphin and Lebanon Counties, Pa.

I started from home, Feb. 19th 1869, and arrived at Harrisburg 20th. From thence was taken to brother Zigler's, 7 miles distant to his home, had social meeting with the brethren that evening; next day 21st preaching at his house; that evening at the Paxton meeting-house 4 miles distant; had 5 meetings there. 24th, went to Hanover meeting-house, 6 miles, had 3 meetings and one funeral. 27th, went to Conawago 10 miles, had 3 meetings in that meeting-house. March 1st went to Bachmansville 4 miles, had 3 meetings; 1 meeting at brother Gipple's in Lebanon County, 1 at brother John Gerlach's same County, 6 or 7 meetings at Spring

Creek meeting-house Dauphin County, where 9 were baptised, all young; had it not been for the extreme cold that morning, there might have been perhaps double that number. Had good attention, and much zeal was manifested in every place. The members are zealous in the cause of Christ, and have many meetings, both social and public. May Zion prosper in every land.

Many are awakened and have expressed their willingness to join in with the children of God ere long. I started on the 8th and reached home the next day at dinner and found all well, with the exception of my son's child which God called home during my absence.

Thanks to the brethren and friends for their kindness during my sojourn amongst them. May the Lord reward them for their love. And above all, thanks be to God for his kind care and protection.—Blessed be the name of the Lord.

Your weak brother,
LEONARD FURRY.

And while I am writing I may as well send to the dear brethren and sisters a scrap of church news. We are still endeavoring here in the Arnold Grove Church, Carroll Co., Ills. to make some progress, by the help of the Lord, and trust the Lord will still bless our efforts to do good. We have now here in active operation during the past winter, a Sabbath School established for the benefit of all the members of the Church and their children, under the supervision of brother C. Long, which, we hope, is resulting in some good: and we hope by the blessing of the Lord that those large portions of God's word committed to memory may be of practical benefit in years to come.

We have had three additions to the Church by baptism during the winter. The Church, seeing the necessity of more laborers in the vineyard, set apart Feb. 13th ult. for the purpose of a choice, which resulted in the election of brother Joseph Stitzel to the ministry. I will also here state that the brethren in the adjoining district of Hickory Grove held an election on the 6th of March, choosing brother Geo. D. Zollers to the ministry, and brother Benj. Clammer to the deaconship. May the Lord bless all those dear brethren with success in their various labors devolving upon them. Let us all be faithful workers together in the service of the Lord, hoping soon to hear our blessed Master say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Visit to the Church near New Philadelphia, Ohio.

Left home February 27th; arrived same evening at New Philadelphia station. Elder G. Kollar met me there, and conveyed me to his house some 6 miles east, same night preached in the Mt. Tabor meeting-house. On Sunday was conveyed by brother Kollar, in company with his wife, and brother Loomos and wife, to Crooks School-house, about 7 miles from New Philadelphia. Preaching at 10 A. M., also in the evening. Continued the meeting at said school-house until the evening of the 5th of March. Had 6 accessions by baptism and one made application. The meetings were well attended and quite an interest was manifested. Many more were made to feel the power of the word of truth. At this meeting we saw the sinner approach the mercy seat. How sublime the sight of a human being approaching the throne of grace, to pour his woes and wants, not into an angel's ears, but into the listening ear of God himself! It must be a source of wonder to the cherubic hosts as from their dazzling stations they behold the Jehovah of Eternity, giving audience to a poor wounded child of earth, listening to the story of his wrongs & stooping from their infinite height to pour solace and salvation into that afflicted spirit. Where is sublimity if not here? Where is grandeur if not in such a scene?—All the sublimity of earth equals not the scene where God gives audience to man. The first and greatest duty of this life is to prepare for one which succeeds it, and until this is done, every other effort is out of place. The man who begins to reform society before his own heart is reformed from the corruptions of sin, and his title to heaven made sure, is guilty of a very great inconsistency. The word of God urges us all to seek first, and in preference to all things, the kingdom of God and his righteousness. The whole life is not too long for such enterprise, and the Bible constantly demands that every one should make his own peace with God. Between the Creator & the creature there is enmity and opposition. The carnal mind is at enmity against God on one side, and God is anger with the wicked every day, on the other side. The great work of this life is to effect a reconciliation. Unless this is secured the soul of man is lost, and life thrown away. Now some have lived a quarter of a century, and some half a century, and have not made the first attempt to reconcile themselves with God or insure their own salvation. They have secured fortunes and honors, and friends, but they have not obtained the pearl of great price.—They are but a step from death, and yet all the work remains to be done. After death no change can be effected. A man's character will not be open to change once the spirit has removed from time and entered upon its returnless voyage. Here, and here only, can salvation be secured, and yet the hours pass, the days fly away, the months and years roll on, and man's great work unfinished. "Time is short," and soon from the death-pillow of each of us will be heard the silent voice of the departing spirit.

Near the place of the meeting above named, Peter Leatherman lives; he moved from Washington

Co., Pa., about 40 years ago. He has eight children living and five dead. Brother L. was 74 years old the 24th of January, A. D. 1869.—His house was burned in November, 1867, by which he sustained a loss of about three thousand dollars.—Brother L. and his wife are very zealous in the cause of our blessed Savior. The brethren and sisters in that arm of the church are earnestly contending for the faith in Christ Jesus. Brother George V. Kollar does the principal labor in that part of the church. May brother Kollar with us all be greatly encouraged in the ministerial labor, for an entrance shall be ministered unto us all, abundantly, into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, if we are faithful. Brother Boyle and Brother Stoner's Report.

No. 1

Oct. 28. Left brother Stoner's this morning, arrived at brother Joseph F. Rohrer's about sunset; went with him to Welty's meeting-house, where we were met by a very considerable congregation, mostly young persons; they appeared very attentive, and orderly. We returned and lodged with our brother J. F. Rohrer and family.

Oct. 29. Brother and sister Rohrer accompanied us some 8 miles to Snowberger's meeting-house; here we met a considerable number of brethren and sisters, and among the rest brother H. Koontz and brother Jacob Price; after service we went to brother Snowberger's to dinner; after some interesting conversation we went in company with some of our brethren to Snow Hill, occupied by the Seventh Day Baptists; had a short interview with the Matron of the Institution, then went on our way to brother Price's, near the Antietam meeting-house. We went to meeting there; had a large evening meeting, mostly young persons, who were much interested, and we hope favorably impressed; this like yesterday evening, is very delightful: here we met brother Bock, brother Golley, and brother Good.

Oct. 30. Left early in company with brother Bock, for Antitam house, where we met quite a considerable number of brethren, and sisters. Brother Mowery from the adjoining district was present.—Brother Boyle to-day as on yesterday failed on account of bodily infirmity; we had a pleasant waiting before the Lord. Went to sister Kurtz's to dinner; after some social conversation, we, in company with brother Jacob Etter, some 10 miles to his house; brother Bock accompanied us; that evening we went to meeting at a School House near by; the house was crowded, mostly young persons. We had a pleasant meeting; here we met a ministering brother, whose name we have not recorded; he speaks the German Language; we returned and lodged with brother Etter.

Oct. 31. Brother and sister Etter accompanied us to Falling Spring meeting-house, where we met a considerable number of our dear brethren and sisters. Brother Boyle spoke to-day, his health seemed better to-day, and from this on to the close of our visit. Brother Stoner was becoming very hoarse; but by the use of some remedies by the way, he held out very well, suffering some inconveniences at times; to-day we had a pleasant waiting before the Lord. During the exercises it began to rain; went to brother Baker's to dinner; from here we were accompanied by brother Emanuel Foglesanger a distance of 9 miles to his nephew brother John Foglesanger; there was a meeting appointed for that evening at a school house near by, but the rain and storm prevented us and others from meeting; after spending the evening in social conversation, and devotion, we retired to rest.

November 1. This is Sunday morning; the storm having ceased somewhat, but the rain still continued to fall moderately; we went on our way to the meeting house near brother Jacob Foglesanger's—by this time it ceased raining; here we met quite a considerable and interesting congregation; here we were met by brother Eckerman, brother Newcomer and others; had a pleasant meeting; went to brother Newcomer's to dinner; this evening we repaired to the same place, and had quite a large congregation; many seemed favorably impressed during the exercises; we lodged at brother Jacob Foglesanger's who lives near the meeting house; quite a number of brethren stayed there over night.

November 2. In our parting exhortation we admonished our dear brethren, to be at peace among themselves; and we would admonish our dear brethren in the ministry to visit this arm of the church, as often as they can make it convenient to do so.

We went on our way in company with brother Emanuel Foglesanger and brother Railing to his house; his companion has been in feeble health; she was very glad to see us, and seemed to be very interesting in conversation. May the good Lord sanctify her afflictions. To-day through some misunderstanding there was no appointment, however, we went on our way, and stopped at the house of our dear brother Daniel Keller; where there was a proposition for meeting that evening at the new meeting house, near Mill Town, we went on, stopped at brother Gipple's, went over to our kind friend Conrad Johnson's, where we met his companion, our sister; after some pleasant conversation and supper, we went up to the meeting-house, where we met some of our dear brethren and sisters; had a pleasant waiting before the Lord. Returned and lodged with brother Gipple and family.

November 3. This morning, in company with brother Gipple we visited the Graveyard, adjoining the new meeting house, where there are many sleeping, and among others brother Gipple pointed out the graves of brother Christopher and sister Salome Johnson; brother David and sister Ecker, and others, with whom we in former days held sweet converse; the former two have no stones erected to their memory; while there we were strongly and solemnly reminded of the words of Cowper:

"Let me steal from the world,
And not a stone tell where I lie."

We returned to brother Gipple's house; from there brother Daniel Hollinger accompanied us to his house, and thence to his brother's, brother Jacob Hollinger's, where we found their aged mother confined to her room with rheumatism; she is the widow of Elder Daniel Hollinger; she appeared to be engaged in setting her "house in order;" here brother Brindle from near Church Town met us, and after some devotional exercises, and dinner being had, we went on our way accompanied by brother Brindle, and brother Jacob Hollinger. To-day like on yesterday we had no meeting, and it seemed best in one respect, as it gave us time to make the distance and some time to "mend our nets." We arrived at brother Brindle's in good time; after sharing some of the hospitalities of his family, we went about 1½ miles to the Brethren's meeting-house, where we met brother Beelman and others of our dear brethren. Brother Moses Miller, the resident Elder, being absent, on a committee meeting in Philadelphia; this evening we had a large and interesting congregation, we felt as though there might be a very considerable amount of good material there for building up the church; we shall never forget the attention and good order of the young people, and others on this evening; after service we returned to brother Brindle's and lodged at his house.

Report of a recent Debate in Indiana.

POPLAR GROVE, IND.,
March 3rd, 1869.

Brother H. R. Holsinger:—Last week, brother Robert H Miller held a debate in our meeting-house with J. M. Blount, a Campbellite. Several brethren had wished me to let them know when it would take place; and as I did not do so, I would like to inform them through the Companion. And that others may know what gave rise to it, I will briefly state that, during the last twelve months, several of the ablest Campbellite ministers have been preaching and using their influence, in our immediate neighborhood, against our practice of Trine Immersion, Feetwashing, the Lord's Supper, etc. In the month of November last, brother R. H. Miller visited us, and held several meetings among us, during which he was requested to speak on those points. In the same week that brother Miller left for home, B. M. Blount, who had been teaching a graded school at Kokomo, and one of those who had been here preaching against the practice of the Brethren, came back and left a challenge to meet our brother Miller here at our meeting-house, any time during the months of January or February, to discuss the difference between them. He had shaped his propositions in his challenge so that it gave him decided advantage, placing brother Miller in the affirmative all the time. I sent the challenge to brother M. for him and Blount to arrange the matter so that each would have an equal chance in the debate.

At our District Meeting, held Jan. 20th., brother M. informed me that Blount had agreed with him in part of the propositions, and that if they could agree on the rest, he would write to me immediately.—He did so. But for some cause, unknown to us, we had nothing reliable until Saturday evening Feb. 20th when we heard that Blount would be here on the 23rd to commence the debate. And sure enough on the 21st brother Miller came to our meeting through mud and cold, entirely unexpected, as he lives about 75 miles from here. Coming on the cars to Delphi, he expected some of us to meet him; but as we failed to get his letter, he was disappointed as well as we.

No arrangements for the debate were yet made; but as several of Blunt's brethren were present, we called them in council with us, and made arrangements for a meeting on Monday night, provided brother Miller and friend Blount could meet to make preliminary arrangements, so that the time for the commencement of the discussion could be announced before the close of our meeting. They met, and at 10 o'clock on Tuesday 23rd there was a large collection of people, and the discussion commenced, continuing 5 days. During the discussion, the house was as full of anxious hearers from different denominations, as perhaps ever was assembled on such occasions.

Two days were occupied in discussing the 1st proposition—TRINE IMMERSION; one day on each of the other propositions—FEETWASHING, THE LORD'S SUPPER, and SALUTATION OF THE HOLY KISS.

As regards the order of the debate, I will say, friend Blount conducted himself as genteelly, and defended his ground with as much ability and courtesy, as any one could do under the same circumstances, and having the same cause to defend; but with all his ability and zeal, I think it must have been apparent to every unprejudiced mind present, that brother Miller sustained his arguments on every proposition, meeting every opposite argument in a masterly and convincing manner, and yet in such a way, I think, that no one could take offence. Indeed, the whole discussion seemed to pass with pleasant feeling, (as far as we could judge.) And it is hoped that much good will result from the same. I am satisfied that our members are more confirmed in their faith that they were before the discussion. Many are glad it took place.

HIEL HAMILTON.

DIED.

At Ephrata, Pa., Feb. 22nd, our beloved sister ANNA MOHLER, widow of Henry Mohler, deceased, aged 81 years. She received a stroke of palsy several years ago; had been in a helpless condition ever since. She had been an exemplary member in the church for a number of years. She bore her afflictions and suffering with great patience and resignation, having committed her soul to that faithful Creator and Savior in whom she believed and who was her only hope and comfort until death. Funeral services by Elders C. Rupp and C. Bucher.

E. KONIGMACHER.

In the Conemaugh congregation, Cambria Co., Pa., March 5th, JOHN M., infant son of brother Solomon, and sister Harriet J. STRAYER; aged 8 months and fourteen days. Funeral services by the Brethren.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observation of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

I Would not Live Always.

I would not live always, altho' sweet is life.—
This scene of the world full of sorrow and strife.
I long to that country by yond life's broad sea,
Where clouds are no more, and the soul shall be free.

I would not live always, in folly and sin—
Have temptations without and vexations within;
Here, peace is no rest, in this wilderness drear:
I sigh for the land of the loved ones at home.

On Women Speaking.

In Volume 4 of the Companion, page 22, the question was asked, "Why is it that sisters are permitted to speak," &c. I have been presented with an answer to the above query, produced by brother Wm. Sadler, and another by Wm. Holsinger, neither of which is satisfactory to me; and as there has nothing appeared lately in the Companion upon the subject before us, I wish to call the attention of the brethren to the above subject by offering a few thoughts upon the same.

The text alluded to by the apostle (1st Cor. 14: 34, 35) is, according to my understanding, when we meet for public worship, i. e. preaching or teaching in a public congregation. It was not uncommon in the days of the apostles for men to interrupt the speaker by asking questions and giving answers while engaged in addressing the congregation; but the apostle did not allow women that privilege, but requested them to keep silent on such occasions; for, says he, "It is a shame for a woman to speak in the church," &c. 1st Tim. 2: 11, 12:—"Let your women learn in silence, with all subjection, but I suffer not a woman to teach," &c.

From what is written in 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35, and 1st Tim. 2: 11, 12, we infer that it was not allowed women to go to take a tour over the circuit to hold meetings and to preach. We will omit speaking of the inconveniences and hardships women were obliged to undergo in many instances, were it made their duty to go and preach; but will consider the inconsistency of sending them forth to preach, and when we meet for worship or to labor in church to prohibit them from speaking or reporting to the church. Should they at any time become involved in difficulty with a brother or sister, we all, no doubt, claim it to be her duty to go and see the offending member, according to the rule given in Matthew 18. First, privately. But if he will not hear her, take one or two with her; but if he will not hear them, what then? Why, according to the theory of some, she must drop it; for if she is not permitted to speak at church meetings, who will speak for her? The Word directs: Tell it unto the Church. My opinion is, that it is equally as much the duty of sisters to observe the rules of reconciliation, as brethren's. Much more might be said in view of the inconsistency of calling sisters to preach and prohibiting them to speak at Church meetings, but I will forbear, hoping that some able brother will take up the subject hereafter.

Brethren and sisters, my sentiment, further, is, that there should be no difference as regards sex when assembled at Church meetings. The apostle says:—"There is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." Gal. 3: 28. The time and place when there is neither male nor female, is, when assembled at Church meetings: this is the time and place where one has, and should have, as much liberty as another: "For where the spirit of the Lord is there is liberty." Sisters have the right to speak at social meetings, in my opinion; and perhaps at all other meetings, times, and places, except when we meet for the purpose of preaching the Word.

Still some may contend that women may preach because they were allowed to prophesy in the apostles' days. We admit prophesying, which has not been forbidden by the apostles, but rather encouraged. Says Paul, "Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts; but rather that you may prophesy."

In conclusion I wish to call the attention of the reader to 1 Cor. 13: 8—10: "Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophesies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part and we prophesy in part; but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." I claim that that which the apostle had in view, "That which is perfect is come," has long since appeared. Prophesies have failed, tongues have ceased, knowledge has vanished away; yet charity should remain; and doth remain in the Church of God.

Written in love for the truth.

WHILE ten men watch for chances, one man makes chances; while ten men wait for something to turn up, one turns up something; so while ten fail, one succeeds and is called a man of luck, the favorite of fortune. There is no luck like pluck, and fortune most favors those who are most indifferent to fortune.

We should give as we receive cheerfully, quickly and without hesitation, for there is no grace in a benefit that sticks to the fingers.

A letter to a Friend.

MY DEAR FRIEND: You say you "expect we both shall be admitted to seats in the Kingdom to come, although we might belong to different churches," as you call them. I am pleased with what you say so far as admittance into the everlasting Kingdom is concerned, and pray that we may realize in fact what you expect. But if we expect to meet together and be united in that heavenly, blissful Kingdom, why can we not come together nearer here on earth, in regard to the means which only can bring us together there?

It seems you entertain the idea that if a man is only sincere in what he believes, all will be well; or as you say, "it makes no difference to what church a man belongs, if he is only sincere, he will get to heaven." Here then is the point wherein we disagree. I hold that there is only one true Church. Christ has established his Church, and has given to it his laws and regulations; and no man, no matter what his name or station, has any right to change one particle of these laws and regulations. The laws of the United States are made by those who have the power and authority vested in them; and unless they are repealed by the same power they are binding upon every subject of this Republic. So in this matter. Christ alone had power and authority to make and give laws, for the government of his Church; and unless he repeals them or any part of them, they are all binding and we have no right to change or set any aside.

If we read the history of Baal, we find that his priests were as sincere as they could have been, for we read that they cut themselves with knives in their efforts to sustain their falling cause. But all that they could do, did not secure their desire. And in the case of Paul: he belonged to the Jewish Church. If we read his history, we can not for a moment doubt his sincerity. But you may say Paul was not converted at the time. Just so, and I believe that a man who is converted will not be left in darkness in regard to Christ's Church.

But again. You say, "Christ's Church is not the Church of the Brethren, nor any other denomination by itself; but that all who do what God wants them to do, these together make Christ's Church." Who are those "who do what God wants them to do?" Do you really mean your words to teach that we may obey Christ in some things and disobey him in other things at the same time? Do Christ's followers walk in one way or are there many ways? If there is but one way, is that way "broad," or "narrow?" Now it is plain that if we are obedient to our heavenly Father, then it is that we can call ourselves brethren and sisters indeed. Christ says, "He that doeth the will of my Father, he is my brother and sister." And as the Church of the Brethren teach obedience to the whole will of God, and try to practice the same now; and as this will make us members of Christ's Church, and will bring us all to where we desire to live hereafter, I cannot see any sound reason why we should disagree at all. The Brethren do not receive persons into their Society unless they show a willingness to observe all that the Savior commanded us to observe. Taking all things into consideration; knowing that we cannot be brethren and sisters without doing the will of God; and believing that the Brethren regulate and govern church affairs according to the Word of God; therefore, I cannot do otherwise than believe that the Church of the Brethren is Christ's Church.

Dont rob the minister.

Although we are very much opposed to a paid ministry, we are also opposed to the practice of robbing the minister of that which has been bestowed in charity by others. It is to often the case, we fear, that churches take advantage of ministers in this way.—Churches very frequently call upon ministers from a distance to preach for them, promising to pay traveling expenses, including railroad fare, &c. The railroad Company agrees that he shall travel over the road by paying one-half the usual fare. This compensates, or partially compensates, for his absence from his daily avocation at home. After the minister has filled the request of the church some brother or brethren approach him and say, well brother A. or B. as the case may be, we have learned that the railroad Company allows you to pass over the road for half fare and here is the needful, as though the Company meant to favor them instead of the minister. We think that if the Company favors the minister, the church should not exact that which it bestows in charity upon him.

Luke 15th Chapter.

As there is quite a difference in opinion among us in regard to the meaning of the three parables contained in the above named chapter, namely the parable of the hundred sheep—the parable of ten pieces of silver—and the parable of the prodigal son,—it is my object, now, to show, by God's word, that that which was lost in the foregoing parables is intended to represent the Jews who were put out of the synagogue, (the German says put in avoidance) and the elder, or that not lost, is intended to represent those Jews who had not gone astray but had remained faithful until the coming of Christ. 1st. To show that the Jews were his own people we refer to Jno. 1; 11, 12: "He came unto his own and his own received him not, but as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believed on his name."

2nd. To show that Christ sent his apostles to the Jews who had been put out of the synagogue,—or, in other words, to those who had fallen from the Jewish faith—and not to the heathen as is sometimes repre sented, we cite you to Matt. 10: 5, 6. "These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Also Matt. 9: 10, 11, 12, 13, "And it came to pass, as Jesus sat at meat in the house, behold, many publicans and sinners came and sat down with him and his disciples. And when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto his disciples, Why eateth your Master with publicans and sinners? But when Jesus heard that, he said unto them, They that be whole need not a physician but they that are sick. But go ye and learn what that meaneth; I will have mercy and not sacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." And also to Luke 19: 6, 7, 9, 10:—"And he made haste and came down, and received him joyfully, and when they saw it, they all murmured, saying, That he was going to be guest with a man that is a sinner. And Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come to this house, forasmuch as he also is a son of Abraham. For the Son of man is come to seek and save that which was lost." This shows that Zaccheus was an Israelite for he calls him a son of Abraham.

These quotations show also that Christ never avoided those Jews who had fallen from faith, but associated with them, as with the faithful ones. To prove that he avoided the heathen or Gentiles we refer to Matt. 15: 22—27: "And behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coast, and cried unto him, saying, Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David; my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil, but he answered her not a word & his disciples came and besought him, saying, send her away; for she crieth after us. But he answered and said, I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Then came she and worshipped him, saying, Lord, help me. But he answered and said, It is not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it to dogs. And she said, Truth Lord: yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table.

We think Cornelius was the first Gentile received into the church, in proof of which we refer to Acts 10—28. And even the apostles could not see into that mystery for they called Peter to account for receiving the gentiles. His reasons are seen in Acts 11: 15, 17, 18; and Ephesians 2: 12—17: "That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world. But now, in Christ Jesus, ye, who sometimes were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances: for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby; and came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh.

To show that the middle wall of partition was not broken down until after the crucifixion, we quote Matt. 28: 19: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations." &c.

The Sleepless Eye.

Many are familiar with the story of a distinguished prisoner, the duty of whose guard it was to watch him every instant through a little aperture in his dungeon door. The guard was often changed, but there forever was that glittering eye. When he slept or when he woke, it was always upon him. And after a time, he tells us, it became the most intolerable element of his imprisonment. It was no friendly eye, and that made the burden greater still. Many prisoners have escaped from bondage, even when massive walls and iron bars enclosed them. Many more have beguiled the weary hours in planning or speculating on the possibility of their doing the same. But here such a diversion of the thoughts was quite shut out. Not a moment could he escape the gaze of that sleepless eye. The slightest suspicious movement would be sufficient ground for causing the rigors of his confinement to be increased. Oh, to escape for one half hour from the presence of that watching eye! But months were lengthened into years, and still the watch went on.

But there was another eye, just as sleepless, continually on the prisoner, of which no doubt he thought but seldom. It saw far more than the soldier guard. It saw the real man, the heart life, hour by hour.—The guard could only see the outer dress. The guard and those whose power he represented, could do but little. They had power only to kill the body, but that All-seeing One had "power to cast both soul and body into hell."

We cannot think too often of this sleepless eye which never, for an instant, is withdrawn from us. "Thou compassest my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways." It is a fearful thought to the wicked, but one of the most precious to those who love God. "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry." "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep."

But, oh, this eye "is strict to mark iniquity." We may cover our sins from our fellow men, but they can not be hid from God. Yet, how precious the thought that we may come to the crimson fountain and wash them all away, so that we can be pleasing even to his searching eye. He will behold us without spot or blemish, because he looks upon us through his Son.—Hasten to the fountain, while yet there is an opportunity given. How canst thou refuse.

"To wash and be cleansed in his pardoning blood?"

A confirmed Christian is one that taketh self-denial for the one leaf of his religion.

"If God be for us who can be against us?" Romans 8: 13.

In reading the epistles of the New Testament in sincerity, we behold a zeal manifested by the followers of the Lord Jesus, which should be imitated by every one who names his name. When we unite ourselves to the church, we become responsible to the church and to God for our zeal. I see no middle position to hold and be on the safe side. It is a positive declaration of our Lord, that we "cannot serve two masters."—Saith he to the church of the Laodiceans: "I would thou wert cold or hot—because thou art neither, I will spew thee out of my mouth." It will avail me nothing in the coming day of being merely a member of the church, if I do not labor to tear asunder every tie that binds to earth, and cast my influence alone to the church and to God. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice." In being received into the body, we promised to renounce Satan with all his pernicious ways; but in neglect of doing this, Paul was caused several times in writing to his brethren to use the little word "if." And around "if" hangs momentous things. If we have obeyed God, we shall be saved — If not, be lost. Tell me not that man is destined to heaven or hell, without the privilege of acting for himself. There never was or will be a man or woman on the earth but what will undergo a "righteous judgment." Saith inspired Paul to a heathen people: "He hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained." Acts 17: 31. Again: "Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?" Gen. 18: 25.—Let us learn the true definition of the word righteous according to scripture, and then we will not be very apt to charge God with unrighteousness. We are sometimes charged as being a selfish people, as supposing that nobody is going to be saved but ourselves.—I suppose they arrive at this conclusion from our not joining with them in the non-essential cry;—and our binding them close to the word of God. We find upon record the Savior says:—"And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man." In Noah's days they may have mocked and derided him thus: "Thou fool, dost thou suppose that thou and thy house art the only ones that are going to be saved of all the immense multitudes that are upon the earth? Nor do I think you need be so particular in building your ark. There are many braces you might have left out and saved you a great deal of pinning and mortising. Pitch on one side is enough," &c. But nay, we find Noah "did according to all that God commanded him." Gen 6: 22. But truly methinks at last when the fountains of the great deep were broken up and the rain began to descend for forty days and forty nights, they saw Noah's ark gliding safely along on the surface of the water. And when all hopes of their deliverance were cut off, with anguish of soul they may cry out, Surely thou and thy house are the ones that will be saved from this great deluge. And surely so it is upon record that after a voyage upon the surface of the water of an hundred and fifty days, he landed safely and soundly and all that were with him, upon the mountain of Ararat. So then, dear friends, be careful how you deal with what God has commanded. The true followers of the Lord Jesus are building a structure which will we tried by fire. And we want something that will stand the test. As Noah did according to all that God commanded him, so must we. Saith Jesus: "He that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them." Not only hearing his words, but doing. He that hears his words and puts them to practice, he compares to a man who builds a house upon a foundation which is reliable, so that the house will stand amid storms and floods. But he that hears and doeth not, is like a house with poor foundation, which falls and great the fall of it. Matt. 7: 25, 26, 27.

So then, brethren and sisters, "let us not grow weary in well doing," (if we are mocked) in building our ark, in being so particular in using every command of God found in the New Testament. For the Captain of our salvation, who has gone before, has told us that we shall need all of these. For says he: "After ye have only all that was commanded you to do, ye shall then call yourselves unprofitable servants: ye have done done that which was your duty to do." By obeying him to the very word, we have all the promises of God on our side. And then "if God be for us who can be against us?" "Heaven and earth shall pass away but my words shall not pass away." "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night: in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat: the earth also and the works that are therein, shall be burnt up; seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness." 2 Peter 3: 10, 11. So then, dear brethren and sisters, when all these things are coming to pass, we want to be safely housed in the ark of salvation; 'built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone;" pitched within and without with the favor of God. And then we can ride safely through the fire of the last day, have part in the first resurrection, and land safely in the New Jerusalem.—Thank God: „If God be for us who can be against us?"

"Preach the Gospel to every Creature."

Here is an obligation that I fear we do not properly comprehend. The question might present itself to the mind: Upon whom does it devolve? This we think is an important query, and we will try to answer it. We have concluded for some years that the duty of preaching the Gospel devolves wholly upon the Church, and hat it complies with this obligation: first, through its ublic ministry; and secondly, through its entire mem ership. The obligation appears to be of vital impor ance, when we consider the lost condition of the world nd that the Gospel is the means of its salvation. No onder that the Savior would have it disseminated hroughout the entire world of mankind. This com mand, it is true, was given to public ministers, but without the Church they would not exist; so the Church s responsible for the number, and, to some extent the qualifications of the Christian ministers. It is through the Church that we can ask the Lord to send more la orers into the field; and after sending them into the field it is its duty to hold up their hands while they are trying to fulfil the great command. How will hey uphold their hands? In a number of ways: if hey are in limited circumstances, bestow upon them he things essential to life: yes, assist them to support heir families, and by all means pay their traveling ex enses; and if they should receive some remuneration or the time they spend, there would be no wrong in it. The minister has as much right to his time as the members have to theirs. Consequently, if the church requires his time to fill its mission in the world, where the impropriety in giving him an equivalent for the time the church takes from him. We certainly think there would not be as much harm in spending money in this way as there is in investing it in many other ways about which we are not over scrupulous. I know, when we talk about spending money in this way, some think it looks like a salaried ministry. We are not advocating any thing of the kind, but we do believe when a minister is called upon to spend his time in performing the functions of his office, that the church is under obligations to give him something as an equiva ent. He has as good a right to accumulate the essen ials of life as others; and if he is engaged in impart ing spiritual things, it is no great wrong to give him arnal things.

For instance, if an obligation be binding upon twelve men equally, and they appoint one of their number to do this work, would it not be right for the eleven to keep his circumstances equal to theirs in proportion to heir wealth at the time of engaging in the enterprise? t certainly would be wrong for them to do otherwise. In the Church the obligation is the same; then if one is appointed to do the work, keep him up with the others, and by this means we keep him encouraged in his great work. We fear we do not manifest that zeal for the spread of the Gospel that we should. How many within a few miles of old churches have never heard the brethren preach! We too often wait for them to request us to come to them and preach. Is this fulfilling the command? We think not. The Savior did not say we should preach the Gospel to every creature who invites us to do so, but it is our duty to go to them, and if possible show them their condition by holding before them the gospel mirror.—And here, my brethren, let me say a word to the private members. Look out those waste places, and when you find a locality where you think good might be done, don't rest until you have some brother to go there and enlighten their minds. If you have some worthy minister in view that you think might do good there, send him by all means. If he is a poor man, and you have an abundance of the things of this world, do not fear to send him by giving freely to him, so that he can go without fear of doing his family injustice. How many poor ministers have failed to labor successfully by feeling that they were doing wrong to their wives and children, by being away from home and neglecting their usual avocations. This ought not to be.

Considering the wealth of the brotherhood, every brother should feel that in proportion to his ability the duty of sending out the light and the truth devolves upon him. If this were the case, much more would be done in this way than there is at present. Oh think, how many poor sinners might be saved, if we would only do our duty toward them. We should not depend wholly upon public preaching, but talk to them privately, plead with them to break off from their sins and come to Christ. This the private member can do as well as the minister. We should at least manifest as much zeal for the spiritual welfare of every friend as we do for their temporal or secular.

A word to our western brethren. We often read your calls for preaching, and how rejoicing it would be to many a poor minister to respond! We think, where the brethren are able it would be well for them to help laboring brethren to homes. Land is often cheap, and by loaning a sufficient amount of money to laborers for this purpose, giving ample time for its return, (& at the same time it should be without interest,) you might soon enjoy the privilege of having regular preaching, of seeing flourishing churches built up in the great west, and have the happiness to know that you have been instrumental in doing much towards preaching the the gospel to every creature. I must close.—My article is already too long, but the absorbing interest that I feel in the good news of possible salvation throughout the country has prompted me to write. I hope I offend none.

Yours in love.

CONCEIT.—There is one thing worse than Ignorance and that is conceit. Of all intractable fools, an overwise man is the worst. You may cause idiots to philosophize; you may coax donkeys to forego thistle; but dont think of ever driving common sense into the head of a conceited person.

THE MIND.—The mind has a certain vegetative power, which cannot be wholly idle. If it is not laid out and cultivated into a beautiful garden, it will of itself shoot up in weeds or flowers of a wild growth.

Bookless Houses.

We form judgments of men from little things about their houses, of which the owner perhaps never thinks. Flowers about a rich man's house may signify only that he has a good gardener, or that he has refined neighbors, and does what he sees them do. But men are not accustomed to buy books unless they want them. If, on visiting the dwelling of a man of slender means, we find that he contents himself with cheap carpets, and very plain furniture, in order that he may purchase books, he rises at once in our esteem. Books are not made for furniture, but there is nothing else that so beautifully furnishes a house. The plainest row of books is more significant of refinement than the most elaborately carved sideboard.

Give us a house furnished with books rather than with furniture. Both, if you can; but books at any rate! To spend several days in a friend's house, and hunger for something to read, while you are treading on costly carpet, and sitting upon luxurious chairs, and sleeping upon down, is as if one were bribing your body for the sake of cheating your mind.

Books are the windows through which the soul looks out. A house without them is like a room without windows. No man has a right to bring up his children without surrounding them with books, if he has the means to buy them. It is a wrong to his family. Children learn to read by being in the presence of books. The love of knowledge comes with reading, and grows upon it. And the love of knowledge in a young mind is almost a warrant against the inferior excitement of passions and vices.

Let us pity those poor rich men who live barrenly in great bookless houses. Let us congratulate the poor that, in our day, books are so cheap that a man may every year add a hundred volumes to his library for the price of what his tobacco and beer would cost him. Among the earliest ambitions to be excited in clerks, workman, journeyman—and, indeed, among all that are struggling in the race of life—is that of owning, and constantly adding to a library of good books. A little library, growing larger every year, is an honorable part of a young man's history.

It is a man's duty to have books. A library is not a luxury, but one of the necessaries of life.—Episcopalian.

Our Lost Youth.—How often, amid the turmoil of busy life, come like the balmy breath from some fairy land, the enchanting visions of our youthful days; the days when our hearts knew nothing of the wounds of slighted friendship or betrayed trust and when all earth seemed perfection, unmarred by a blemish. Truly, childhood is the Eden of life the sunny verdurous Paradise among lovely bowers blowing but the most subtle and enrapturing breezes; full of bright flowers, blissful hopes, and pure desires, and which no really matured life can quell.

Say not O sordid soul, there is no joy in dreaming, no pleasure in recalling the past to view, while treading the tortuous windings of the world's ways. The days gone bye—the days when buoyant youth crowned our brows and laughed in our radiant eyes, and the earth seemed free from sin—are these nothing? Maturity may bring position, wider experience and thorough knowledge; all the rich inheritance of age and wisdom, cannot compare with the innocent carefree hours, so fleet-winged and sunny, of the early days gone by. Bright of perpetual youth! you will never be donned till the pearly gates are entered in, and changing mortality gives way to eternal life.

Advantages of Society.—What makes those men, who associate habitually with women, superior to others? What makes that women, who is accustomed to, and at ease in the company of men, superior to her sex in general? Solely because she is in the habit of a free, graceful and continuous conversation with the other sex. Women in this way lose their frivolity, their faculties awaken, their delicacies and peculiarities unfold all their beauty and captivation, in the spirit of ittellectual rivalry. And the men lose their pedantic, rude, declamatory, or sullen manner. The coin of the understanding and the heart are exchanged continually. Their asperities are rubbed off; their better materials polished and brightened; and their richness, like fine gold, is wrought into finer workmanship by the fingers of women, that it ever could be by those of men. The iron and steel of our character are laid aside, like the hardness of a warrior in the time of peace and security.

———:o:———

In the teachings of the past, how much more vividly stand out our errors, our long and short sightedness. The duties neglected, the vain and foolish utterance. Few people who have arrived at the standpoint of middle life, but think that if there lives could be lived over they would do differently. But experience comes only with years. And we can apply our hearts unto the wisdom that experience brings, doing daily the very best we know how; and working while the day lasts, enjoying as much as possible all there is good in this life, and bear with christian fortitude and strength the ills we cannot avoid.

———:o:———

We are ruined, not by what we really want, but by what we think we do; therefore, never go abroad in search of your wants, they will come home in search of you; for he that buys what he does not want, will soon want what he cannot buy.

Never be weary in well doing.

1st Peter 4: 4.

"Wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you." 1st Peter 4: 14.

By reading from the beginning of the chapter, we understand more clearly what the apostle wishes to convey. He says: "For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts," &c. Like the apostle Peter, when we look back and see the life we then lived, it is astonishing and reproachful to ourselves to know that the past time of our life has been spent in lasciviousness and rebellion against our Father and only Preserver. But now by a comparison, we who were Gentiles have ceased to live in the life we then lived, and now live a new life by being a new creature, and they who still pursue the mode we did, think it strange that we run not with them to excess in riot, &c., and wonder with astonishment that we follow not them in the pleasures and enjoyments of life which is transitory. They express themselves thus: "You are too particular"—"this and that is not wrong,"—"you may live long yet, because you are young and in the vigor of youth." But dear reader, take warning by researching God's counsel, the richest boon that the Lord ever gave to man, which may teach differently from what you suspect or think, and bring your various thoughts into subjection to the law of God. For we must all regulate ourselves whether imaginations or thoughts or life, by the deliberation of God. May God be our preserver now and for ever.

Ought Christians to Wash Feet?

A correspondent of the N. W. Christian Proclamation, (a Campbelite paper we suppose) over the signature of J. Jones, Decatur, Michigan, endeavors to persuade us that feet-washing is unnecessary. He says:

"The question has often been asked:—What do you think of washing the feet, as an ordinance of the Church of Christ? This request is generally made by persons who are conscientiously disposed to obey every ordinance of the house of the Lord."

We agree with Mr. Jones that those persons who are really conscientiously disposed to obey in the all things commanded in the gospel cannot see how to get around the command of feet-washing; and not until these honest inquirers shall, by departing from the faith, have their consciences seared with a hot iron, will they cease to make the same inquiry. It is too plain a matter to escape the notice of any honest inquirer after truth.—And we pity the condition of that man whose conscience is so callous as to suffer him to attempt to lead astray any of those who are seeking the way of eternal life. To such a class of persons Jesus said: "Woe to you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! because ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; for ye go not in, nor suffer those who are entering to go in." But we think the honest inquirer will soon lose confidence in such spiritual advisers as Mr. Jones. We read that "he whom God sent forth speaks the words of God." Jesus says we ought to wash one another's feet; Jones says not. Conclusion: Jesus has not "sent him forth."

He then proceeds to tell his readers that Palestine was in a warm climate; that the people had no shoes, and that therefore their feet were dirty; that it was the custom to bring water to wash the feet of guests; that the servant would wash the feet, but sometimes the master of the house would attend to it; that the Patriarchs and even Infidels practiced feet-washing; that the Jews bathed before eating the Passover; all of which he wants his readers to bear in mind. Some of the above assertions are true, others may be, but a few are extremely doubtful; such, for instance, as the master of the house washing the feet of his guests.

He then proceeds to notice the circumstance of Jesus washing the feet of his disciples, and tells a pretty correct story until he comes to Jesus' answer to Peter, when he makes him say:

"That his hands and his head had been washed, and it was only necessary to wash his feet which were not clean."

He says nothing about the cleanness to which Jesus refers when he tells them that they were not all clean. We quote again:

"Here we see Jesus condescends to an act of the deepest humiliation, and his servants should never be too exalted to condescend to any humiliating act for the benefit of their fellow sufferers."

Pretty well said, and if Mr. Jones would live out such teaching he would wash the feet of his brethren, and not exalt himself above his master.

"The language of Jesus to his apostles which disturbs the minds and consciences of some good brethren and sisters is that found in the 14th verse, viz: "If I then your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet."

It does not disturb the mind of our good brethren and sisters for they do just what Jesus say they ought to do: they wash one another's feet; knowin

"these things" they do them, and hence they are happy, just as Jesus says they should be.—Jones' good brethren and sisters want "to do," but he promises them happiness without it.—Hence those who are "for Christ" will continue to inquire, while those who are for Jones will climb up some other way.

"They ask us if that injunction is equally binding upon us as fol'owers of Christ? Is it not instituted as a church ordinance? I answer, to be under, and governed by the same circumstances as the disciples were, it would be binding."

The above questions are still in exact accordance with the mind of the honest inquirer. He cannot see why the injunction should be binding upon the apostles and not upon him. He thinks it must be a church ordinance, because the Master himself instituted it; because he promised happiness upon its observance; because he gave it in connection with the institution of the other ordinances of the house of the Lord. And why all this should be done and have nothing more in it than to wash away the filth of the feet is an idea that no honest mind can entertain any longer than it will require him to call up the reply: "Get thee hence, satan."

But what will the "good brethren and sisters" learn from the answer of their would be teacher? "To be under, and governed by the same circumstances as the disciples were, it would be binding." Let us see under what circumstances they were at the time they were commanded to wash feet. Jesus had sent Peter and John to prepare the passover. In the evening he came with the apostles. When the supper was served he rose and washed the feet of his disciples. When he had washed their feet he sat down again to the table, and asked them whether they knew what he had done to them. He had told Peter just a little before that he did not know then but he was to know afterward. He now tells them that they called him Teacher and Master and that he was such; and that if he, the Master and Teacher had washed their feet, they also ought to wash one another's feet; and that he had given them an example that as he did to them they also should do, for the servant is not greater than his lord. Wonder if brother Peter did not now begin to see what Jesus was doing? This is the place where the minds of all "good brethren and sisters become disturbed" if they have known these things but have not done them. O that all would be humble enough to take the advice of the mother of Jesus: "Whatever he says to you, do it"!

Thus when "persons who are conscientiously disposed to obey every ordinance of the house of the Lord," come together to observe the other ordinances, and when the supper is served, they think that before they eat they ought to wash one another's feet, as the Master said they ought to do. They think they are then under the same circumstances; they have been washed,—by the washing of regeneration—but they have been walking upon the way through the wilderness of sin, and feel that they "have need to wash the feet," that they may be "wholly clean." And no amount of sophistry can ever persuade such persons that they ought not to do so.

Mr. Jones then proceeds to show that "the condition governing the people of those days, and that which governs us at present are not analogous," which amounts to nothing more nor less than that they wore sandals, while we wear shoes, and that therefore their feet were unclean while ours are clean.—He then says:

"Now I am forced to the conclusion, that as Jesus never did do anything unnecessarily, he never would have washed the disciple's feet if they had not been dirty, caused by the walking from the bathing to the Passover."

We wonder if the good brethren and sisters will not be grieved to hear one who professes to love Jesus, speak so disrespectfully of their Master. Jesus washed the feet because they were "dirty"—the most vulgar and contemptuous term that he could find, and he uses it at every opportunity. Will they not have occasion to fear that he is one of those who would eat bread with Jesus and lift up his heel against him? What could possibly induce any one to use such expressions, but contempt for the act? We can see no other motive. The Bible term would be unclean.

Conscientious persons cannot see why it was that Peter did not know what the Savior was doing if he meant nothing else than to cleanse their feet; nor why Peter could have no part with him unless Jesus would cleanse his feet. If there was nothing else required, could not Peter have washed his own feet? The honest inquirer thinks that if Jesus had meant we should wash one another's feet when they are unclean, he would have said so; but because he said we should wash one another's feet in order to follow example, he designed some-ng more.

Our author then proceeds to presents just such objec

says it was an ancient rite for washing and cleansing, but the religion of Jesus does not consist in ceremonies; it is all in the heart. He speaks in the same way in regard to the Lord's Supper, and the Communion. He says they ate because they were hungry, and indeed he is every wh it as consistent as the writer whom we are answering.

He now makes his masterstroke and we make our last quotation:

"Now, in every positive ordinance or command of the New Covenant, there is a specific design, or object to be effected. The design of Belief or Faith is to purify or change the heart; that of Repentance is to purify or change the life; that of Baptism or Immersion is to change the state or relation; that of the Lord's Supper is commemorative of the broken body and shed blood of the Lord. But what is the design of Feet Washing? It may be answered it is designed to make us humble; but I remark, if this was the case humble we would not be likely to attend to it."

Whether it is an ordinance or whether it is not, he expects to quiet the consciences of his good brethren and sisters by persuading them that there is no design in it and hence it is not necessary to be observed by them. Poor Jones, he is in a worse condition than Peter ever was! Peter didn't know what the Master meant, but he still submitted to his directions until he would know. He has not yet become "very humble," and unless he comes down very much, it is not likely that he will attend to feet-washing. If he would become a little more humble, perhaps he would become more "good and conscientious," and hence would be found among "those who are disposed to obey every ordinance of the house of the Lord."

ITS DESIGN.

We will now endeavor to show that this ordinance is not without its spiritual representations. In the first place its observance is one of the evidences that we know the Lord. "In this we know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that says I know him and keeps not his commandments is a liar and the truth is not in him. But whoever keeps his word, of a truth in him the love of God is perfected. In this we know that we are in him. He that says he abides in him ought, as he walked, himself also so to walk." 1 John 2, 3—6. "In this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments." For this is the love of God that we keep his commandments." Feet-washing is one of the commandments of Jesus, hence it is one of the means by which we obtain our assurance that we are begotten of him.

2nd. It represents the highest degree of purity—the perfection of cleanness. It has its type within the camp of the congregation, between the tabernacle and the altar. The last act of the priest before he entered the holy place, was to wash his hands and his feet, and that upon penalty of death.

"Thou shalt also make a laver of brass and his foot also of brass, to wash withal: and thou shalt put it between the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar, and thou shalt put water therein. For Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands and feet thereat: when they go in o the tabernacle of the congregation, they shall wash with water that they di not: o when they co ne near to the altar to minister, to burn offering made by fire unto the Lord: so they shall wash their hands and their feet that they die not." Ex. 30: 18—21.

Such is the type of which Feet-washing is the anti-type. How appropriate! In the New covenant we are "priests to God." We have "had our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience," and "our body washed with pure water." But in the service of the tabernacle our feet may have become unclean. Hence before we tread upon "holy ground," or approach the altar, our anti-type —true to its type as given by the Lord by our Prophet like unto Moses—demands of us to wash one another's feet, and "purify our souls in obeying the truth ("thy word is truth") through the spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren." We may then "with boldness enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus," and lay hold of those sacred emblems which represent his flesh and blood.

These are some of the designs of feet-washing, and these are some of the reasons why persons who are conscientiously disposed to obey every ordinance of the house of the Lord believe that CHRISTIANS OUGHT TO WASHFEET.

Partius and Schisms.

In our last we gave a report of the organization of a party composed of persons who had been, (as we understand) expelled, "cut off," from the Church. This week we have to speak of a schism in the body. By a schism we mean a renunciation of allegiance to the government of the Church. It is presented to us in the form of a petition to be presented to the next Annual Meeting, which petition if granted, it shall be well; "but in case it shall refuse to do so, it is very probable that many churches will not be represented at our next Annual Conference, and hence the result will be a re-organization of our Conference Meetings by said churches in accordance with this petition." From the above quotation it will be plainly seen that the case under consideration comes within the definition of the term we use. If the Council will be governed by their petition, well; but if not, then of course the inference is not well, and "a re-organization." The paper is printed and purports to be signed by many brethren, and to be the work of about 20 brethren, mostly elders, who met on the 13th of last November, just one week before the meeting referred to in our last. Now for the Petition. Wherever we use quotation marks (" ") we use the exact language of the document before us.

The petitioners want the Annual meeting "conducted more in simplicity and after the manner of our first brethren." This it is proposed to do by selecting "six or eight of the old and established brethren" present, who are to withdraw and receive the queries and present them before the meeting. They are not to be selected like our congressmen a certain number from each state, but from either or all of the states, and their names are not to appear on the Minutes as "Standing Committee."—They are to keep order, but no one is to "be selected as (human) Morderator." They want to "do away with those worldly-wise regulations, such as selecting a certain portion of the Standing Committee from each state, appointing a moderator," and to fix their names upon the minutes. They want the Minutes read to all at the close of the meeting, and then to "be witnessed by several of the old Elders, but avoid d those who had been receive the report of t es."

2nd. They wan ence to desist fron committies to th churches where diffi ist," and advise that who "need assistance the "Elders &c.," in districts, as these w better knowledge of t

3rd. Our contemp the Visitor and ours be counseled and ac to publish anything putes the practice o cepts and ordinanc Gospel as handed d from Christ and th through and by the of the Church." Th this last petition son ance of impartiality, who are now circula missiles of dissention, likely their authors, to be "cautioned head." This is the substance of the pet we submit to the can whether Self Love is ted. What is the pl proposed Reformation any point of doctrine Not any. But that i accordance with all If ever there will be al division of the Chu not be upon any poi trine, but upon some tradition, or theory we could all adopt t ful, and we believe ment expressed by in the words: "IN UNITY; IN DOUBTS, F ALL, HOWEVER, LOV we would not have bickerings about how r used to do ;" how "we have t in Ohio ;" "what was the old rder," and a host of other ques- ions not any more essential.— The Church of God is the Church as virtually and as com- pletely to-day as when it was irst founded, and "the gates of ell shall not prevail against it." It has the same power to tran- act any business entrusted to t by its Divine Head.

But we are to be proscribed. We are not to be allowed to dispute the practice of the "fore- fathers of the Church." Well, we will see ; when we shall be compelled to do so it will be time enough to keep quiet, but while we have liberty we can- not but speak the things that we believe. Efforts have been made heretofore in this direc- tion without success, and we be- lieve the Church will grant us all the liberty that the defense of Truth demands, and more we do not want. We shall go up to the Annual Meeting, (God willing,) with a mind fully re- signed that the Brethren will do right. We believe they will not cut off our liberty. But if they think we have abused our privileges, they will say so, and it shall be well ; but if we knew not, and "did things worthy of stripes," we hope we "shall be beaten with few," and so we shall rest the matter for the present.

Feet Washing.

Next week we expect to pub- lish another reply to a Camp- bellite preacher, on the above subject, by brother J. S. Flory. We will print an extra edition of this and the next No., and will send the two together for 5 cents. Persons who desire to disseminate the truth, can or- der them for distribution.

Errors.

More than our ussual num- ber of errors occurred in last week's paper. The most seri- ous are found in brother Har- ley's article, a few of which de- serve notice.

Page 166, 2nd column, 12th line from top, read: good works," they do not preach, &c., instead of "good works." They do not preach," &c., using a comma in- stead of a period.

Next column, 14th line from top, read: accursed, instead of "assured."

Death of brother C. L. Holsinger.

This brother whom we visited on the 20th ultimo, and whose affliction we noticed in No. 9, has gone to his reward, as will be seen in our obit- uary columns. Death, that cruel tyrant, foe to all man's present joy, has entered the house, the family of our dear brother and cut him down, in the midst of life. The pleadings of the mother, the piteous cries of the children, all avail nothing ; the monster will have his victim. But oh ! there's a time coming, "when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, when death himself shall be shallowed up in vic- tory, even the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Then we can triumphantly say: where now "O death, is thy sting ? Where O, death, is thy victory." Thank God ; death will not always reign. Let the bereaved family take courage from this truth. Let the widowed mother, and her little flock drink consolation from the promise of the Word: "A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation."

GRAMMAR.—A Practical Grammar of the English Language, for the use of schools of every grade. By Thos. W. Harvey. Wilson Hinkle & Co., Publishers Cincinnati, Ohio.

It is elegantly printed, and well bound ; brief and accurate in its definitions, and full and simple in its analysis ; and just the book to lead on the young mind in the pursuit of the knowledge of thinking right, and com- municating what you think, which we call Grammar.

Jenkin's Vest Pocket Lexicon.

This little book is meeting with much fa- vor among our patrons. It defines over 22.000 words. It gives only the primitive words, and omits, all familiar words which every body knows, such as eat, walk, break, sick, &c., &c., and gives such words as the common reader is not expected to know, and it is seldom we refer to it for a word of the kind and do not find it. A person who has this book and a common school dictionary, with a fair degree of the exercise of com- mon sense, as to derivitive words, need not be left in the dark upon the meaning of any word used in our paper. We carry one in our vest pocket always. Price 75cts. Address H. R. Holsinger, Tyrone, Pa.

PETER'S MUSICAL MONTHLY.—March num- ber of Peter's Musical Monthly is at hand, and contains some twenty-four pages of new music. One of them is set to that beautiful hymn :

"Though troubles assail and dangers affright; Though friends may all fail, and foes all unite ; Yet one thing secures us, whatever betide ; The Scriptures assure us—the Lord will pro- vide."

Brother Boyle and Brother Stoner's Report.

No. II.

November 4. Meeting again at the meeting-house near Church Town, met a very considerable number of persons, principally brethren and sisters. We had quite a pleasant meeting; there were many softening impressions made during the exercises. May the good Lord bless our dear brethren who labor here; may he crown their efforts with heavenly blessings. After service we accompanied brother Peter Brindle home to his house. Thence to brother Beelman's where we met with his companion, the dear sister who had been so suddenly prostrated while from home among the Brethren in the eastern counties of Pa. Brother Beelman accompanied us this evening to Wolkermood's meeting-house, where we met with our brother Joseph Myers and brother Adam Hollinger; we had quite an attentive congregation, and we hope some at least were favorably impressed; we accompanied brother Smith to his house, where we lodged.

November 5. Returned to the same place where we had meeting last night; had a pleasant waiting before the Lord. The meeting was principally brethren and sisters.—Thence to brother Hollinger's near the Bermudian meeting-house, where there was a large turn out this evening; here brother Adam Brown met us; we had an interesting meeting; we were, perhaps not so well understood by all present, inasmuch as we spoke in the English language, and the community here are principally German. We returned to brother Hollinger's.

November 6. Accompanied by brother Adam Brown, to Mummerts meeting-house, where we met quite a congregation. Brother Andrew Miller met us; had a pleasant meeting, and we hope a refreshing season. Went to brother Daniel Baker's to dinner; on our way, stopped with our friend William Stoner, who kindly accompanied us to the Brethren's meeting-house near Hampton. We have been informed that he has since become obedient to the faith; may the good Lord help him and his companion to go on their way rejoicing. This evening we had a very attentive congregation, the Master of solemn assemblies being present. Brother Daniel Longanecker met us here; after service we went to brother Brugh's.

November 7. Accompanied brother D. Longanecker to his house: thence to brother John Pfoutz Sen., on Marsh Creek; we found him and his companion in feeble health, but strong in the spirit; meeting in a school house near by; the room was crowded, nearly all young persons; their conduct and order was commendable.

November 8. This is Sunday morning; we repaired to the meeting-house at Marsh Creek where we often met in years gone by; we had a tolerably large congregation, and a pleasant waiting before the Lord. Brother Pfoutz and companion were with us; brother Bosserman, brother Bushman, and brother Sherfy were present, and our dear brother Isaac Price greeted us with his presence. Brother Price preached for us, and we felt glad indeed, as we were getting to be exhausted, having attended 18 meetings, since we left home, beside the traveling and labors of the way; after the exercises we went to brother John Pfoutz Jr's, and thence to the house of brother John D. Trostle, where we met his father, and his companion.

November 9. This morning we turned our faces toward our home, and about eleven o'clock, we arrived at brother Solomon Stoner's; when we partook of some refreshment, and then went on our way to New Windsor, where we found all well, and glad to see us once more, after an absence of thirteen days, and for which we felt thankful to God our Heavenly Father, who had permitted us to go, and to return in safety. And we feel to cherish a greatful remembrance of the many kind favors we received at the hands of our dear brethren and sisters, among whom we sojourned during our absence. May the good Lord bless them, and reward them for the same. And to our ministering brethren, with whom we met, and with whom we labored, and who promised us a visit in return, we would say, do not forget us, try and come over to Macedonia and help us, when ever you can do so.

Dear Companion:—In response to your request, I would say, that brethren traveling to the Yearly Meeting from Harrisburg as well as all the northern and north-western portions of the country, will find it best to go by way of Baltimore and Washington city; then taking the Orange and Alexandria rail road to Lynchburg, the Virginia and Tennessee rail road to Salem, where there will be arrangements made for their conveyance to the place of meeting, entertainment &c. Facilities will be secured for all ministers and delegates, and perhaps for all that shall travel on the Va. rail roads. The special regulations of these roads extend only to officials. But the president of the Va. and Tenn. rail road gives us encouragement to hope for more extensive privileges. The matter is before the Board, and as soon as the decision is known to us, all necessary information will be given through the Companion and the Visitor.—The brethren of the lower valley of Va. according to our understanding will make the best arrangements they can with the Orange and Alexandria rail-road, and inform the brethren. Those traveling by private conveyances from Bedford and Somerset counties, Pa., by way of Cumberland, will pass through Hampshire and Hardy counties, where they will find several organized churches, visiting the brethren on Lost River, thence to Brock's gap and to Cline's meeting-house in Rockingham Co., thence by Harrisonburg, Staunton in Augusta county, Lexington in Rockbridge, Buchanan in Botetourt, the valley meeting-house near Amsterdam, where there will be meetings, as well as in the surrounding neighborhoods for several days previous to the commencement of the Yearly Meeting, and will afford an excellent opportunity for rest from the fatigues of the journey.

More particular information will be given when the arrangements are more nearly perfected and the time for starting nearer at hand. And in the meantime, any information that may be desired will be cheerfully given by us.

B. F. and J. C. MOMAW.
Secretaries

Bonsacks, Va. Mar. 19th '69.

P. S. Brethren traveling by rail-road and arriving before the time of meeting, will find a welcome reception and an opportunity for improving their time by stopping at this point, where we contemplate holding a series of meetings at that time.

Report of visit to Ohio.

I left home on the 17th of Feb. Arrived at Tiffin, Ohio, on the 17th. Commenced our meetings on the evening of the 18th at Shannon's School house near my brother David's. Continued our meetings, morning and evening each day, in the neighborhood of my cousins, (Shidlers) until Sunday forenoon. Held six meetings in that neighborhood, all of which were very interesting. Sunday afternoon, was taken by cousin Peter Shidler to Green Springs, a small village; meeting in the evening at Green Springs.

22nd. Went to Gordon Meeting-house, held two meetings. Next day went to Thompson Center; meeting at 10 A. M. In the afternoon was taken to Belone. Lodged with brother George Karns and family, where we enjoyed good rest.

24th. Took the cars in company with brother Karns, and was soon at Washington station in Sandusky Co. O., in brother Noah Henries' district. A walk of 2½ miles brought us to the hospitable residence of brother Henries, where we enjoyed rest until the 26th, brother H. having no appointments.

27th. Visited some members in the western part of the district. Among those visited was our beloved brother John Smith, who according to information given, was on that day 101 years, 6 months and 19 days old. He was born in Nottinghamshire, England. And emigrated to this country (America) about 20 years ago. He is quite active, walks with a light elastic step, as many do at seventy.

28th. Held three meetings to day, brother D. Smith assisting.

March 1st. Returned to brother Henries', and next day took the train at Fremont for Fostoria, where I was met by brethren Ebersole, Crumrine and Willard. Commenced meeting that evening in brother John P. Ebersole's district, where I continued morning and evening until Friday the 5th then went west of Findlay where brother Joseph Crumrine, (formerly of this congregation) lives.

6th. Returned to brother Ebersole's. Received a dispatch by telegraph from my wife, that the family was very sick. Being unable to get a train on Sunday, I was obliged to remain until Sunday night.—Attended meeting on Sunday at 10 A. M. at Ebersole's meeting house. After taking refreshment was brought to my brother David Wise's. Took supper at brother James Neely's, where a large number of my friends and relatives came to see me. After prayer together, went to the station, a number accompanying me to the cars. Took the train at 11.30 on Sunday night; and, having a prosperous journey, arrived at home on the 8th at 10 P. M. Found that death had been at work in the family. Our youngest child died on the 3rd and was buried on the 5th of March. Our little girl was very ill; and is yet at this date—17th. We can say "it is the Lord, let him do what seemeth to him good." Of the deceased one, we say, with the man of patience, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken, and blessed be the name of the Lord." Although no chastisement is joyous for the present, I pray that ours may yield the "fruit of righteousness."

Our meetings were generally well attended. And although we did not see any immediate fruit of our labors, except that the church was edified, I hope they were not in vain.

Farewell.

MARYVILLE TENN. }
March 13th, 1869. }

Dear Companion:—A few words from this part of the South may not be amiss to your readers. So far as temporal things are concerned, we have little to complain of and much to be thankful for.

This is certainly a favored land, situated between the extremes of north and south, and producing nearly everything grown in both, so if one kind fails, there is generally a supply in another. The climate also is one of special attraction. Since the 26th of December, it has been like the Spring in the north. Flowers blooming since the middle of February, and most farmers sowed their oats in that month. We had some quite cold mornings during the first week of March, with heavy frosts. Fears are entertained that the peaches are frozen, which are now in bloom.—Though we had some cold nights and frosty mornings, our streams were never frozen over at any time all winter.

In regard to spiritual things, I must say there is much to encourage, and some things to discourage. My labors are very severe; yet I can not but begin to do the work that is needed. My best friends in the south are the rebels. They being cut off from the churches to which they belonged, come to the Brethren who took no part in the late civil war. The rebels are actually persecuted by their loyal church brethren, and when they find one who preaches a "common salvation," they feel as if they had found a refuge.

More anon.

Proposed visit to Somerset Co.

God willing, I will visit the churches as follows:

Shade district, evening of 15th April to morning of 17th. Quimahoning district, evening of 17th to morning of 19th. Berlin district, evening of 19th to morning of 23. Elklick district, evening of 23 to the close of District Meeting.

The Brethren will make the appointment to suit themselves, except that we wish them to make the last appointment in Shade district near as convenient to our way to next district, and so on through to Elklick. The brethren of these districts will please inform us of the first stopping place in each district, by dropping a few lines by letter.—Brother Grabill Myers will be with me as far as Shade district. We want company through the visit, therefore, we invite some brother that is willing to accompany, to go with us.

MEYERS MILLS PA., }
MARCH 18th 1869. }

Brother Henry:—As the time for our District meeting is drawing nigh, I thought it necessary on our part to give a short outline of the several roads and their connections leading to said meeting. The Brethren north and north-west, coming by public conveyance to Johnstown, will take coaches to Berlin, Somerset Co. Pa,, either by way of Jenner X Roads and Somerset, or Via., Stoystown. From Johnstown to Berlin we have a daily coach; from Berlin to the place of meeting, coach 3 days in the week, viz., Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, mornings. Arrive at Meyers Mills, where you will be met by Brethren. Those who come by way of Uniontown by public conveyance, take coach at Uniontown for Grantsville, Md. The coach is due at the last named place between 12 and 1 o'clock at night if I am informed right. There take the coach either for Salisbury, Summit mills, or Meyers mills. The first named place is south of meeting, second, is at the place of meeting, and the last is 3 miles East. We have coach 3 days in the week from Grantsville to either of the above named places, viz., Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday mornings. Those coming down on National pike by private conveyance, turn off at Petersburg, and come in by Brother John Beck's.

I expect brother John Wise to be at Grantsville on Wednesday night, 21st of April, so as to take coach next morning for Meyers mills, to commence preaching at the last named place.

We would like to see a good turn out, especially of the ministering brethren. We want to commence preaching on Thursday evening and continue on as long as we can have any one to labor for us. Brethren of the several districts composing the Western District of Pa., represent yourselves, turn out, make the meeting an interesting one; don't the cause suffer. Any brethr wishing to hear any more inform tion can obtain it by addressi Wm. M. Buechly, Meyers Mills P See last year's minutes.

Yours for the cause.

Report of Meeting at Conemaug

We have enjoyed the benefit o series of meetings commenci March 6th and continuing until t evening of the 9th. This meeti was superintended by brethre Grabill Myers and H. R. Holsing Editor of Companion. We feel co fident that the officiating brethr labored faithfully while with us, a were instrumental in causing so to make inquiry about the or nances of Christ's Church. have been informed of some wh have been engaged in reading t scripture since the commencment the meeting; and from every a pearance are almost convinced turn to the Lord.

We would have continued o meeting had the weather not b come so inclement. It is the pra er of the brethren and sisters this place that lasting inpressio may have been made upon t minds of many who are standing direct opposition to Christ, the a thor and finisher of our faith.

C. P. L. ROBERTS.

Conemaugh, Pa.

Brother Holsinger:—I see Companion No 11, that there sometimes calls made for the C panion at a low price. You find enclosed 50 cts that will h some poor widowed sister. I some partiality to my own sex. no calls, keep it as short pay of s poor one.

A SISTER

Brother Holsinger:—I see have expressed yourself willing send the Companion to the poor one dollar, but think the rich m bers ought to have a chance to up the other 50 cents, which I is not asking too much. I do from the bottom of my heart very member could read the wholeome lessons our periodical teaches, nd profit by them. But there are ome who have become tired of eading it. And why? Perhaps ome darling habit is in danger of eing abused, and so they prefer a lumbering conscience to an active ne.

I send you 50 cents for some one hat wants the paper for one dol-
ar. We have none here that want that are not able to pay for it.—
e are glad you have been able to nlarge the paper, and if the breth-en and sisters all do their duty I ope you will be able to continue he enlarged form without doing in-ustice to yourself.

A. SISTER.

Thank you, dear sisters for your imely response, and liberality.—
Our readers shall not know who you re, and in part we know not, but e must let them know of your good eeds. Especially do we want that hose poor persons shall know that e have sisters who sympathize with hem, and that we are not left alone bear the expense of supplying em with the Companion; so that ey may more cheerfully apply for d except the offers.

The first sister says she is partial her sex, and that her mite is to lp some "poor widowed sister."— ell we have just such a one on our
t. A brother sent her name and enty-five cents, and requested us we could afford it to make up the lance. We think he said she has en confined to her bed for 6 years.
ink of it: six long years poor, k, and in bed. We will let your e go for her; and when she ds this notice we know she will nk the Lord and bless you.—
en we have others, some of whose umstances we cannot now recall.
e are mothers and lost their hus ds and sons in the war, some in North and a few in the South.—
We just now remember of a young sister who sent a dollar stating that her father had spent much of his time in preaching and so could not accumulate anything for their support before his death, and that her mother hoped we would send the paper for the full year.

A ministering brother wrote us that he could not renew his subscription, as he had a family, was in the last stage of consumption, and was poor. He would like to read the paper. Of course we sent it on.— The brother has since gone to his reward.

Such, dear brethren and sisters are some of the cases to which your gifts are bestowed. We hope that we shall be enabled by contributions

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Wild Cat Church, Carroll Co. Indiana, on March 6th. 1869, sister MARY ROOF, aged 81 years and 18 days. Funeral services by Elds. John Shively and John Metzger Jr., from 1st verse of 5th chapter second Corinthians.

The deceased was a consistent member of the church for 45 years, and died with the bright anticipation of a glorious immortality.

JOSEPH ZAHN.

In the Otter Creek Church, Macoupin County, Ills., Febuary 28th 1869., daughter of brother Noah and sister Elisebeth Brubaker, aged 10 months and 8 days. Disease, Brain Fever. Funeral services by brethren John Crist and Nicholas Brubaker. Text Matth. 2: 18.

Also, in the same Church, March 5th 1869., son of brother William and sister Nancy Brunk, aged 1 year 5 months and 23 days.—Disease, White Thrush. Funeral services by brethren John Crist and Daniel Vaniman. Text 1 Cor. 15: 22, 23.

J. H. CRSIT.

In Line Lexington, Bucks Co. Pa., March 9th, ANNA, daughter of brother Joseph and sister Lydia, KRAUTHAMEL, aged 18 years, 5 months, and 12 days.

Just in the bloom of life. She was an assistant with her brothers and sisters in the Tailoring business in which they had been engaged until a late hour in the night, in good humor and good spirits, not thinking of any danger, and perhaps the least to be visited with such a visitor as the pale messenger, death, who made his approach in a grim way. She and another young lady were on the way to retire, and while on the stairway, a coal-oil-lamp in the hands of deceased exploded, setting the stair-way on fire, and she being in the rear, and all the family up stairs, was left to perish in the flames.—And the doors being locked no one from without could assist until they were forced in, and life had already departed.

On the 13th her remains were conveyed to their last resting place, followed by three brothers and six sisters, all members but one, who has also felt that all is not well. O, may all who read of this heart-rending accident, take warning and prepare to meet their Creator. The funeral occasion was improved by the brethren present.

JONAS PRICE.

Near Duncansville, Blair Co. Pa., March 9th, our old mother JANE FUNK, wife of brother John Funk, aged 75 years, 11 months, and 6 days. Funeral by Mr. Gibson of the Presbyterian church, of which she was a member.

Near the same place, March 13th, sister ELIZABETH, wife of brother Aaron BERKEY, aged 26 years, 2 months, and 25 days. Disease, Consumption. Occasion improved from 2 Cor. 5: 1, by the writer.

In the Clover Creek branch, March 18th, of Bronchial Consumption, brother CHRISTIAN L. HOLSINGER, aged 37 years, 6 months, and 12 days, leaving a sorrowing wife and 8 children to mourn their loss.—Truly, mysterious are the ways of Providence. Funeral text Heb. 13: 14, by the brethren.

D. M. HOLSINGER.

In the Cedar Run branch, DeKalb Co. Ind. Feb. 5th, infant son of friend C. and sister SQUIRES. Funeral services by the writer. Text on funeral occasion, 1 Peter 1: 24.

JOSEPH EBY.

March 14th, in the Conemaugh branch, MARTHA EMMA, daughter of brother Stephen and sister Mary HILDEBRAND. Aged 10 months and 2 days. Funeral services by brethren Byers and Brallier and the writer. Text Matth. 18: 2, 3.

THE
Christian Family Companion

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Be not deceived.

To be deceived in any matter pertaining to this life will be a great misery to us, and according to the value of the thing to us, or the enjoyment it would give us, so would the misery be should we be deceived in our trust. Indeed it is one of the surest calamities which befall unto the children of men, especially so when we are deceived in our souls, salvation; for if the christian has only hope in Christ in this life, says Paul, he is of all men most miserable. Paul used the words of our text no less than three times in his epistles, and the Holy Bible abounds with numerous warnings to all to take heed that they be not deceived. It becomes us all to examine, then, the different ways in which we may be deceived, for there is great danger, and Christ foretold it, and like in all other dangers which Christ and his apostles pointed out they told us how to avoid them, so here, they give plain and abundant instructions. First, then, let us begin at home, in our own hearts, for we learn from the Holy Bible that "the heart is deceitful above all things," and that deceit is one of those evil things which come from within, and defile the man, therefore, as the apostle says, "let no man deceive himself," but let him examine himself," whether he stands in the faith of the Gospel. From "the more sure word of prophecy, whereunto we do well that we take heed," we learn that "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God," and therefore "are all under sin," and "if we say that we have not sinned, we make God a liar," and "if we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." So says John the apostle, when he speaks of himself and his fellow disciples, thus we let none deceive himself by saying he has no sin. Christian, do not think that you are perfect, and have apprehended, but forget those things that are behind, and reach forth unto those things which are before, and "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Believing a thing will not make it so. Paul, or Saul, thought that he was doing God service when he was persecuting the Church of Christ; yea, he thought that "he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." And Christ told his disciples that "the time would come, that whosoever would kill them would think that he doeth God service." I believe in an experimental religion. Indeed I regard the religion as false that does not make man feel happy; but while I highly regard the blessed feelings of the Christian professor, I still believe we may be deceived if we trust to our feelings alone. There can be no Christian unless he is conscientious, but our conscience can never be relied on as a safe criterion whereby to judge. Remember "the heart is deceitful above all things." He may feel like the rich young man that came to Jesus, "all these have I kept from my youth," but when brought to the test of the word of God, he will find that his feelings deceived him. It is not because our feelings, or consciences will permit us to rejoice in God, and like the Pharisee, to say "I thank thee, God, that I am not as other men are," that all is right with us, but when we judge ourselves by the word of God, and find all is right between us and our fellow man, and also with God, for his "spirit will lead you into all truth, and the truth shall make you free." But while we may be deceived by our own deceitful hearts, so others may deceive us. Paul says "sin deceived me," and so it did Eve, and so it will deceive all nations. Many false Christs and Spirits have gone out into the world, and "if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect; behold, I have told you before."—"Little children let no man deceive you." Look unto Jesus for your example, for he is "the way, the truth, and the life."

SACRIFICES.—It is easy enough to make sacrifices for those we love, but for our enemy we have to struggle and overcome self. Such a victory is noble. "Love your enemies," says Jesus.

For the Companion.

Be ye also ready.

The above is one of the many exhortations given us in the word of God, to be ready for that time when we shall be called by death to leave this world. And perhaps this little paper (the Companion) may chance to fall into the hands of some who are still living careless and unconcerned about their eternal peace and happiness, saying without themselves, I am young—have many years yet to live, why should I attend to this matter now? A little more worldly pleasure, and then at a more convenient season, like one of old, I will attend to the interests of my soul. To such I would say, Thou art not wise: "yea, thou art called foolish." "This night thy soul may be required of thee."

Think of the case of the young lady who lost her life so suddenly, as noticed in obituaries of Companion of last week.

Look around you. See the many calls God is making. Will you not heed them? How many on your right, and on your left, are called away while young and in the prime of life, and that too, oft times, without a moment's warning! I could mention several cases that came under my own notice within a few days past; and are not all these loud calls to us, to take warning by the exhortation given us by Jesus, "Therefore be ye also ready, for in such an hour," He tells us, "as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Matt. 24: 44.

We are all here on trial for eternity. We must all give an account to God of our stewardship: how we have improved our talents. He has appointed a day for this express purpose; and for this day it is that we are to be ready. We may refuse to prepare for that great and coming day, but we can neither prevent nor delay it. The day is unchangeably fixed. And what a day will that be! How will the fair professor, whose hypocritical pretences have deceived the most discerning, be stripped of every disguise! How will those, who have set God and his laws at defiance, with the careless and unconcerned, call on the rocks and mountains to fall on them and cover them from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb! Rev. 6: 16. How happy then will all those be who have not been ashamed of Jesus, and who have endeavored to obey and follow him, in all things, however undervalued they may have been while on earth. Let us then acquaint ourselves more with Him, that we may be at peace, and that good may come to us and not evil, in that great and terrible day of the Lord.

The Savior was here speaking of his second coming. He tells us that his coming will be unexpected. And of this also we are expressly assured in other passages of Scripture. There will be no particular alarm, no extraordinary change, to indicate his coming until the voice of the archangel and the trump of God shall summon all to judgment; this is in order, no doubt, that we may be watching. This is equally true with regard to death: the time of death is kept from all.—Many are taken away without the least warning, and though the thought of death are habitually present with the good man, yet even to him the time may be, and usually is, unexpected. How much, then, it concerns us to be always ready; for at such an hour as we think not the son of man may come by judgment, at least by death and thus place us in the same circumstance in which we shall be found at his actual coming in the last day. Therefore, whatsoever thy hand finds to do, do it immediately, with all thy might; "for there is no work nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest." Eccl 9: 10.

With what propriety then does our Lord again and again exhort us to be ready: may we attend to his exhortation, before it is to late.

"There is a time, we know not when,
A point we know not where,
That marks the destiny of men,
To glory or despair."

"How far may we go on in sin?
How long will God forbear?
Where does hope end? and where begin
The confines of despair?"

Let us take the advice he has so kindly given us and be always on the watch, lest coming suddenly our Lord find us sleeping. Let us not say in our hearts "To-morrow I will examine into the state of my soul—to-morrow I will begin to prepare for eternity." Alas we know not what a day may bring forth. "This night our souls may be required of us." Then what will become of our purposes for to-morrow? To-day we enjoy the means of grace: to-morrow they may be forever hid from our eyes. To-day we are in time: to-morrow we may be in Eternity. To-day, therefore while it is called "TO-DAY," let us not harden our hearts, but flee from the wrath to come, and lay hold on eternal life, "lest in such an hour as we think not the Son of Man should come."

Before I close, I feel to press this subject more seriously upon the immediate attention of all who are careless and unprepared. Your Savior has in mercy warned you to be ready, and he well knew what he said. Why then dalay from day to day? Is it the hope of a long life, and a distant opportunity of repentance? Alas, alas! what is that life, as I have just shown you, on which you build such hopes? Is it not as a vapor that appeareth for a little while, and then vanishes away? You are now, it may be, young and in health, but how soon, may the SON of Man come, not perhaps in the same way as he came to him who was envoloped in flames, (whose sudden and unexpected death has caused me to pen these lines,) but in a fever, or some other way, and you be brought to judgment suddenly. "Know you not, that in the midst of life you are in death?" and that as death leaves you, so will judgment find you? Then make no more delays. What has become of thousands who trifled with their convictions, and made light of the calls of the gospel, in hope of a more convenient season? Alas! those calls and convictions are now aggraing their condemnation, and ministering fuel to the fire that shall never be quenched. Let me once more entreat you, as you value your soul, and your eternal peace and happiness, "flee, oh flee," as for your life to the city of refuge which God has appointed, lest the avenger of his broken law overtake you, and you perish forever.

But I would not confine my exhortation alone to the careless and unconcerned. I would say to my brethren and sisters, and to myself, let us all watch and "be ready." Let us keep in the fear of the Lord, and the views of Eternity all the day long. Let us daily apply to him who is mighty to save, for grace to help us, and for mercy to pardon us, though the blood of Christ. Then shall we have no need to start at the approach of death or judgment: we may view as many have the king of terrors without dismay. "Nay," we may lift up our heads with joy amidst all the horrors of a consuming world. Jesus will be our Friend, our Elder Brother," and his favor will secure us, from all the perils of that "great day," if we persevere to the end in his service. Let us not, therefore be of the number who draw back to perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul. Then in a few more years, or months or perhaps in a few more days, He that shall come, will come, and his reward shall be with him. Now if what I have written will cause one careless soul, to reflect, and turn to God, and seek for givenss through the atoning blood of Jesus, I am richly paid. God grant it. And that we may all be found of Him in peace, and not be ashamed before him at his coming, is my prayer.

Prayer-meeting.

"And his ears are open unto their prayers." 1 Peter, 3: 12.

The sublime and useful necessity of social prayer-meeting is a subject that should really command and the sincere attention of God's people; not simply because custom has brought it under our immediate observation, but for a more noble purpose, which teaches us that it is in precise harmony with the religion that we claim as our authentic guide to the celestial camp.

Simply because we find it perpetuated by other religious orders, is no tenable proof why it is no necessity to the righteous followers of the Lamb.

If this untenable idea is all the proof in existence against social prayer-meetings, I am satisfied that the necessity will far outweigh the sophistical objections.

Truth is truth, and good is good; and I care not where they are found. If tenable in a religious view, that is sufficient, and it would be unreasonable for me to ask more. If they found their origin in the world, so much the better for the world; it has done one good deed at least. The more good things the world can perpetuate, the better I hope it will be for it in time to come. And as the ears of the Lord are always open unto the prayers of the saints, we may justly come to the conclusion that he is at all times prepared to hear the sincere prayers of the pious saints, and the more they pray (if done sincerely) the better it is for them. We regard prayers as being the closest communion that can be held with the Deity; and if closer than any other action, why not indulge more freely in the exercise? and thus draw ourselves near our Creator. God will never oppose our proximity to him, when it is in spirit and in truth; but if we go so far as to permit an egotistical design to predominate, God will surely censure our evil conduct, and chastise us in the world to come.

Prayer should be freely indulged in, by both old and young. Perhaps the younger may feel too weak to pray much in public; if so, he can pray a little, and can never learn younger. No one can pray until he learns; and the earlier the useful art of praying is learned, so much the better. And of all the suitable places for praying the social prayer-meeting is one. There the sincere Christian can in humility fall at the feet of Jesus, and send his sincere petitions to the Father of love. God will surely not object to the sincere prayers of any one, but answer them as he may think suitable.

J. H. MOORE.

Urbana, Ills.

PRAYER, to make it accepted, requires neither genius, eloquence, nor language; but sorrow for sins, faith and humility. It is the cry of distress, the sense of want, the abasement of contrition, the energy of gratitude. It is not an elaborate string of well-arranged periods, nor an exercise of ingenuity, nor an effort to the memory; but the devout breathing of a soul struck with the sense of its own misery, and of the holiness of him to whom it is addressed.

Giving.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

Nothing is so vast in its complications, so transcendent in the height of its reasons, so sublime in its impulse, and so glorious in its results, as giving. It reveals the character of Jehovah, of man, of sin, & evinces both the capacity & essential constitution of the human soul. In strict justice every thing is rated according to its value, and what God gives for the redemption of humanity, demonstrates the love, wisdom, and power of the Eternal, and the deathlessness of the Creature he redeems, which is the essential groundwork of our original character, and the possibility of restoration to our pristine state and relation. On the matter of giving turns the destiny of man, and, in some sense of the Universe. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sake he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." 2 Cor. 8: 9. There is no motive to self-sacrifice like that which is kindled at the Cross of Christ. If the contemplation of the Redeemer's humiliation will not open our hearts and hands and purses for the advancement of Christ's kingdom and the promotion of the highest interests of humanity, our state is truly lamentable. A practical abjuration of the absolute necessity of self-sacrifice is irrational, revolting, and fatal. To say "that aught of the things which we possess, is our own," is to deny Christ's ownership of us, and usurp authority that belongs to God only. To allow the cause of God to suffer because we are too indolent or cowardly to contend for the faith, is to prove recreant to our most solemn and urgent duty. To cramp the efforts of Christ's Ambassadors in the promulgation of the Gospel, when we have the means of upholding their hands and directing their energies, is to give to Mammon the worship due to God. If Jesus, in whom is treasured the wealth of Eternity, but nothing by the sacrifice of all, and giving of himself, the "same mind" in us will secure us against loss, although we cast our last mite into the treasury of Heaven. With all the vast illimitable expenditure of God in the redemption of man, the scheme of grace is economical, thus showing the essential dignity of man, even in his ruin, and forbiding him the undue expenditure of any of Heaven's bounties. In the Divine enlightenment of the mind, and the Divine enlargement and sanctification of the heart, every thing is to be turned to the account of righteousness. Every farthing will then be a matter of Divine trust, and every crumb of bread a gift of God. Whether we eat we eat to the Lord, or whether we abstain, it is for his sake. The gold and the silver are His, and to spend it in needless personal decoration, or furniture, or for the gratification of tyrannous artificial appetites, is to detract from the Divine honor, compromise with the enemy of God, give rein to the lusts of the flesh, and lower the standard of undefiled religion. Give, give, was the incessant cry that rose from the bosom of humanity, and the dolorous supplication was echoed from every quarter of Jehovah's Empire; and give he did, and that like a God. Our wants and His ability being co-equal, He gave Himself, as nothing less than His life would serve as a model, and nothing less than his death as an atonement. The suffering love of Christ, if it truly find lodgment in our inmost being, so as to become a controlling and thus a saving power, will as certainly re-enact His sublime tragedy of self-sacrifice and immolation, as that the character in which such sacrifice inheres is an essential qualification for Heaven. If we love with his love, we will pant for opportunities of sacrifice, which need not long be sought where the harvest is so great, and the laborers so few. The love that can pray on the cross for its malignant enemies, must needs reproduce itself in us in order to keep the mirror of Heaven ever before the eyes of the world, to make actual through the body what was made provisional in the Head.

Love is a great giver. To give, in whatever way may be within our power, is the highest luxury of love. There is nothing that the true disciple learns quicker than this. Our souls never thrill with a deeper bliss than when we are permitted to show the object of our affections the intensity of our devotion by sacrifice. The Apostles, after being beaten by the Jews, "departed from the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer for His name." And Paul wrote to his Philippian Brethren these words of pathetic inspiration, "unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ not only to believe on Him but also to suffer for his sake." Whoever is not willing to give his superfluities to the cause of Christ, is still less willing to part with his comforts. And he that declines either, when the prosperity of Zion requires it, has not "the mind of Christ." For a worldling to hold houses and lands at the disposal of the church, would be a galling necessity indeed; and the agonizing wrench which so many in the church manifestly experience when they are to contribute means for the cause of Christ, too plainly declares that their hearts are not in the work assigned to the church of God. Our all, for time and eternity, rests on the glorious fact that God "gave his only begotten Son." "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift." "Every good gift, and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down from the father of Lights."—"God giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not." "God so loved the world." Oh, who is able to exhaust or fathom the glorious meaning of that little word "so." When we feel the spirit of selfishness and illiberality creeping into our hearts, we have only to stand at the foot of the cross, and spell that word of two letters—so. A niggardly spirit cannot breathe in the atmosphere of Calvary. Where God offered up his only begotten Son, the believer is willing to sacrifice his dearest and best. It is only when following Christ afar off that we think of denying him. If Christ's way to Heaven lay through Gethsemane and over Golgotha, involving a descent from glory inaccessible to degradation unparalleled, draining the utmost farthing from the Celestial exchequer to pay his toll to the Capital of the Universe, how say some that pleasing self and hoarding treasure on earth is compatible with unreserved consecration to him who "pleased not himself?"

There is a blessed discipline in giving, and the love that prompts the gift also gives wisdom to direct. To give profitably and opportunely, needs the unlocking of heart and mind by the "Key of the house of David." Nothing makes us more sharp-sighted than love. It has a wonderful insight into the fitness of things. When the contemplative, devoted Mary came with her alabaster-box of very precious ointment, the utilitarian money-loving Judas saw nothing but waste and needless expenditure. But Jesus "commended it as a good work," and ordered it to be put on record for all future ages, to the intent that all may know that holy love has deeper perception than worldly prudence. The woman with her two mites had nothing to recommend her but the most fortuitous circumstances. Those who could "make long prayers" and at the same time "devour widow's houses," would doubtless look with disdain on the poor creature whose entire means of subsistence consisted of "two mites." But her poverty was no greater than her devotion. If the coffer was empty the heart was full. The little that she gave was much in the eyes of him who looketh to the heart, because it was the free, unreserved expression of a soul aglow with love to God, and burning with ardor for the honor of his name. The overflowing bosom is never long at a loss to find an offering for the object of its love, and if nothing else is at hand it gives birth to kind wishes lovingly expressed. If not even two mites are in possession, there are sick and death-chambers where sympathy and prayer are needed, and there are impenitent and wandering that need expostulation and warning, which requires nights of wrestling and days of humiliation and soul-searching in order to be qualified for so solemn a task. We not only need a Love-gift to make atonement for us, but we must absolutely have a disposition to imitate our Peerless Exemplar, and lay out ourselves for his glory in the salvation of souls. If we give rightly, whether it be money or sympathy, much or little, the greater benefit will accrue to ourselves. The temper of mind that is nursed by giving, is a thousandfold more precious than silver or gold. To offer up ourselves in the service of God, under the impulse and direction of holy love, is the sum total of vital godliness. Faith and love are the two hinges on which every thing turns in the matter of salvation. Faith takes hold of an Arm of Almighty Power, nestles in a Bosom of Almighty Love, looks back and forth through the eyes of Christ, turning the stream that flows from the Divine Heart into our own, so that we are no longer at the disposal of inferior interests, but wholly given to him who gave himself for us. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

Not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the LORD commendeth.—Paul.

Selected by J. R. Holsinger.

A few observations on 1 Cor. 1: 10—31.

Satan has always endeavored to stir up strife among Christians, as one of his grand devices against the gospel: we should therefore use all our influence to prevail with our Brethren by the name, and for the honor of our Lord, to avoid contests of every kind, and as much as possible to "speak the same thing, and to be perfectly joined together in the same mind and judgment;" and we should persevere in praying for this most desirable harmony, and endeavor to promote it. For it must greatly pain every serious and judicious believer, to see or hear of the divisions which take place, through the spiritual pride, ambition, selfishness and malignant passions of turbulent and designing men; and through the prejudices, instability, want of judgment, love of novelty, and eager spirit of some believers. Thus the church is divided into parties, congregations are distracted by contentions; and men are drawn away from their faithful pastors, to rank themselves under the banner of some confident deceiver, who "privily brings in damnable heresies," couched in plausible language, propagated under specious pretences, and varnished over by an ingenuity which might have been far better employed. Thus, professed christians become 'the disciple of men;' and, regardless of the apostle's expostulations, they still glory in ranking themselves among the followers of this or the other preacher, as if "Christ were divided;" or as if that teacher, whom they extol, while they despise others, had been, "crucified for them," or "they had been baptized into his name." We should be very thankful if we have been preserved from giving sanction to such disgraceful contests; we should carefully avoid all appearance of seeking our own credit, instead of Christ's, (2 Cor. 4: 5, 6,) and pray continually for "the meekness of Wisdom," that we may know how to counteract the pestilent endeavors of the firebrands of the church, without giving them ground against us.

Those whom Christ sends to "preach his gospel" are often incapable, and should never be studious of "that wisdom of words," which men of education and ingenuity, but of a worldly spirit, admire; nor should the hearers of the gospel look for such worthless decorations of that divine doctrine which is most beautiful in its native simplicity. Too often "the Cross of Christ is rendered of none effect," through the vain affectation of the preachers, to recommend it by the studied graces of elocution, or the ostentatious parade of learning and philosophy. Thus its edge is blunted, its convincing plainness is obscured, its genuine beauty and glory are tarnished, and the preacher has his worthless reward, in human applause or empty popularity. Matt. 6: 1, 4. But the spirit of God disdains to set his seal to the word thus preached; it proves the mere shadow of a feast at which the guests are starved; and an amusing display of ingenuity, instead of an assault on "the strong holds of satan" by the power of divine truth. Indeed all attempts to make the real gospel palatable to worldly men, must be unsuccessful: it always was, and always will be, "foolishness" to such as are in the road to destruction: and the only way to render it inoffensive is to leave out or but slightly touch on the offensive of it: and this is too commonly done, when preachers study to embellish their doctrine and recommend themselves by "the wisdom of words, or the excellency of speech." But the true minister of Christ is no "man-pleaser:" he will, with "great plainness of speech," deliver his whole message, however it may be derided or reviledr that by it, as a sure touchstone, men may learn their real state and character. Thus, while to numbers it appears foolish, to "those who are saved" it proves "the power of God." It is God's determination to "destroy the wisdom of the wise, and to bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent;" he will not honor carnal weapons, or self-sufficient teachers: he will pour contempt on carnal wisdom, and will abase, either in deep humiliation or final destruction, all the learned scribes, the wise philosophers and the eager "disputers of this world." Such persons are indeed commonly found among the despisers or opposers of the doctrine of Christ crucified; but what have they ever done towards rendering the world wise or holy? Or what have they to propose so excellent, as to merit a preference to that gospel which they reject or even to bear a comparison with it? Undeniable facts evince the folly of this wisdom, and show that, amid all the displays of the "eternal power and Godhead," with which we are surrounded, human reason, sagacity and learning, know him not, but uniformly lead men to idolatry, impiety, or infidelity: and on the other hand "it has pleased God," from age to age, by "the foolishness of preaching," delivered with unadorned simplicity, to save multitudes, even all that believe, from ignorance, delusion and vice, and to make them meet for his heavenly kingdom. For the true minister of God insists especially upon this great doctrine, which is no less a stumblingblock to some and foolishness to others, than it was in the apostle's day.

There is scarcely a stronger demonstration of man's depravity, blindness, and folly, than this circumstance, that neither facts nor arguments can repress his arrogance in treating the wisdom of God manifested in the gospel as "foolishness," the power of God as "weakness;" though no human devices or efforts have ever produced effects in the least comparable to those which have been and are even now wrought by it. Let them then call it folly, enthusiasm, weakness, madness, or what they please: may we show in our lives, that it is a wise, holy, and blessed doctrine, and we shall feel in our hearts that it gives "a peace of God, which passeth all understanding." And though we see, as those before us did, that "few of the wise, the mighty, the noble of this world," are called to the knowledge of the truth or employed to promote the cause of righteousness; yet we may perceive also, that God employs the foolish, weak, despised, and ignoble of this world, o confound the devices and expose the folly of the wise, to disappoint the mighty and disgrace and bring into contempt "the honorable of the earth:" so that in everything he takes care, that no flesh should glory in his presence. But let us not fear, knowing how foolish, guilty, polluted and enslaved we are in ourselves; for by deep convictions of this kind the Holy Spirit leads poor sinners to believe in Christ, who "of God", and by his special grace, "is made to them wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification and redemption," so that having all in him they may be satisfied to have nothing as of themselves; and when most covered with shame, and filled with deep remorse and self-abhorrence, they may yet "glory in the Lord and his salvation," and hope to glorify him on earth, and to be preserved as monuments of his love, to praise and glorify him for ever in his heavenly felicity.

The Sinner's Warning.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Matt. 11: 28, 29.

My friends, some of you are without the fold, in the thicket of neglect and the rocky barrens of disobedience, where grows only the rank weeds of dissoluteness, and the bitter, coarse, poisonous herbage of infidelity. Take some view of your condition. Without the fold, is "without Christ," and that is "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel." But even yet, while you live in the midst of the ordinances, and holy influences, there may be something to you. He is not yet a Judge. He is yet a Prince and Savior, to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins. You are sinners, and he came into the world to save sinners.

"He calls." He says stop your wandering. Turn back from the ways of indifference, and thoughtlessness, and sinlessness, and neglect. "Come unto me! all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Remember what Truth says of your condition, and your prospects, as immortal and accountable beings, with righteous judgment before you, and take the alarm.

Though you sleep, without a grave,
Heed a warning voice to-day—
Satan lurks about thy side,
Fly, or thou wilt be his prey.
While the "Shepherd," love of old,
Beckons thee, oh join his fold.

In this fold are "pastures green;"
There "still waters," gently roll:
While in satan's plains are seen
Poisoned streams, that kill the soul.
Sinner, sinner, hear my voice!
Prove this day and make your choice.

Will this choice be made,
"That the Lord, my Shepherd be?
Wandering sheep,—be not afraid:
Even now he calls for thee.
Answer, ere you leave the spot,—
Will you seek his fold or not?"

Give God His Day.

Reader, do not be a robber. He that steals breaks God's eighth commandmen. Above all do not rob God's property. Give God his day.

I do entreat you for your soul's sake, not to profane the Sabbath, but to keep it holy. Do not buy and sell or idle away your time on Sunday. Let not the example of all around you, let not the invitation of companions, let none of these things induce you to violate the settled rule, that God's day shall be given to God.

The Sabbath is one of the greatest blessings which God has given to man. Do not make bad use of this blessing. He that cannot give God his Sunday is unfit for heaven. Heaven is an eternal Sunday. Oh, while you live give God his day.

Once give over caring for the Sabbath, and in the end you will give over caring for your soul. The steps which lead to this conclusion are easy and regular. Begin with not honoring God's day, and you will soon not honor God's house. Cease to honor God's house and by and by you will give God no honor at all. Let a man lay the foundation of having no Sabbath, and I am never surprised if he finishes with the topstone of no God. It is a remarkable saying of Judge Hale, "Of all the persons who were convicted of capital crimes while he was upon the bench, he found only a few who would not confess on inquiry, that they began their career of wickedness by a neglect of the Sabbath.

Reader, resolve, that by God's help you will always remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Honor it by a regular attendance at some place where the gospel is preached. Settle down under a faithful ministry, and once settled, let your place in church never be empty. Give God his day.—Ryle.

Despise not little sins; they have ruined many a soul. Despise not little duties, they have been to many haughty spirits an excellent discipline of humility. Despise not little temptations; rightly met they have often nerved the character for some fiery trial.

"Homiletics."—"He talks right at us." So said a plain but intelligent hearer on a recent Sabbath, in giving his opinion of the preacher. Is not this true "Homiletics." We were reminded of the remark of the German a while since to one of our ministers: "I can understand your talkin' talk, for I can't much understand your preachin' talk."

Review of

"FEET-WASHING NOT A CHURCH ORDINANCE."

Quite recently we had placed in our hands a copy of the American Christian Review, of the date of March 3rd, 1868; and our attention called to an article bearing the above caption, signed J. A. C. We are creditably informed it is the production of one James A. Cogel, a traveling minister of the Campbellite faith, and a man well known in this section. With the kindest feelings toward him and his adherents, I am prompted by a love of truth to exhibit to every honest mind the sandy foundation upon which his assertion rests: that "Feet washing is not a Church ordinance."

In the onset friend J. A. C. says:

"It has been the custom for some Christians to observe feet-washing as a Church Ordinance; that is to attend to it in the public assembly, and at the time they break the loaf and drink of the cup in memory of the Lord's death, insisting that they are to be observed jointly, as parts of the same ordinance. The argument, at least the main one, adduced to prove the legitimacy of the practice is, that the Lord washed his disciples' feet the same night and at the same place where he instituted the Lord's Supper, viz., at the last passover. We are however certain that it is a mistake to say that the Supper at which he washed his disciples' feet, was the Supper of the Passover. And if this main prop of the erroneous practice be taken away, the whole fabric must tumble into ruins."

By the term "last passover," and "supper of the passover" our friend means the Jewish Passover as his following remarks show. Now where does he learn that those who hold to feet-washing as a church-ordinance claim it to have originated at the eating of the Jewish Passover? His efforts in this respect are hurled at a "prop" belonging to his own imagination.—That the Savior instituted feet-washing at the same time he did the Lord's Supper and Communion of the broken body and shed blood, we emphatically maintain; and when the "prop" that holds them together falls, eternal truth must fall! as we shall clearly demonstrate.

Again we quote from the article under consideration:

"John says in the chapter above alluded to (13th) that Jesus washed his disciples' feet before the feast of the Passover. Now what was before could not be at the time. But certain it is that it was at the Passover that Jesus instituted the loaf and cup of the Communion of the Lord's Supper. We in our simplicity had thought that this argument would satisfy the advocates for feet-washing in the congregation. But alas no! Error never yields until driven for refuge into the very bosom of absurdity. * * * * We read of certain Jews that had not eaten of the Passover on the morning when Jesus was before the governer (see John 18: 28.) Jesus had doubtless eaten the Passover as prescribed by law. If any had deviated from the law, it was those Jews."

Who, my dear sir, claims that feet-washing was not attended to by the Savior before the Jewish feast of the Passover? And if you are certain he instituted the Communion at that feast, pray why did you not let us have the proofs. Those positive assertions without evidence are of little worth. "Thought that argument would satisfy," &c. Indeed! what presumption to suppose the lover of Divine truth to be silenced by "argument" that is no argument at all! Furthermore our friend has failed to give us evidence that the Savior did eat the Passover as "prescribed by law," or that "those Jews" had deviated from the law. Consequently the inference falls for want of support.

Furthermore we quote from our friend's article:

"Judas then, it seems, made his covenant two days before the feast, and as we understand it on the very night that Jesus washed the disciples' feet. And this it seems was done at the house of Simon the leper."

Things may "seem" to our friend to be right and not be so; for the Proverbs tell us "There is a way that seemeth right unto man but the end thereof are the ways of death." Also, "He that is first in his own cause seemeth just; but his neighbor cometh and searcheth him." Prov. 16: 25; & 18: 17. Now there is not a shadow of real evidence that the Savior washed his disciples' feet at the house of Simon, but to the contrary, for the Savior says to Simon: "thou gavest me no water for my feet." Luke 7: 44. From this and other passages we learn it was not ordinarily the Savior's custom to wash before sitting at meat in the Pharisees' houses, or at the place where there were a mixed multitude. See Luke 11: 38. At the Supper the Savior ate in Bethany there were those of the household of Simon; Martha, Mary and Lazarus were there, and many Jews that came not for Jesus' sake only, but that they might see Lazarus." To entertain the idea that it was at this supper the Savior washed his disciples' feet as recorded in the 13th chapter of John, is to assume an absurd position, to say the least of it.

The next step of our friend is to try to make it appear that feet-washing is a good work,—a command obligatory upon christians, but no church ordinance! And at the same time agrees that ordinances are "institutions established by lawful authority. Religious ordinances must be instituted by the great Institutor of religion, or they are not binding; minor regulations are not properly ordinances. Ordinances once established are not to be varied by human caprice or mutability." The above quotation our friend made from the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, and says, "we have the definition of an ordinance which we think will be received by every Bible student." Be it so, and A. J. C. stands condemned by his own theories; for feet-washing is an "institution established by lawful authority;" "by the great Institutor of religion," "not to be varied by human caprice or mutability."—And our friend argues it is no church ordinance!—What inconsistency!

It is admitted by our friend that feet-washing is a good work but not a church ordinance. He says: "now we find that Paul ranks feet-washing among his list of good works (see 1 Tim. 5: 10.)" 'Tis true he mentions feet-washing in connection with household duties, but by no means terms it as such. Had it been a household duty doubtless he would have said respecting the qualifications of the widow, if she have lodged strangers and washed their feet. But he particularly alludes to the saints' feet, to know if she had that true spirit of love, obedience and humility, as the washing of feet in the assembly of saints gives evidence of.—

Our friend must admit that had Paul also said: "and if she have partaken of the Lord's Supper," it would not have changed the time, place or meaning of that institution. It was unnecessary for him to mention also the Lord's supper, for that being connected with the ordinance of feet washing he knew if she had the mind and heart to attend to the one she would not neglect the other.

To illustrate the point at issue: Suppose I should say to my friend: my time is devoted to farming, gardening, teaching school, and preaching; would he understand all those things were attended to on the farm, or in the garden, or that preaching was attended to nowhere but in the school-room? He could not properly so understand me; and why? Because each of those things it would be inferred were attended to at their respective places. In like manner we understand those things Paul alludes to, to have been attended to at their respective places. Yet our friend asks "where do we bring up children? at the Church or in the family? Where do we lodge strangers? Do we carry them to the church, or do we entertain them at our houses? Where then shall we wash the saints' feet? Certainly where we entertain or lodge them. And then for necessary use." As shown above such arguments are very weak indeed!

Just here we would remark, if Paul instructs that a widow is not worthy to receive the charities of the Church unless she washed the saints' feet, how can we expect to receive the bounties of God's grace if we neglect feet-washing (it being a command of God) where it will seldom or never be attended to? Weighty consideration that!

But to return; A. J. C. says:

"I am commanded to feed the hungry; and when I do so I do a good work. But if he is no hungry, no am I commanded to feed him because he is hungry. So I am commanded to wash the saints' feet, if needful, but surely I am no more commanded to wash clean feet than I am to feed the man that is not hungry. 'He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit.' (See John 13: 10.) Or as rendered by Campbell's translation: 'He who has been bathing needs only to wash his feet, the rest of his body being clean.' See the version published by A. Campbell. According to his version before eating at which he washed his disciples' feet, they had bathed themselves. But now before retiring to rest for the night, it became necessary to wash the feet. In that climate and at that day they wore sandals, which were to protect merely the bottom of the feet. In a dusty country the feet would soon become soiled. We may learn presently, the office of a menial to wash feet. But Christ now took the important and by the example so teaching his disciples condescend to the office for the good of their fellow disciples. But the idea that feet only which is clean need not be washed. And we are from that declaration, that if the feet are clean they need not be washed. This good work then is to maintain the necessary cleanliness. Those who wash feet in the congregation are not to wash a soiled foot to be washed. It is then a mere form, and not a good work."

I have quoted our friend's remarks at some length that every careful reader may see for himself the perversion of God's word, stamped on nearly every sentence. "I am commanded to wash the saints' feet if needful," argues our friend. "If needful" is a hitching of his own manufacture, for the word of God does not say so. And according to his mode of reasoning it was very inconsistent in Paul to teach the Corinthians that when they came together to eat the Lord's Supper and any hunger he should eat at home. Our friend, judging from his argument, could see no use of eating at all unless hungry. And on the same hypothesis he should not "break the loaf" to any one unless they were hungry, or "if needful" of it! Nor hand the "cup" to those that are not thirsty! Neither should our friend administer baptism to those that are outwardly clean—only attend to it for "necessary uses." O consistency, thou art a jewel!

Can it be possible our friend, in alluding to the language of the Savior—"He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet but is clean every whit, and ye are clean, but not all"—would have us to believe there is no deeper meaning couched in those words than simply an allusion to the external uncleanness of the disciples' feet? Such an idea is shocking to the sensitive christian mind! Does not the following verse fully explain the matter where it is said: "For he knew who should betray him: therefore said he, ye are not all clean." It was Judas' HEART THAT WAS NOT CLEAN. Here is the key that unlocks the whole secret, and makes it as plain as the noon day sun in a clear sky, that feet-washing has a cleansing efficacy of a spiritual signification! "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." John 15: 3. How clean through the word? By an active faith and strict obedience to the word they were made "clean through the word." If the Savior washed his disciples' feet merely for "necessary uses," that is, washed them because they were soiled, would not Peter have known what it was for? The Savior emphatically says: "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shall know hereafter." A Campbell's version will by no means be instrumental in extricating our friend from the dilemma into which he has fallen. As in this country "sandals" are not worn, but in their stead high-topped boots, laced gaiters, &c., are the custom, our friend has but one more step to take—one more word to say like the juggler: Presto, it is gone! Blotted out, gone forever gone! And thus throw off that much of the yoke the early christian had to bear. Blessed consummation of custom and fashion!

Our friend next endeavors to show, that, under the old dispensation, feet-washing was a part of the duties belonging to acts of hospitality, and that it was the work of a menial. And after referring the reader to some six or eight different passages in the Old Testament Scriptures where washing of feet is spoken of, he says "I do not recollect of any other occurrences in the Old Testament of washing feet." He did not recollect the command of the Lord to Moses to make a laver of brass for "Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands and their feet thereat. So they shall wash their hands and their feet that they die not: and it shall be a statute forever to them." Exodus 30: 19, 20. Now it was not said they should wash only when their hands and feet were soiled or for "necessary uses," but "when they come near to the altar to minister." The penalty was death if they did not wash. So it was said to Peter: "if I wash thee not thou hast no part with me."

We shall now adduce a few testimonies proving beyond a doubt that feet washing and the communion of Christ's broken body and shed blood, were instituted at the same time and place. 1st. John tells us in chapter 13 that Christ washed his disciples, feet, sat down and ate with them; tells us it was a supper that was made ready or finished, consequently it was a supper that he ate with them. And we learn that after he had been discoursing with them for a time he said, "arise let us go hence," chapter 14: 13. He however continued his discourse, and when they did "go hence," they went over the brook Cedron, where was a garden, and he was taken by the Jews and bound.—See John 18: 1 to 13.

Now if we turn to Matt. 26 we find the Savior ate a supper (at least a meal in the evening) with his disciples, and at the supper or passover, (call it what you please) he instituted the communion. From the supper spoken of in John 13, at which feet-washing was instituted, they went out to where the Savior was taken. Here in Matt. 26, where we have an account of the communion being instituted, we find it is also said they "went out," and soon after the Savior was apprehended by the Jews. Consequently it is evident to every intelligent mind that the supper spoken of by John and the meal alluded to, as shown above, refer to the same thing, time, and place. Positively the one is identified with the other.

2nd. John, in chapter 13: 21, 27, tells us the traitor was pointed out at the supper where feet-washing was instituted: Mathew 26: 21, 25, and Luke 22: 21, 23, tell us that the traitor was pointed out at the time the communion was instituted; that is, while eating that last meal with his disciples. And the language used as stated by John and the other Evangelists in pointing out Judas as the traitor, is, in substance the same. Then it follows as a fact they all allude to the same meal, same time and same place. To say the traitor was pointed out twice and two days intervened between the time of pointing him out first and last, and the disciples were so forgetful as to have to ask again who it was, is a dogma, too absurd to be admitted for a moment.

3rd. Christ says to Peter just after washing feet and eating supper: "the cock shall not crow till thou hast denied me thrice." Matthew, Mark, and Luke tell us this language was used to Peter just after eating the meal where the communion was instituted. See John 13: 38; Mat. 26: 34; Mark 14: 30; Luke 22: 34. The next morning following feet-washing the Lord's Supper, and the Communion, Peter did deny his Master and the cock did crow, according to the four evangelists. Such was the fact. Then who dare say they do not all allude to the same meal, time and place, or that feet-washing was not instituted in connection with the Lord's Supper and Communion. (I use the term ommuCnion separate from the Lord's Supper, as the bread and wine, emblems of Christ's broken body and shed blood no where in the New Testament are called, by the inspired writers, the Lord's Supper.) It is so plain, that he who runs may read, that feet-washing, the Lord's Supper, and the Communion, were instituted the self same night, at the same place; all given in commanding terms by the great Head of the Church, and "what God has joined together let not man put asunder."

Our friend concludes thus: "But until they" ("errorists" as he calls those who practice feet-washing as an ordinance,) "can show us it is good and profitable for a brother or sister to strip off boots or shoes in the house of the Lord and to have clean feet washed, we shall be compelled patiently to bear the slander "Too proud!" Certainly it is "good and profitable," when the Lord says: "If ye know these things HAPPY are ye if ye DO them." And "If I then your Lord and Master have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example that YE SHOULD DO as I have done to you." And again "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

The "whole fabric" has not tumbled into 'ruins.' The jarring of our friend has only settled it firmer on the "rock." The "main prop" stands, because the building is firm in all its parts; its walls are impregnable!—"The gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

If the intimation of our friend, that error will yield when "driven for refuge into the very bosom of absurdity," be true, we anticipate happy results in our effort to exhibit his medley of errors before the mirror of divine truth. If, the truth has not driven his theories "into the very bosom of absurdity" we have a very inadequate conception of the power of the word of God, or meaning of terms. J. S. FLORY.

True prayer is the breathing out of what God has planted or first breathed within us. It is the cries of the man within for God and Heaven from which he has been separated. Like as the infant which has been separated from its mother reaches out for and cries to her, so the infant heavenly life which has been separated from natural home reaches out and cries through prayer to be again re-united with its home above. It is like the longings of a traveler separated far from home and loved ones who thinks of the dear ones he left behind him, and longs to be again in their loved embrace.

———:o:———

Waiting upon God continually, will abate your unnecessary cares and sweeten your neces sary ones.

Speak Low.

I know some houses, well-built and handsomely furnished, where it is not pleasant to be even a visitor. Sharp, angry tones resound through them from morning till night, and the influence is as contagious as the measles, and much more to be dreaded in a household. The children catch it, and it lasts for life. A friend had such a neighbor within hearing of her house, and even Poll Parrot has caught the tone, and delights in screaming and scolding, until she has been sent into the country to improve her habits. Children catch cross tones quicker that parrots, and it is a much more expensive habit. Where mother sets the example, you will scarcely hear a pleasant word among the children in the play with each other. Yet the discipline of such a family is weak and irregular. The children expect just so much scolding before they do anything they are bidden, while in many a home where the low, firm voice of the mother, or a decided look of her eye is law, they never think of disobedience, either in or out of her sight.

O, mothers, it is worth a great deal to cultivate that "excellent thing in women," a low, sweet voice. If you are ever so much tried by the mischievous or wilful pranks of the little ones, speak low. It will be a great help to you, even to try and be patient and cheerful, if you cannot wholly succeed. Anger makes you wretched, and your children also. Impatient, angry tones never did the heart good, but plenty of evil. Read what Solomon says of them, and remember that he wrote with an inspired pen. You can not have the excuse for them that they lighten your burdens any, for they only make them ten times heavier. For your own, as well as for your children's sake, learn to speak low. They will remember that one tone when you are under the willows. So, too, would they remember a harsh and angry voice. Which legacy will you leave to your children?

True Courtesy.—Real courtesy is very different from the courtesy which blooms in the sunshine of love and the smile of beauty, and withers and cools toil. Show me the man who can quit the brilliant society of the young to listen to the kindly voice of age; who can hold cheerful converse with one whom years have deprived of charms. Show me the man of generous impulses, who is always ready to help the poor and needy; show me the man who treats unprotected maidenhood as he would the heiress, surrounded by the protection of rank, riches and family; show me the man who never forgets for an instant the delicacy, the respect that is due to a woman, in any condition or class; show me such a man and you show me a gentleman—nay, you show me better—you show me a Christian.

A visitor once went to a Sabbath school, where he saw a little boy and girl on the same seat, who were brother and sister. In a moment of thoughtless passion the little boy struck his sister. The little girl was provoked, and raised her hand to return the blow. Her face showed that rage was working within, and her clenched fist was aimed at her brother, when her teacher caught her eye. "Stop, my dear," said she; "you had much better kiss your brother than strike him."—The look and the words reached her heart. Her hand dropped. She threw her arms around his neck and kissed him. The boy was moved. He could have stood against a blow, but he could not withstand a sister's kiss. He compared the provocation he had given her with the return she had made, and the tears rolled down his cheeks. This affected the sister, and with her little handkerchief she wiped away his tears. But the sight of her kindness only made him cry the faster; he was completely subdued. Her teacher then told the children always to return a kiss for a blow, and they would never get any more blows.

Promise little and do much.

Meeting for Public Worship.

BY D. B. MENTZER.

Awhile, O God, we leave our care,
To worship at thy sovereign feet;
Now to thy temple we repair,
Thy gracious presence here to meet.

We come in thy great name, O Lord,
To hear thy truth proclaim'd to-day:
Do thou make plain thy Holy Word,
That souls may find "the narrow way."

May those who speak the words of life
A door of sacred ut'rance have;
With girded loins and power rife,
Succeed a straying soul to save.

O blessed spot! O sweet retreat,
Where gospel words are spoken free;
But blessed more and far more sweet,
The courts where saints their Savior see.

Miscellaneous Selections.

BY SILAS THOMAS.

Your House.

Be true to yourself at the start, young man,
Be true to yourself and God;
Ere you build your house mark well the spot
Test all the ground and build you not
On the sand of the shaking sod.

Dig, dig the foundation deep young man,
Plant firmly the outer wall;
Let the props be strong, and the roof be high
With an opening turret towards the sky,
Through which heaven's dews may fall.

Let this be the room of the soul, young man,
When shadows shall herald cares;
A chamber with never a roof or a thatch
To hinder the light—or door, or latch
To shut in the spirit's prayer!

Build slow and sure—'tis for life, young man,
A life that outlives the breath;
For who shall gainsay the Holy Word?
"Their works do follow them," saith the Lord
"Therein there is no death."

Build deep, and high, and broad, young man,
As the needful case demands;
Let your title-deeds be clear and bright,
Till you enter your claim to the Lord of Light,
For the house not made with hands.

One Year Ago.

One year ago a ringing voice,
A clear blue eye
And clustering curls of sunny hair,
Too fair to die.

Only a year—no voice, no smile,
No glance of eye,
No clustering curls of golden hair,
Fair but to die.

One year ago, what loves, what schemes
Far into life!
What joyous hopes, what high resolves,
What generous strife!

The silent picture on the wall,
The burial stone,
Of all that beauty, life and joy
Remain alone!

One year, one year, one little year,
And so much gone!
And yet the even flow of life
Moves calmly on.

The grave grows green, the flowers bloom
Above the head;
No sorrowing tint of leaf or spray
Says he is dead.

No pause, or hush, or merry birds
That sing above,
Tell us how coldly sleeps below
The form we love.

Where hast thou been this year, beloved?
What hast thou seen?
What rising fair, what glorious life,
Where hast thou been?

The veil! the veil! so thin, so strong!
'Twixt us and thee;
The mystic veil; when shall it fall,
That we may see?

Not dead, not sleeping, not even gone.
But present still,
And waiting for the coming hour
Of God's sweet will.

Lord of the living and the dead,
Our Savior dear!
We lay in silence at thy feet
This sad, sad year.

"I Hold Still."

Pain's furnace heat within me quivers,
God's breath upon the flame doth blow,
And all my heart in anguish shivers,
And trembles at the fiery glow;
And yet I whisper, "as God will!"
And in its hottest fire hold still.

He comes and lays my heart, all heated,
On the hard anvil, minded so
Into his own fare shape to beat it
With his great hammer, blow on blow,
And yet I whisper, "as God will!"
And at his heaviest blows hold still.

He takes my softened heart and beats it;
The sparks fly off at every blow;
He turns it o'er and o'er, and heats it,
And lets it cool, and makes it glow;
And yet I whisper, "as God will!"
And in his mighty hand hold still.

Why should I murmur? for the sorrow
Thus only longer-lived would be;
Its end may come, and will to-morrow,
When God has done his work in me;
Lo! I say trusting, "as God will!"
And trusting to the end, hold still.

He kindles for my profit purely,
Afflictions glowing fiery brand,
And all his heaviest blows are surely Inflicted by a Master hand;
Lo! I say, praying, "as God will!"
And hope in Him, and suffer still.

Thoughts of Heaven.

When I think of that beautiful place "over there," where all the redeemed of the earth will one day gather, and where meetings and partings will not be known, where the inhabitants will never say I am sick, where we shall have no need of the sun, but the Lamb is the light thereof, my heart swells with rapturous emotion, and "I long, O, I long to be there," and in this the anticipation cannot possibly exceed the reality. While we tabernacle here in the earth, we often have more comfort in the anticipation of a thing than in the reality: but no disappointment can be felt in the realization of the glories of the heavenly world; for eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, what God hath prepared for those that love him. We may pass a long lifetime in keen affliction and sufferings, but one breath wafted from the Celestial City, or one smile from the once crucified Savior, one hour with Him on the great white throne, will make ample amends for it all, and we shall prove the truth of the Word of God, that these things are not worthy to be compared with the glory that is revealed to us. Much of the way up "Zion's Hill" is marked with perplexity, tribulation, and sorrow: but when the boatman who is waiting to take us across the river shall have landed us safely, all toil and pain will have been forgotten, and we shall have nothing to do but cast our crowns at His feet, and cry, Holy is the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

Are you ready?

Are you ready for life with all its multiplied cares and responsibilities, its trials and temptations, its adversities and afflictions, its sorrows and disappointments? Are you ready for death, its pains and weakness, its farewells and partings? Are you ready for the judgment, its review and its exposure of your inner life, as well as your outward acts and spoken words? Are you ready for the august tribunal where all must appear, to hear from the lips of Christ a welcome to the joys of heaven, or the doom of banishment which shall consign the soul to darkness and despair? Are you ready to walk with the saints in light, ready to enter upon the enjoyments and enjoy the society of the better land? If you are not ready for these things, think most seriously how short the time for preparation for salvation; remember that it is alone through repentance towards God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and a holy life that you can get ready for the future.—Let not another moment pass without giving your earnest attention to this important work of life. Rest content with no state of mind short of assurance.

Our Pilgrimage.

We are passing towards final rest ourselves. Do not regret it if the eyes grow dim. You will see better by and by. If the ear is growing heavy, do not be sorry. If your youth is passing and your beauty fading, do not mourn. If your hand trembles and your foot is unsteady with age, be not depressed in spirit. With every impediment, with every sign of the taking down of this tabernacle, remember that it is at the striking of the tent that the march may begin, and that when next you pitch your tabernacle it shall be on an undisturbed shore, and that there, with eyes unwet with tears, through an atmosphere undimmed with clouds, and before a God unveiled and never to be wrapped in darkness any more—that there, looking back upon this world of ignorance, and suffering, and trouble, and upon the hardships of the way, you will, with full and discerned reason, lift up your voice and give thanks to God, and say "there was not one sorrow too piercing." And you will thank God, in that land, for the very things that ring tears from our eyes in this. Look, then, to that better land, out of all the trouble of the way, sigh for it, pray for it, and enter into it.

"WE'LL ALL MEET AGAIN IN THE MORNING."—Such was the exclamation of a dying child as the red rays of the sunset streamed through the casement: "Good-by, papa, Good-by! Mamma has come for me to-night. Don't cry, papa! we'll all meet again in the morning!"—It was as if an angel had spoken to the father, and his heart grew lighter under his burden; for something assured him that his little one had gone to Him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."—There is something cheerful to all who are in trouble in this: "We'll all meet again in the morning." It rouses up the fainting soul like a trumpet-blast, and frightens away forever the dark shapes thronging the avenues of the outer life. Clouds may gather upon our path, disappointments gather around us like an army with banners: but all this cannot destroy the hope within us if we have this motto upon our lips: "All will be right in the morning." If you were to die to-night would it be well with you in the morning?"

None Liveth for Himself.

God has written on the flowers that sweeten the air, on the breeze that rocks the flowers upon the stem, upon the rain-drop that refreshes the spring of moss that lifts its head in the desert, upon the deep chambers, upon every penciled shell that sleeps in the caverns of the deep, no less than upon the mighty sun that warms and cheers millions of creatures which live in its light—upon all his works he was written, "None liveth for himself."

Many men pass fifty or sixty years in the world, and when they are just going out of it, they begin to think themselves, and step back, as it were, to do something which they had all the while forgotten, to wit: the main business for which they came into the world, to repent of their sins, and reform their lives, and make their peace with God, and so thus prepare for eternity.

Every hour life's sands are sliding from beneath incautious feet, and with sin's fatal flower in the incautious hand, the trifler goes to his doom. The requiem of each departure is an echo of the Savior's question: What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

It is immortality that makes life a valuable blessing: without it life would be an unprofitable and burdensome trifle, preserved with anxiety and quitted with terror.

God does not only send affliction to take your spirit out of your flesh, but your flesh out of your spirit.

Our Visit to Va.

As yet we have had no offer of companionship upon a preaching mission across the country to place of next Annual Meeting. Perhaps we unthinkingly threw out insinuations which were not intended. We did not intend to signify that we must go in a buggy, and that we expect our companion to bear all the expenses. By no means. We always bear our full share of expenses. But we have no horse of our own, and unless we can loan one we cannot go in that way. However we know what we can do. God being our helper: we can walk; and if any ministering brother has a mind to take us up "in that line," let him say so. We are not a noted pedestrian, but we have walked on less important missions. Unless an arrangement is effected soon we shall be obliged to abandon the project, as it will be too late to make the announcement. We wish to arrive at place of meeting several days before the time appointed. Alone we could not expect to undertake so long and laborious a journey.

We are also obliged to put off the time of starting until after our District Meeting, which convenes on the 26th instant.—We could not well set out before the 30th of the present month. Will start either from Johnstown or Bedford, as preferred.

Answers to Correspondents.

Easter Eggs.—The origin of the connection of eggs with Easter is not in the least of remote antiquity. The Easter Sunday [illegible] to [illegible] Christian would [illegible] on Easter day. In Germany, instead of the egg itself, the people offer a print of it, with some lines inscribed. The custom is supposed to have been originally Jewish.

S. L. B. Why do you withhold your name? Have we not positively declared that we will not insert marriage notices unless accompanied by the full name of a responsible person? How would you like if X. T. Y. would send a notice that you had been married to so or so, and were not true? We do not know who S. L. B. is. He may be an honest old brother, or he may be some wag who wants to "play a trick" on the parties. If it is desired that a marriage notice should be published, get the minister who performed the ceremony to send the notice. We want none except those married by the Brethren.

J. B. Shively, Pyrmont, Ind. You are right. But we cannot supply all the back Nos. You waited too long. We will send to 5—35.

Isaac Young, Carrollton, Ohio. Something must be wrong at your P. O. for your paper has been plainly addressed and regularly sent from our office.

J. R. Holsinger, Mt. Morris, Ills. Our books say you have $83.00 credit. The Bible Dictionary has been sent to your address.

Samuel Beatty, Illinois City, Ills. It is all right. We do sometimes forget to acknowledge "moneys received."

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required in every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Henry:—Please announce through the Companion, that the District Council Meeting of the North Western District of Ohio, will be held in the Eagle Creek branch Hancock Co., on the 7th of May next. A general invitation given to all brethren wishing to attend. Brethren from the West going to the Annual Meeting, or brethren from the East wishing to attend this District Meeting, will please stop off at Dunkirk, from whence they will be conveyed by the brethren to the place of meeting.

By order of the church.

ELI BEAGLE.

A Letter to the Brethren and Sisters in Bourbon Co. Kansas.

Having noticed a few lines (in Companion No. 11,) written by sister Catharine Bolinger, brought our visit to them afresh to our mind; and not being at meeting to-day I thought I would spend part of the time in penning a few thoughts of encouragement to those brethren and sisters in their isolated situation; having no preaching for almost six months; whereas many of us can go to meeting every Sunday, and then perhaps see from three to six ministering brethren sitting behind the table. Whereas two, or at most three, is the gospel order, and all that is profitable at one meeting, consequently some must bury their talent for want of room to occupy; while numbers of such pitiful cries as the one above referred to, are in our land. While some are feasting to the full, others are starving for the want of a shepherd to feed and care for them. Think of this dear brethren where one or two, and perhaps more could be spared without the flock sustaining injury! Will not such cries come up to the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth? and can we stand justified before God by turning a deaf ear, when we could easily respond? And I would here say, that in all my travels through the South-west I saw no place (in my judgment) that there was a better prospect of good being done, and soon having a large congregation of brethren, than in Bourbon Co. Kansas, and if worldly advantages and speculations must be held up before we can induce any to go (we hope better things though we thus speak) that is the very place to go. Climate and soil is good, and land cheap, &c.

And to you my dear brethren and sisters I would say: Pray the Lord of the harvest that he would send you a laborer and he will hear. In due time your prayer will be answered, like Elijah's; though perhaps not the first nor even the second time, but he will avenge them that cry unto him day and night; and I think I can see the little cloud already even larger than a man's hand rising in the north east, which we think will soon spread over your little vineyard and abundance of blessings be showered upon you; and you be screened from the rays of the hot sun (like Jonah under the gourd when he complained to the Lord). And your drouth-smitten little vineyard will flourish like a garden by the river side. Altho' you are deprived of one of the most powerful means appointed by our blessed Lord, for a growth in grace, yet by a strong perseverence in the work appointed us as parents, in bringing up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and as members of the holy body of our blessed Lord, let our light so shine that others may see our good works, being found in all holy conversation and godliness; adding to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly-kindness, charity: by so doing you will be preparing the minds of the people; clearing away the rubbage of prejudice, and consequently have a good soil for the brethren to sow the seed on, when they come among you. At the same time you will be laying up in store for yourselves, a good foundation against the time to come. O, brethren and sisters! keep that which is committed to your trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, &c., and neglect not the assembling of yourselves together; to read the Scriptures, to sing and pray, and admonish one another; and so much the more as we see the day approaching. Again, the Companion and Visitor are a means of encouragement; and should be found in every family, especially where there are children, and no privilege of hearing the brethren preach. But says the objecter, there is so much controversial matter in them that I think they do more harm than good. I admit that there is too much controversy.—Brethren should write more about practical piety; more about the love of God, and self-denial; and not so much on questions and subjects of no importance. When we have bad companions we try to improve them, not cast them off. So our blessed Lord did; and let us do so in this case.

ENOCH EBY.

Duncannon, Ill.

Brother Holsinger:—I see that you desire to know the best rail-road route to the place of next Annual Meeting. I think the best would be by Baltimore and Washington.—The other route would be nearer, but there would be several places to stage over: from Winchester to Strasburg, (about 18 miles) and from Harrisonburg to Staunton.—You can come by way of Washington and Alexandria, and Orange and Manassa roads and get into the valley. That is the way we want the brethren to come, that they may see our country; and perhaps some of them will settle among us. We have some good land, if we had Pennsylvania farmers on it. Encourage all to come; they need not be afraid of the people here.

The way by private conveyance for the Shenandoah Valley would be to cross the Potomac at Williamsport or Martinsburg. You will find Brethren scattered all along but not many, and I can not give names. Brother Daniel Baker lives near Newtown, and brother Tabler near Middletown, both in Frederick Co. They are in the first organized church this side of the Potomac. Brother George Shaver, in Shenandoah Co., is next; his address is Maurertown. Jacob Wine is next; address Moores Store; and J. Neff Mt. Jackson. There are 8 or 10 more in rotation, not necessary to name; the appointments can be sent on in time. We have a good pike through the valley.

Some brethren traveling by horse-back might come by way of Hampshire, Hardy, Grant, and Pendleton counties. There are Brethren in those counties. It is always refreshing to hear another voice, if it is the doctrine.

We hope brethren will start in time, so that they may spend a little time with us before the meeting, and not be under a rush all the time. Write to some of the brethren named, and they will make appointments for you. I live 3 miles N. W. of New Market, and my house is open for any of the brethren who wish to stop. We give such as we have and glad to see them come. Send all you can.

SAMUEL H. MYERS.

Brother Henry: I am taking the Companion the second year, and the more I read it, the greater desire I have to read it. By subscribing for the Companion, we are not favoring the office alone, but ourselves. We think we have the right view: that is this. The paper is published not to make money, but to instruct and to inform the people. I am led to believe that it has its desired effect upon a great many minds. In reading it just now, it brings fresh to my memory, that life is the time to serve God; that we might make our peace-calling and election sure with him, while he spares our unprofitable lives here on earth. We have no promise of any future happiness, if we do not comply with the will of the Lord: that is, to do his commandments.—My Christian friends let us not be readers and hearers of the gospel only; but be doers of the same.—Let us not be as the Pharisees, say and do not. God undoubtedly knows our hearts' desire. If we say we love God, let our speech be yea yea, nay nay, and our light so shine that the world may see that we are striving to meet God's divine approbation. Let all bear in mind that our stay here on earth is but momentary; and that we are hastening on to our graves. Then let us live in the church militant, that we may live in the eternal church triumphant.

House Burned.

The house of sister Morningstar, and nearly all in it, was entirely destroyed by fire, in the month of December last, leaving her in a destitute condition. Sister Morningstar is old and sickly. Two of her sons are with her, one of whom is badly afflicted with rheumatism, not able to do anything. We appeal to the Brotherhood for aid for her.—We do not feel able to supply the necessary aid. She is obliged to rebuild and has not the means.

We make this appeal especially to the brethren of the Middle District of Pennsylvania. Contributions may be raised and sent with the delegates to the District Meeting. It is in this branch of the Church (James Creek) that our sister resides. In case it does not suit to send as above directed, the money can be sent to Daniel Brumbaugh or the writer, at Coffee Run, Huntingdon Co., Pa.

P. P. BRUMBAUGH.

Brother Henry:—We are still enjoying good health; thank the Lord for all his blessings. We are still trying to hold forth the truth as it is in Jesus, but have not received any lately into the fellowship of the Son of God; yet we feel assured if we sow in faith we will also gather sheaves ere long.

Query answered.

The query referred to may be found in Companion No. 9, of this volume. It is presented in three parts. 1. "Where did Judas put the money?" This we shall answer in a few words: he cast it in the temple; for, says the Scripture, "he (Judas) cast down the pieces of silver in the temple."

2nd. The querist wishes information "on the death of Judas." He wishes, doubtless, to know the circumstances of his death. In the gospel according to Matthew, twenty-seventh chapter, we read: "And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself." And in the acts of the Apostles 1: 18 we read: "This man (Judas) purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out." There may seem to be a little difficulty to reconcile these two passages of Scripture; Qet we think there is no contradiction. That he went and hanged himself, and that he also fell a certain distance, must be very clear to a careful reader. All that is hard to comprehend at first sight, is, how all this could happen. To what he hanged himself, or what preparations were made if any, is not said. And what means were employed in committing this horrible tragedy, we don't know. Whether he used a rope, or a line, or something else, is not certain. But I think we are safe in saying he hanged himself first, and then, falling from that position, his bowels gushed out.

3rd. "That he might go to his own place." This evidently means the place he made choice of, his appropriate abode, the place for which he was fitting himself, the place of torment. Matt. 25: 46; 26: 24.—Psalms 9: 17. Prov. 9: 17.

Queries.

As I see the brethren are sending queries to the Companion, I think there would be no harm done if I would ask an explanation of John 10: 9. "Shall go in and out and find pasture." In and out where? Will some one please answer?

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Poweshiek Co., Iowa, March 18th, sister SARAH, wife of brother Richard CHEESMAN; aged 67 years, 10 months, and 12 days. She had been in delicate health for over a year. Funeral services by Elder Jacob Blower and the writer, from Rev. 14: 13.

J. S. SNYDER.

In Indian Creek branch, Westmoreland Co. Pa. Feb. 24th, sister CATHARINE FLACK, wife of brother John Flack, aged 68 years, 10 months, and 11 days. Disease was Dropsy. Her suffering and affliction she bore with christian fortitude during her brief illness. She remembered the words of her crucified Redeemer, by the apostle, where he says, "Is any sick among you, let him call for the Elders of the Church, and let them anoint him with oil in the name of theLord," &c. After this was done she expressed herself resigned to the will of the Lord, and died in faith and hope of a blessed immortality. The occasion was improved by Elder Joseph Borger and others, from Rev. 14: 13, to a large concourse of people, and many relatives and friends. The occasion was a very impressive one. Only one of five children was permitted to witness the solemn scene, the other four residing in the Western States.

THE Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The Tongue.

I said, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me. Psalm 39 : 1.

No other subject in the Bible demands more serious, prayerful, and daily consideration than the proper use of the tongue: as even a member of the body is to be used as an instrument of righteousness. Rom. 6 : 13. And as the tongue is set forth as being, "full of deadly poison, a world of iniquity, set on fire of hell," &c. (all of offensive elements,) out of the same body represented as being harder to tame than the wild and ferocious beasts of the forests, and harder to control than the suites on the sea, when driven by the mighty storm: as the wild & vicious steed, (Jam. 3 : 3) who of us is not made to tremble when we remember that we profoundly carry about with us an element of the same nature? and lest it be brought to the door of our breast and be accepted, we therefore pray like David, "Set a watch to my mouth, O Lord; keep the door of my lips." Psalm 141 : 3. Worn is the easiest line most quickly, and most likely to wear out? Wear there is a multitude and excitement, go into our cities: where we go to public sales, or to the village, or wherever we will be before us, and the unbridle lives testify.

Sad experience and observation like taught us, that, if we do not take heed to our ways, we will sin with our tongue, in foolish talking and jesting. Vain and years of laughter, and thus multiply our idle words for which we must give an account; for by our words we shall be condemned, or by my words shall we be justified. Matt. 12 : 36, 37. How important, then, that we be "swift to hear, but slow to speak," especially when the words are before us, and our conversation is beneath the gospel; not with [illegible] just as great sensitiveness and worldly interests of [illegible] thus exhibiting a worldly mind, not [illegible] of worship, will the [illegible] neglect in a social capacity as we [illegible] at home? Our conversation should be [illegible] and less much about [illegible] and [illegible] at least [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Good Works.

In vindicating the truths of the Gospel, and the the commands of our Blessed Master, we are sometimes charged, and falsely charged, with building our hopes of heaven alone in our works. I said, in No. 12 of the Companion, (present volume) that "faith without works is dead," and we say so by the authority of God's Word: so also is work, without faith and love to God. "Herein," says Jesus, "is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit: so shall ye be my disciples."

Now Paul tells us what kind of fruit the Savior meant, and what God expects from us. It is, "Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Gal. 5: 22.

Now if we bear such fruits as these we shall be Christ's disciples indeed; not his disciples in name, profession and outward appearance, as is unhappily the case with too many in our day. Our Savior tells us, many shall say to him in that day, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name have cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works?" To whom he will reply, "I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Matt. 7: 22, 23.

How confident such that they were the disciples of Christ, yet after all Christ will not own them as such, because they wrought iniquity. They did not LIVE as it becomes his disciples, being "enemies to the cross of Christ:" professing to know God, yet denying him by their works: honoring the Savior with their lips, yet crucifying him afresh by their conduct, and putting him to open shame. What can be expected but woe to such Christians! Well would it have been for them never to have heard the name of Christ; yea, if they had never been born. For what will Christ say to them at the last day, not "come ye blessed," but depart ye cursed into everlasting fire.

The preaching of the Gospel by the Apostles Paul and James, was with much wisdom and ability. They were both inspired by the very same Spirit; yet the one will seem to many to have spoken inconsistently with the other. But a little reflection, and careful examination will serve to reconcile every seeming contradiction.

James says, "Ye see how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only." James 2: 24; and Paul, "Therefore, we conclude that a man is justified by faith." Paul was here proving to the unbelieving Jews that they, as well as the Gentiles, must be saved by faith, and his argument was thus: "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God;" all have broken the moral law of God; no one, therefore, can be saved by that law, which exacts a perfect obedience. We say then with Paul, "we are justified by faith" alone, but not by that faith which is alone, or exclusive of good works. We are told that in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but faith which "worketh by love." Gal. 5: 6. Paul's prayer for his Colossian brethren, was, "that they might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work." Col. 1: 10. "This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works; these things are good and profitable unto men." Titus 3: 8. Therefore we say that faith, if it hath not works, is dead being alone; we say so on the authority of the Bible. A genuine faith will necessarily produce love, and love will consequently produce obedience; hence, "if ye love me," says our Savior, "keep my commandments." "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." And again, "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love, even as I have kept my father's commandments, and abide in his love." We see here plainly the connection between the precept and the promise. No license what ever is given to transgress any one particular commandment; but the commandment is universal. And we can, each one of us, by careful examination of God's word, with the assistance of the Holy Spirit, know whether we do or do not keep all the commandments of our blessed Lord and Master Jesus Christ. And whether the keeping of all the commandments is joyous or grievous to us. We can, each one of us, know whether we yield our whole hearts to him, desiring him to mould our wills into a conformity with his divine will; or whether we seek to compromise the matter, and to purchase, by our obedience to some of the least burdensome of his commandments, a right to dispense with some of the more (so-called) obnoxious and self-denying ones. And although we may be charged with attaching too much weight to the commands of our blessed Master, in obeying them, we should receive the admonition which the Savior has given us: "When" says he, "ye have done all those things which are commanded you, say, we are unprofitable servants: we have only done that which was our duty to do." Luke 17: 10. David felt so, or else he would not have said, "Enter not into judgment with thy servant, for in thy sight," says he, "shall no man living be justified." Psalms 143: 2.

We should therefore carefully examine ourselves by the standard of God's word, lest our hopes of Heaven should be found to be built, not on the Rock, but on the sand, and should fail us at the judgment day.—The grand test, is whether we know and love Christ; do we keep his commandments? for saith Jesus, "he that saith he knoweth me, and keepeth not my commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." 1st John 2: 3, 4. Such is the language of Scripture. It is clear then, that all who would be saved, must use "all diligence to make their calling and election sure."

Meditations.

Sitting upon a large moss-covered rock beside the dug road that winds up the steep mountain-side, my tired steed by my side, pencil and scrap-book in hand, with a kind of irresistible impulse, I transmit to paper some of the numerous thoughts that rush to the mind while musing upon the scenes around. It is a beautiful afternoon in the month of March. The sun pours down his genial rays upon my throbbing temples as I here linger for a few moments to rest. Above me looms up the almost perpendicular rock walls of nature's own building,—high up upon the summit I discern the evergreen shrub or scrubby oak. Gazing over the precipice at my feet, I see the tree tops far below me. Down, down, thousands of feet I cast my eyes and behold the winding channel and moving waters of New River hastening onward in a mad, rushing and rumbling manner. Up from near its banks ascends, in lazy columns, the blue smoke from the sugar camp. From the opposite shore abruptly arises cliff after cliff, piled one upon another thousands of feet in height, and the summit of which seems to touch the few scattering clouds. Away from the busy bustling world, surrounded by the handiwork of Nature's God, standing out in bold relief of his majesty and power, my very soul is filled with meditations upon the past, present and future. My mind reverts back to the times I have traveled this same road in company with a fellow laborer, who now roams over the beautiful plains of Mo., his labors of love are manifest there while fate has decreed I shall yet linger and labor for the common cause among the people of those mountain districts. Over hill and dale, mountain and rivers, I wander often alone, (not alone neither if God be with me.) As I gaze at the hurrying, rushing waters before me, hastening on to the great Ocean, I seem to see away down into the dim vista of futurity—scan in the reflecting mirror of God's divine revelations, scenes transpiring in the celestial world. Those passing waters faintly represent the human race rushing on to the ocean of eternity. Here we see and experience the rising and meanderings of the course of human life,—the tide can not be staid, onward, onward is the destiny of all.

Soon, very soon, the great ocean of Eternity will open up to view. Looking to that period now we seem to see millions entering. How many, oh! how many are drawn away to the gloomy vale of darkness, to the yawning abyss of destruction, from whence arises the rolling smoke of the "bottomless pit," and horrid sounds of "weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth." Around the chambers of everlasting ruin Angels of darkness hover, dragging thousands of thousands into the whirling vortex, where they shall "burn" forever and ever. Turning from this doleful picture we behold one more desirable to look upon. Let the eyes gaze long on the bright fields of immortality, see the happy throng basking in the sunshine of God's love, sitting on thrones of Glory with palms of victory in their hands, singing the everlasting songs of bliss.—Tuning their harps to the heavenly strains that issue from the angelic choir ever and anon falling down with the "four and twenty elders," before him that sits on the throne, casting their crowns before the throne, and crying "Thou art worthy O Lord to receive glory, and power." All is joy, love and peace, having come up out of "tribulation" and now free from sin, sorrow and sickness. Eternal life their reward through the Lamb. Blessed be God for Jesus Christ our Lord.

This world is not our Home.

When shall we be separated from this world of sorrow? This world is not our home; no, by no means.—We do not wish to stay here in this world always, for there is no lasting pleasure, peace or comfort that can be obtained from it. Those pleasures that it affords are only for a season, and they soon fade away. Yes, those sinful pleasures which the wicked enjoy to-day, they may not enjoy to-morrow, and perhaps not enjoy them any more forever; for we do not know what to-morrow may bring forth. It may bring forth death, and then the pleasures that earth can afford have disappeared and fled from us. We cannot take them with us into eternity. We will have to leave them behind. Then it would be well for us to turn our backs to the world, and set our faces Zionward, and "run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the Author and Finisher of our faith," believing that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. But some will say, I cannot leave the pleasures of this world, for my youthful friends and companions will not love me any more, and they will point the finger of scorn at me and say, Why is it that one so young should forsake the pleasures which the young so much enjoy?

O listen not to such delusive temptations. I am young myself, but I find it very pleasant to serve the Lord, and to do good. Jesus loves the young as well as the old. This world is not our home. Heaven is the Christian's home. How sweet the words: A home in Heaven! Oh, my dear young friends, do you really think if you would obey the Scriptures, it would make you miserable? Do you think if you were a christian you would never have any pleasure? Let me tell you what I know by experience. The pleasures you now enjoy will fade. The sweetest pleasures are enjoyed by those who obey God. What if our associates do laugh and point "the finger of scorn" at us, we shall go to meet all the saints on high, and how sweet and comforting is this thought!

Letter to a College Chum.

"Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth." 1 Cor. 8 : 1.

It is the grand distinction of Christianity that it works in us a sense of ignorance and folly as a fundamental subjective condition of salvation. The availability of the scheme of Redemption lies in its incomprehensibility. Had it been, in its establishment, sufficiently simple, as to its fundamental objective contents, for the feeblest intellect to grasp, it would have lacked the evidence of Divine Origin. And had it risen to an altitude where philosophy alone can soar, those who feel its need most, and for whom it is specially intended, would have derived no benefit from it. But who cannot believe, and, believing, feel the loving impulse of gratitude? We have in our community a lunatic, who could never be taught the alphabet; when the thrilling intelligence of the fall of Richmond and the surrender of Lee, reached us, he believed the report as readily as the wisest, and partook of the general joy. The most capacious mind is as little qualified to receive salvation distinctively by reason, as was that poor idiot the news of the result of Grant's final campaign, on the ground of comprehending all the principles and maneuvers embraced in the statement he believed without difficulty. Could we, by a course of training as fallen beings, reaching through a thousand millenniums, make a ground of faith in our reason, we would be all but God's in knowledge, and altogether devils in character. "Knowledge puffeth up." The weakest saint, whose intellect is utterly at fault in the simplest facts of Christianity, has, by faith, "the substance of things hoped for," which is no less than all the fulness of God. The eldest heavenly hierarch fails to sound the depths of the Christ-consciousness which is the peace and joy of the humblest believer's daily life. We need not make much progress in any branch of knowledge in order to be puffed up with the conceit that we know much. A few grains of knowledge, drawn from nature or the Bible, by our unsanctified powers, bloats and swells with a sense of self-importance, leaving just so much less room for knowledge by faith. In his incarnation, Christ did every thing, in a sense, as a man, but in the fundamental sense he did everything as above man. No mere man could attract such attention, receive such applause, and stand on so lofty a pinnacle of fame, without growing giddy, and evincing his vanity and love of adulation. But Jesus, being Divine from Eternity, and having absolute perfection as the basis of his life in the flesh, revealed to us the true ground of knowledge, and the true order of development. Inflation is as natural, as the result of knowledge, in the unrenewed heart, as it is for prussic acid to kill. The reputation of being learned is often a fatal snare even to those who for a while "did run well." Nothing but faith, and the knowledge thus obtained of God and ourselves, will keep knowledge from its legitimate effects—puffing up. This is only too manifest in the Brotherhood, in a variety of ways. It crops out in our periodicals, in our councils, congregational and synodical, and often in a manner so unbecoming that it requires a thorough baptism of Charity to pass it by without rebuke. All truth is unsearchable, having but one Fountain, and receiving it by faith, we at the same time receive it by love, which makes its communication a matter of joy and thankfulness, even if it come not in the mould of our own thought, or the exact phraseology of our liking. How often have I seen brethren, old and hoary-headed, present ideas which to them were new, although old to others, with an air of self-importance which but too clearly evinced the accretion of knowledge that puffeth up. To dive into the profoundest mysteries of revelation, and bring forth treasures of wisdom by which saints may be edified, and the prosperity of Zion augmented, puffs up the heart, in the absense of a Divine balance-power, equally with advancement in any other kind of knowledge. But for "the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost," the Bible, with its multiplied wonders, and its incentives to higher flights and deeper researches, would only be the means of our deeper ruin, as it doubtless is to myriads.—There is no truth that needs a deeper impression that the fact that "Knowledge puffeth up." Even the knowledge that God directly communicates by his Spirit, through faith, may slide out of the domain of the spiritual within us, and become a mere matter of reason and speculation, and thus become a bloating element as much as if we had employed our powers in the attainment of scientific lore. There is a kind of logic so common with some as to have degenerated into cant, aiming to depreciate certain kinds of knowledge, and certain modes of expression, while those who make it a matter of boast do not perceive that often, alas, they publish, in their strictures and denunciations, the humiliating evidence of the puffiness that springs from knowledge in wrong relation to faith. Knowledge about a thing, from the uncreated to the tiniest atom, must be a matter of reason, and necessarily tends to puff up the mind wrenched by sin from God; but the knowledge of truth must be a matter of faith, and makes us "wise unto salvation," by making us "partakers of the Divine Nature."

"Charity edifieth." Knowledge, apart from its primary Source, puffeth up, but love buildeth up. The one is grounded on the subjective, and has pride for its nursing mother: the other is based on the Objective, and has humility and self-renunciation as its condition of growth.—With talents to vie with Gabriel, and attainments to set the angels agaze, a man may be as ignorant in the christian sense, as a mule.—With intellection just above idiocy, a man may rank above angels in the interior knowledge of identity with the nature of Christ, through the out-pouring of that love, if we dwell in which we dwell in God, and God in us. As in Christ are "hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge," and as it is through him alone that the acquirements of human reason are set in the order of goodness, and light and power, so also are the secret mines of the heart laid open, and its wealth of affection coined in the mint of its rightful Owner, and stamped with the image and superscription of Jesus. The intellect is not to be dwarfed, but all its intricate powers set in motion by the inbeing of the Divine Presence. So the heart, with all the mysteries of its love, is to have every chamber filled, and every fibre thrilled, by the influx of the Holy Ghost. Christ came not to destroy any constitution element in humanity, but to rejuvenate, purify, and exalt. Natural affection gains depth and lustre by regeneration. Having the high honor of being "an habitation of God through the Spirit," it taxes every energy, and brings into requisition all its capabilities, in the great work of temple-building, daily adding strength and beauty to spiritual edifice, by inward polish to the individual structure, and by helping more firmly to cement the living stones of the temple general, and gathering in new material for the uprearing of the glorious fabric. Love is sweet and potent even in the unsanctified state, and must needs be sweeter and more mighty, more ravishing and controlling when God temples himself in the soul as the mainspring of all its motives and activities. Love is an Uncreated Essence, and wherever it flows it impresses the marks of its character. It is a mighty river that has its Fountain-head and terminus in Jesus, overflowing its banks in his humanity, and rolling its resistless tides out of his nail and spear wounds, down the steeps of Eternity for the renewal, edification, and ultimate glorification of poor sinful worms.

No wonder that the test of discipleship is placed right here. As nothing but love, Almighty Love, could atone for our sins and open up the new and living way to the mercy-seat and immortal glory, so it is only reasonable that the exhibition of this Godlike quality by us should be the criterion of our fitness for heaven. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, IF YE HAVE LOVE ONE TO ANOTHER." John 13: 35.

Let us ponder a few of the features that characterize Christian Love, so that we may know whether we are being built up, or aiding in the edification of others. Those who entertain a lofty opinion of themselves, often repair to the looking-glass, so that nothing may appear on their persons to their disadvantage. Even those so those who esteem Christ as "the Chief among ten thousand," daily stand before the reflector of the Gospel, so that "neither spot, nor wrinkle, nor any such thing," may render them repulsive in the eyes of the One altogether lovely. Genuine Christian Love is studious to avoid all cause of offence. Where the heart glows with love to Christ, we have a mantle large enough to "hide a multitude of sins," and we would sooner lie in sackcloth and ashes many days and nights wrestling for the victory over self, than manifest aught in our conduct or conversation that would stir up the natural corruptions in a fellow-member's heart. Palpable unconcern as to the effect of our demeanor on the Church, or on any member in it, or on an alien, is to give evidence that we are not actuated by the Spirit of Christ. We are to "walk in love." Eph. 5: 2. And the reason Paul assigns for this injunction, is, because "Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savor." "Wo to that man by whom the offence cometh." Matt. 18: 7.

Another essential feature of Christian Love is forgiveness. The love that bled for us flows from the loving heart of a forgiving God, and unless we forgive from the heart our brother's trespasses, God will not forgive us. Matt. 18: 35 and 6: 15. He that can cherish a grudge against an enemy, whatever ill treatment he may have received at his hands, is not actuated by the love of God. We are enjoined to offer the Lord's Prayer just as urgently as to pray at all; and to entreat God to forgive us as we forgive others, while our bosom is burning with a relentless, vindictive, unforgiving spirit, is to ask God to wither us with his wrath, and consume us with the flame of his outraged purity. All hatred, malice, and ill will, are indulged at the expense of the Divine favor; and as all retaliation is a veto of the Divine proclamation in Christ, no unforgiving temper can find admission into heaven, unless God will veto his own mandates, set aside all respect for law, and peril the order and safety of his kingdom. Persons that are puffed with a conceit of their superiority, whether in knowledge or station, are the most relentless in avenging an affront, because they lack the love that builds them into solidity and proportion in Christ, and that empowers them to build for Christ in returning good for evil.

Forbearance is another feature. Without it we are nothing but chaff and stubble. "Forbearing one another in love." Eph. 4: 2. Col. 3: 13. We all need the forbearance of God, and to expect from him what we deny to our fellows, is absurd. As long as we are conscious of infirmities in ourselves, we should exhibit our oneness with Christ by dealing tenderly with the weaknesses and failings of others. The love of God so reveals us to ourselves, that we have not the heart to upbraid others for frailties common to us all. The puffy side of our nature is extremely sensitive, and malignant, and querulous, and can never be done prating about the sense of personal injury it undergoes. But the side built in God, and which sways the sceptre of love over all the cross-hating elements in human nature, speaks as the "oracle of God" in dealing with offenders.

Another quality of holy love is that it avoids harsh judgments and unkind interpretations. It sees the remains of ugliness in the heart in which it is enthroned, in the light of Divine Goodness, and will sooner crouch at the Mercy-seat than mount the Judgment-seat. Christian Love is not afraid to admonish, but it oils reproof with the balm of Gilead. Before we rebuke or reprehend, we should sink down into the tear-drenched dust at the feet of Jesus, and get our hearts replenished with holy love, and "speak roughly" only when some providential contingency calls for it.

Love is a mighty builder, Divinely informed, Divinely guided, and if he can hire knowledge to draw water and carry wood, they go hand in hand, not only in work, but in the triumph, and bliss, and glory that await the redeemed in the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Grace, love, and bounty; or the unspeakable gift.

Dear brethren and sisters, will you hear and bear a few words from an unworthy sister, who would prefer being silent; but feeling pressed in the spirit that some good might be done by way of stirring up our pure minds in regard to church graces, which long since have lost their power. May God fix my understanding that I may be able to give a little light to some who sit in darkness on this subject of so much importance. Our discourse will be gathered from the 8th and 9th chapters of 2nd Corinthians and last chapter of first Corinthians. Those who are not well acquainted with this part of God's word, should read it over, and over again, with prayerful meditation. We find therein a duty incumbent on every christian, to minister grace to the church; that is, to give of our temporal things, which is the proof of our sincerity. If through the mercy of God we received grace through Jesus Christ emptying himself for us, is it a great matter that we should empty ourselves a litte for him, when we receive the benefit of it in ourselves? And until we show a willingness to minister to the church, it is (according to the scripture referred to) an evident proof against us that we have not the love of God shed abroad in our hearts; that we do fail in one point which destroys the virtue in all that we have done.—May God look in mercy upon his people. Oh how short-sighted we are! How carnal! We cling to nature; even straws will hold us. I speak of all God's beloved. Not only to those who hold much of this world's goods, but to those also who have but little.—Remember, dear friends, in the former dispensation, God require an offering from every one. If they were not able to bring a costly offering, they were to bring a dove or two pigeons. These things are written for ensamples. We may give the value of like things as they, even of the humble products of the farm and garden; and these gifts or graces will stand in our favor, and we shall receive a full reward for all that is thus done.

Do you remember the poor widow's mite which was counted of more value than that of the wealthy? Come, dear friends, do not think you are too poor. Christ was poor too; but he obeyed his Heavenly Father, and gave his all, his life a ransom for us. And where is he now? At God's right hand. The church is at his right hand and we can be at his right hand; and when we have done all that is commanded, and have finished our course, we shall then dwell with Christ in the presence of his Father where the bounty will all be returned, and all life's woes be forgotten. Joyfully and cheerfully, let us give like the Macedonians, even beyond our power. Let us be willing; and when we have let go the Mammon of unrighteousness, we have achieved a great deal. God does not demand more than we can give. Let us seek the kingdom and its righteousness, and whatsoever is good for us, shall prosper for us. Come, let us strengthen our faith, trust in God's word, do his whole will, fail in no point, and heaven will come down and greet us, and honor and glory shall crown the Church. We will be of one mind, drink of the same spirit, and speak the same things.

My dear brethren and sisters, let us take heed to the word of life that we may know that we have the true virtue within us that we are the children of God. Let us all lay by a sum for Christ; for what we do for the church we do for Christ; he is the head of the Church. Every week or every month, as the apostle teaches, set your little box on the shelf; drop into it your votes; when full hand over to Timotheus or Epaphroditus, messengers of the churches, whose duty it is to attend to these graces which are unspeakable gifts, and to minister to the wants of the saints, and necessities of the gospel. We must not only give to the church, but do good to all men, and grow in grace; and the peace of heaven shall rest upon us. Written by your weak, but loving sister in Christ.

MARY RORER.

The Cleft Rock.

It is related that not long since a train of cars was crossing the Allegany Mountains, and moving down the steep grade by the simple force of gravity, when the whistle screamed and the brakes were applied with all possible power.

The passengers were alarmed, and looking out of the windows upon walls of rock, expecting to see and hear disaster.

The engineers had discovered a little girl and her baby brother playing upon the track, just before the rushing leviathan, which apparently would, in another moment, crush them. At this crisis, the girl's eye caught sight of a niche in the rock, made by blasting, and into this thrust the baby and pressing against the solid wall. While the long train went thundering by, the passengers heard the gentle voice of the little girl, saying "Cling close to the rock, Johnny; cling close to the rock."

What more touching illustration is possible of the sinner's relation to the Rock of Ages? Amid the perils of his moral pathway to eternity, he is lost, unless he learns in deep experience the prayer.

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee."

After he has done this, the guardian angels repeat to the ear of faith the words his Savior has uttered in various forms: "Cling close to the rock; cling close to the rock." Then when desolving nature rushes to her doom, he will lift up his head, because his redemption draweth nigh.

Olden Times.

Carpets were a thing unknown in the early part of the sixteenth century. The walls were rough and unplastered, though sometimes hung with tapestry—the kind which spiders weave was always abundant. The floors were covered with rushes, which every few months were swept out and fresh ones were put in their places. What would a modern house-keeper think of sweeping her house once in three months? But her floors would be clean compared with these royal dens. The dogs and cats were allowed free access to the eating rooms, and all the fragments and bones were thrown to them. They ate until they were satisfied, and the remainder was left to decay under foot. The drainings of the beer vessels and all manner of refuse was thrown out upon these rushes, and the dining halls would be thought too untidy for a modern menagerie. Even the monkeys would turn up their noses at them. The highest style seemed to be "a rough and wasteful extravagance."

Some men will follow Christ on certain conditions: If he will not lead them through rough roads; if he will not enjoin on them any painful tasks; if the sun and wind do not annoy them; if he will remit a part of his plan and order. But the true Christian, who has the spirit of Jesus will say as Ruth said to Naomi:—"Whither thou goest. I will go," whatever dangers and difficulties may be in the way.

Baptism of fire.

"I indeed baptise you with water unto repentance: but he that comes after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptise you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire: whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his threshing floor, and gather his wheat into his garner, but will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Matt. 3: 11, 12.

The above portion of scripture is the language of John the baptist concerning Christ, as addressed to the Pharisees and Sadducees who came to his baptism. These characters prided themselves much on being of the seed of Abraham. Although they differed widely on many points, yet they were agreed concerning the kingdom of the Messiah, both expecting that he would establish a powerful, temporal monarchy, and deliver them from the Roman yoke. Devoted to worldly pleasure, they were particularly anxious that their lot of life should be cast in the splendid reign of this king, with the hope of sharing in his conquests and glory; but this expectation was so contrary to the lowly appearance of our Savior, that John proceeded at once to correct their error, by pointing out to them, both their utter unfitness for a reception into that kingdom, and also the perfect purity of that kingdom. My baptism, said he, is a preparatory work; it is the baptism of repentance; a baptism, if properly received, will qualify you for an entrance into that kingdom.

Errors unquestionably prevail with regard to the baptism mentioned by John. Some discard the baptism of water, and claim that the two latter only are essential, thus casting away the initiatory rite, or that which introduces them into the kingdom.

Others, again, entertain the idea that the baptism of the Holy Spirit designates a purifying work, while the baptism of fire refers to future punishment, or hell-fire. How any one can put such a construction upon language, we are at a loss to know; and yet in such light do some understand it. The last two members of the above sentence, are connected by the conjunction AND. This conjunction continues a sentence by expressing an addition, or by adding to; each member added has a similarity of meaning to the one preceding. Evidently the baptism of fire is designed to produce the same effect as the baptism of the Holy Spirit. The construction of this sentence is the same grammatically as that of the commission, which we understand requires three actions, all similar in their effect.

Fire is a symbol of Deity. "The Lord thy God is a consuming fire. Deut. 4: 24. The Holy Spirit is compared to fire. "He shall baptise you with the Holy Spirit, and with fire." To verify this prediction he sent the Holy Spirit, which descended upon his disciples in the form of tongues, or like flames of fire. Acts 2: 3. It is the work of the Holy Spirit to enlighten, purify, and sanctify the soul: and to inflame it with love to God, and zeal for his glory. Fire fell upon the sacrifices which Moses offered at the dedication of the tabernacle, (Lev. 9: 24.) and upon Solomon's at the consecration of the temple. 2 Chron. 7: 1. The fire which came down from heaven first upon the altar in the tabernacle, and afterward descended anew upon the altar in the temple of Solomon at its consecration, was continually fed and maintained by the priests day and night. Lev. 6: 12, 13.

As the fire which descended from heaven at the dedication of Solomon's temple, was kept continually burning upon the altar of burnt offering, so the fire which descends from heaven upon the altar of the heart when we dedicate those temples to him in the rite of baptism, must be kept continually burning; for should this sacred fire be extinguished, should we suffer these temples to be defamed and polluted by coming in contact with mystical Babylon, peradventure it may never again be rekindled.

As a holy priesthood, we must offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. "There is a peculiar reason," says Dr. Owen, "for assigning this appellation to moral duties; they cannot be properly observed without the alienation of something that was our own,—our time, ease, property, etc., and a dedication of it to the Lord. Hence they have the general nature of sacrifices." Our sacrifice must be nothing less than our bodies presented a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God. Romans 12: 1. A living sacrifice! How significant the term! The Jewish victims were slain before they were offered in sacrifice; but the christian must present his victim alive. He must bring his body and lay it upon the altar, saying,

"Here Lord I give myself to thee
'Tis all that I can do."

How much dross must be consumed upon this altar ere the gold is left pure! but, "he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap, and he shall sit as a refiner, and purifier of silver. Matt. 3: 2, 3. Oh the depth of the corruption of the human heart! How awful the depravity, how dreadfully vile, how loathsome! Many indeed have tried to grope their own way back to God, but all have failed. Unhappy and bewildered mortals, seeking relief from their guilty fears, hoping to atone for past crimes by committing others still more awful. They had lost the knowledge of the true God, still they retained such a dread of him, that they sometimes sacrificed their own offspring for the purpose of averting his anger. They gave the fruit of their body for the sin of their soul. Micah. 6: 7. Yet all this so far from benefitting them, only plunged them deeper and still deeper in sin. But Jesus came; with pity he beholds the sin-blinded, and sin-burdened multitude. His tender sympathies are touched. He invites them to him. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Matt. 11: 28, 29, 30. "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and will give you a heart of flesh. And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes." Ezek. 26: 25, 26, 27. Oh thou heart of mine, may he purify thee. May that fire which he has kindled upon thine altar glow incessantly until all thy dross is consumed, until thy chaff is burned up. And when he has tried me, may I come forth as gold. Job 23: 10. Hold still thou rebellious heart, let him refine thee as silver is refined, and try thee as gold is tried, for the trial of thy faith is more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire.

The process by which nature generates animal heat is indeed a wonderful process. The oxygen which escapes from the air we breathe, at once purifies the blood and heats it. This pure agent coming in contact with the impurities of the blood, or with its carbon, at once ignites, producing a sort of combustion, and upon the heat thus produced our animal life depends; but for this the blood would thicken and stagnate, and the whole machinery of the system soon cease to operate. As natural heat is essential to the functions of spiritual life. In a state of nature we are represented as being dead, cold, and lifeless; but it is the spirit that quickeneth. He it is, who, coming in contact with the impurities of our natures, kindles a flame within, and this fire will continue to burn so long as these natures unite, while this fire heats it also purifies. How stagnated, how cold and lifeless would we be, should this fire be quenched! The poet has well described what our condition would be:

"In vain we tune our formal songs;
In vain we strive to rise;
Hosannas languish on our tongues,
And our devotion dies."

It is this fire that produces within us a zeal for the cause of Christ, that enables us to exercise our spiritual gifts. It is this that warms our affections, and enables us to live a spiritual life although we may be surrounded by a cold and freezing atmosphere. If our life is hid with Christ in God, and this holy fire is fed by his blessed hand, then, oh then, will not our spiritual temperature be influenced by outer circumstances. We will have a temperature of our own, independent of the surrounding medium in which we live.

MATTIE A. LEAR.

Immortality of Love.

I never saw a man who did not believe in the immortality of love when following the body of a loved one to the grave. I have seen men under other circumstances who did not believe in it, but I never saw the man that, when he stood looking upon the form of one that he really loved stretched out for burial, did not revolt from saying, "It has all come to that; the hours of sweet companionship; the wondrous interlacings of tropical souls; the joys, the hopes, the trusts, the unutterable yearnings—there they all lie."

God forbid that we should bury anything.—There is no earth that can touch my companion. There is no earth that can touch my child. I would fight my little breath and strength away before I would permit any clod to touch them. The jewel is not in the ground. The jewel has dropped out of the casket, and I have buried the casket, not the jewel. You may reason, you may say what you please, you may carry the case before the Supreme court of my understanding, but there is something higher than reason, and something back of the understanding.—All that is in me revolts at the decision, and spurns it, and says: "You must try heart-cases before the heart. We will not believe that there is life somewhere else; we will not believe that life is buried here and the soul goes out and cries like a child lost in the woods, to find itself in this strange world, saying, 'Where am I? And who shall guide me that long, and yearn, and reach upward?'"—Beecher.

A Sunday Sunset Scene.

One lovely summer evening, as the King of day sank into his fiery bed of crimson light, bequeathing to the tops of the far distant mountain a splendid inheritance of golden sunshine, the silence of nature betokened the departure of the great luminary; and, as the stars peeped forth from their home above, twilight's sombre robe verged into the sable mantle of night. Beneath a monarch oak, the chief of those in the lawn before me, stood a young and lovely damsel; her form the Paragon of beauty, her brow pure as Parian marble, and eyes large, lustrous and expressive, gazing with intent admiration upon the far-lit prospect painted in silvery beauty upon the broad panorama of Heaven's high dome. Emotion, deep-seated in her sensitive soul, and stamped upon every lineament of her classic face, wafted her spirit on the downy pinions of thought, away into the boundless realms of her vivid imagination. The zephyrs of reverie, moved by angel's wings, bore her high-soaring aspirations still farther and farther into the infinite chambers of immensity—her sparkling eye raised above, and beaming in exalted thought, and flashing with the light of genius, now filled with shining tears, and she glanced with a farewell look upon the darkening rays of that setting Sun. But the scene was closed—'twas closed to be viewed no more.

Idle Words.

In number 11, of Vol., 5 of the Companion, Sister E. Williams requests some one to give an article on "Idle words," to which I will try to respond. I have frequently reflected on the phrase "idle words," and about one and a half years ago, I requested an article from the Editors of the Visitor to which some of the readers of the Companion can refer, and receive some valuable information, and to which I will also cast my mite, and send it to you for publication.

When the Lord Jesus told the Pharisees, "that every idle word that men shall speak they shall give account thereof in the day of Judgment," he evidently meant false or wrong, injurious or wicked words, for such were the words of the Pharisees which evidently gave rise to the text of "idle words," as well as, other mighty truths. We all no doubt admit that profane words are wicked words, and no doubt idle words. What little knowledge I have of such phrases as "goodness," "gracious," "mercy," "George," "Gosh," and many others to shocking to pen on paper, to some of which are prefixed my, by, or good, &c. They are all profane expressions. Some are the attributes of God used profanely, and others are substitutes for the word God. It is dangerous to use sacred words irreverently, or as by-words. It will be of much benefit for us all to be "slow to speak," and to avoid "foolish talking and jesting." Our speech should always be "with grace, seasoned with salt," full of love and to edification. "The tongue is an unruly evil," and if we can once govern our tongue well, we will find no difficulty to govern our whole bodies. "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

Adultery.

But I say unto you, that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. Matt. 5: 28.

We see in the above verse the evil of indelicacy of feeling and sentiment, and the extreme strictness and severity of the gospel respecting the intercourse of the sexes.—And yet what law is more frequently violated? By obscene anecdotes and tales; by songs and jibes; by double meanings and innuendoes; by looks and jestures; by conversation and obscene looks and pictures, this law of our Savior is perpetually violated. If there is any one sentiment of most value for the comfort, the character, the virtuous sociability, of the young—one that will shed the greatest charm over society, and make it the most pure—it is that which inculcates perfect delicacy and purity in the intercourse of the sexes. Virtue of any kind never blooms when this is not cherished. Modesty and purity once gone, every flower that would diffuse its fragrance over life, withers and dies with it. There is no one sin that so withers and blights every virtue; none that so enfeebles and prostrates every ennobling feeling of the soul, as to indulge in a life of impurity. How should purity dwell in the heart; breathe from the lips; kindle in the eye; live in the imagination; and dwell in the intercourse of all the young! An eternal, avenging God is near to every wanton thought; marks every eye that kindles with impure desire; rolls the thunder of justice over every poluted soul; and is preparing wo for every violater of the laws of purity and chastity. Prov. 7: 22, 23; 5: 5; 2, 18.

Spare Moments.

"Spare moments are the gold dust of time." When Queen Elizabeth lay upon her dying bed, she cried in the deepest sorrow and anguish, "Millions of money would I give for an inch of time." At that time he who would have offered her diamonds, or power, more than she ever before possessed, would have borne to her the news of a splendid victory, or paid the most delicate compliment, would have been thrust aside to make room for any one who could have prolonged even for an hour, the life of the dying queen. Time is a priceless gift of God to weak humanity. We are placed in this world for a purpose, and time is given us to fulfill our allotted task. If we act in unison with the Almighty, we find that not one moment need be unemployed. The service of God, the improvement of our talents, and the bestowal of charity upon those less favored than ourselves, will fill up every inch of time. As the minute particles of which gold-dust is composed, glitter in the light of the sun, so shall the apparently insignificant actions, which occupy but a moment, brighten the page of our lives, when the powerful light of the dissolving elements shall expose it to the scrutiny of the All seeing Judge. In view of such a time, should we not gather up the fragments, the minutes, aye, the seconds? As short a time will suffice to say that which may save another from committing sin as would be occupied in momentarily gratifying ourselves. We cannot calculate the ultimate value of hours and minutes, but we know that as gold-dust carefully gathered, becomes valuable, so may we expect to become the happy reapers of an invaluable treasure-harvest, if we faithfully garner and cluster time's golden fragments.

Fear not, trembling believer.—The bark which bears the spiritual destinies is in better hands than thine; a golden chain of covenant love links it to the throne. He who holds it in his hands gives thee this as the pledge of thy safety: "Because I live, ye shall live also."

God loves importunate prayer so much that he will not give us much blessing without it: and the reason he loves such prayer is, that he loves us and knows that it is a necessary preparation for our receiving the richest blessings which he is waiting and longing to bestow.

As a general fact, the relations of the present life cease, when life itself terminates. These silken threads part when the silver cord is loosed. But there is one tie connecting souls, that does not part even then. There is one relation that survives death, that will outlast the resurrection, that will be recognized at the judgment, and be dissolved only when the business of that important day is finished; and that tie, which death that sunders every other, shall respect, is the moral tie that binds the pastor, in all his conscious imperfection and unworthiness, to his congregation, and which connects, though not so closely, every one that preaches the Gospel only to those that hear it from him. We meet not each other for the last time, when one of us closes his eyes in death. We part not finally at the dying bed. Oh, no, we shall meet again, if not before, yet on the morning of the resurrection day; and by the light of the last sunrising, we shall assemble in the great concourse before the tribunal that shall be erected in mid-heaven. But we shall not merely meet. We shall meet as pastor and people. The judge will have respect to this relation, and we shall vividly remember it. This doctrine is plainly taught by Paul, when he speaks of "presenting his hearers perfect in Christ Jesus," when he says, that his spiritual children are to be his "hope and crown of rejoicing in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ, at his coming," and when he says that those "who watch for souls must give account."—Nevins.

By the Spirit of God men are instructed so that it is not extravagant to say that every thought that tends to struggle away from the bondage of the flesh, every heart-hunter, it is a witness that the world does not feed to satisfaction; that it does not nourish the soul. It needs the bread that comes from the hand of God to do that. Every single yearning of the heart is in answer to some silent influence of God.

God will accept your first attempts to serve him not as a perfect work, but a beginning. The first little blades of wheat are as pleasant to the farmer's eyes as the whole field waving with grain.

Our lives are spent either in doing nothing to the purpose or in doing nothing that we ought to do. We are always complaining our days are few, and acting as though there would be no end to them.

Oh! how different Christ's love to us from ours to him! We have not to ask Him if He loves us. If any one should ever ask the question of Jesus, He would say: "Behold my hands and my feet." He bears on his very body the marks of his love to us.

The friendship of most men in these days is like some plants in the water, which have broad leaves on the surface of the water, but scarcely any root at all; like lemons, cold within, hot without; full of expressions, empty intentions; speak loud, and do little; like drums and trumpets and ensigns in a battle, which make a noise and show but act nothing; mere friendships in pretence and complement, that can bow handsomely, and promise emphatically, and speak plausibly, and forget all. But a true, real, active friend, whose words are the windows of his heart, the notifiers of his affection—such a friend is rare, and hardly to be found.

YOU CANNOT ESCAPE SLANDER.—Let no one suppose that by acting a good part through life he will escape slander. There will be those even who hate them for the very qualities that ought to procure esteem. There are some folks in the world who are not willing that others should be better than themselves.

Nothing is more necessary than the help of God's Spirit. Without wind sails will not carry a vessel onward. Without fire from heaven Elijah's sacrifice would have been no better than that offered to Baal. Without the spirit the body is dead.

THERE is nothing that gives us more pleasure in after life than the consciousness that we have been kind and obliging to those around us, and that we have tried to make others happy. Children, which will you do—smile and make others happy, or be cross and make them miserable?

——:o:——

Never get angry. It does no good. Some sins have a seeming compensation or apology, a present gratification of some sort, but anger has none. A man feels no better for it. It is really a torment.

——:o:——

Evil thoughts in the soul of either man or woman, like oil in water, will rise to the top. No preparation of deceit can amalgamate them with virtue so that they will remain concealed.

——:o:——

The Christian life is not an engagement by contract between the master and his serant. It is the union of two hearts—that of the Savior and the saved—by the endearing ties of the most intimate love.

——:o:——

Winter, which strips the leaves from around us, makes us see the distant regions they formerly concealed; so does old age rob us of our enjoyments, only to enlarge the prospect of the eternity before us.

——:o:——

It is best to keep your own secrets to yourself; you may feel sure they are yours, and that you are not arousing the jealousy of others, of creating fears in your own mind, that others know how to wrong you.

——:o:——

Life is shortened by indulgence in anger, ill-will, anxiety, envy, grief, sorrow and excessive care.—The vital powers are wasted by excess in some cases, and want of a due portion in others.

Cross and Crown.

Must Jesus bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?
No, there's a cross for every one,
And there's a cross for me.

How happy are the saints above,
Who once went sorrowing here;
But now they taste unmingled love,
And joy without a tear.

What Must You Do?

Reader, do you feel the slightest drawing towards God, the smallest concern about your immortal soul? Does your conscience tell you this day that you are not yet forgiven, and have not yet felt the Spirit's power, and do you want to know what to do? Listen, and I will tell you.

You must go at once to the Lord Jesus Christ in prayer, and beseech him to have mercy upon you, and send you the Spirit. You must go direct to that open fountain of living waters, the Lord Jesus Christ, and you shall receive the Holy Ghost.—(John 7: 36.) Begin at once to pray to Jesus for the Holy Spirit. Think not that you are shut up and cut off from hope. The Holy Ghost is promised to them that ask him. Give the Lord no rest till he comes down and makes you a new heart. Cry mightily unto the Lord: say unto him, "Bless me, even me also: quicken me and make me alive."

I dare not, for my part, send anxious souls to any one but Christ. I cannot hold with those who tell men to pray for the Holy Spirit in the first place, in order that they may go to Christ in the second place. I see no warrant of Scripture for saying so; I only see that if men feel they are needy, perishing sinners, they ought to apply first and foremost, straight and direct, to Jesus Christ. I see He himself says "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." (John 8: 37.) I know it is his special office to baptize with the Holy Ghost, and that "in him all fulness dwells." I dare not pretend to be more systematic than the Bible. I believe that Christ is the meeting-place between God and the soul, and my first advice must always be, Go to Jesus, and tell your wants to him.

Reader, remember this, I have told you what to do. You are to go to Christ, if you want to be saved.—J. C. Ryle.

Damascus, the Eternal.

Damascus dates back anterior to the days of Abraham, and is the oldest city in the world. It was founded by Uz, the grandson of Noah.

The early history of Damascus is shrouded in the hoary mists of antiquity. Leave the matters written of it in the first eleven chapters of the Old Testament out, and no recorded events have occurred in the whole but Damascus was in existence to receive it. Go back as far as you will into the vague past, there was always a Damascus. In the writings of every country for more than four thousand years, its name has been mentioned and its praises sung. To Damascus, years are only moments—decades only flitting trifles of time. She measures time not by days, and months and years, but by the empires she has seen rise and prosper, and crumble to ruin. She is a type of immortality. She saw the foundation of Baalbee, and Thebes, and Ephesus laid; she saw them grow into mighty cities, and amaze the world with their grandeur, and she has lived to see them desolate, deserted and given up to the owls and bats. She saw the Israelitish empire exalted, and she saw it annihilated. She saw Greece rise and flourish for two thousand years, and then die. In her old age she saw Rome built; she saw it overshadowed the world with its power; she saw it perish. The few hundred of years of Goncesco and Venetian might and splendor were to grave old Damascus only a scintillation hardly worth remembering. Damascus has seen all that has occurred on earth and still lives. She has looked upon the dry bones of a thousand empires, and she will live to see the tomb of a thousand more before she dies. Though another claims the name, old Damascus is by right the Eternal City.

Life Lengthened.

Cultivate an agreeable temper; many a man has fallen dead in a fit of passion.

Eat regularly not over thrice a day, and nothing between meals.

Go to bed at regular hours. Get up as soon as you wake of yourself, and do not sleep in the day-time, at least not longer than ten minutes before noon.

Work always by the day and not by the job.

Stop working before you are very tired—before you are "fagged out."

Cultivate a generous and an accommodating temper.

Never cross a bridge before you come to it. This will save one-half the troubles of life.

Never eat when you are not hungry, nor drink when you are not thirsty.

Let your appetite always come uninvited.

Cool off in a place greatly warmer than the one in which you have been exercising. This simple rule would prevent incurable sickness and save millions of lives every year.

Never resist a call of nature for a single moment.

Never allow yourself to be chilled through and through; it is this which destroys so many every year, in a few days sickness from pneumonia, called by some lung fever or inflamation of the lungs.

Whoever drinks no liquors at meals will add years of pleasurable existence to his life.

Of cold or warm drinks, the former are most pernicious; drinking at meals induces persons to eat more than they otherwise would, as any one can verify by experiment, and it is excess in eating which devastates the land with sickness, suffering and death.

After fifty years of age, if not a day laborer and sedentary persons after forty, should eat but twice a day, in the morning and about four in the afternoon; persons can soon accustom themselves to a seven hour interval between eating, and thus give the stomach rest; for every organ without adequate rest will soon give out.

Begin early in life to live under the benign influence of the Christian religion, for it "has the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."—Hall's Journal of Health.

My Lord and my God.

We are not insensible to the doctrinal force and value of these words. They affirm and emphasize the Godhead and sovereignty of Jesus Christ. But we wish now to think of them as the joyful exclamation of a gracious experience. Thomas was overcome by the doubt and perplexity in which Christ's death involved all the disciples, and he refused to be comforted by the testimony of others that Jesus had risen from the grave. The Savior grants to him evidence which conquers every doubt and banishes every shadow. And Thomas, gaining a higher conception of the character and purpose of his Teacher and Redeemer, and recognizing also the intimate friendship and fellowship into which he himself was admitted, cries out with spontaneous and irrepressible emotion, MY LORD AND MY GOD.—The vail has been wholly removed. The intimations and parables of the past are explained by the facts of the present There is clear recognition and experience of what the soul has only dimly and doubtingly hoped. It is an illustration of the truth which Peter afterwards put into words,

"The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead."

Many who read these lines are praying for a similar experience.—If we could but see Christ as our Lord and God. If the mist which sometimes gather over his word were wholly scattered, so that what seems vague and distant might become "spirit and life." If the most certain of all facts were the facts that Jesus Christ died for our sins and now lives evermore to intercede for us. If our confirmed judgments and beliefs could become the permanent and vital convictions of our hearts.

We are not speaking of any theory of a so-called higher Christian life. We are not suggesting retirements from the world, and the spending of our days in idle contemplation, and an endeavor to escape the temptations and struggles of every-day service. Christ wishes us to conquer the world, not run away from it; he has commissioned us to save men, not to shun them. But it is the fit equipment for this conquest that we need. It is the full conviction that this commission has been actually given to us that we must feel. All the springs of our religious activity depend upon our personal experience of God's grace. When with clearness of vision and certainty of belief we can say to Christ, My Lord and my God, we are ready for any service and for any sacrifice. When we become personally endued with power from on high, we are ready to go everywhere, preaching the word. What we call the spirit of consecration, the missionary spirit, the spirit of devotion to the world's redemption, the consuming zeal for the salvation of men,—how can this live and be nourished except by the consciousness of our own personal fellowship with Christ, the personal and vivid recognition of Him as our Redeemer and Lord? How can we introduce others to Christ unless we ourselves know him?

"Purge me with hyssop, & I shall be clean;
Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow;
Make me to hear joy and gladness,
That the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice;
Hide thy face from my sins,
And blot out all mine iniquities;
Create in me a clean heart, O God,
And renew a right spirit within me;
Cast me not away from thy presence,
And take not thy Holy Spirit from me;
Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation,
And uphold me with thy free Spirit;
Then will I teach transgressors thy ways,
And sinners shall be converted unto thee."

Sorrows are like tempest clouds; in the distance they look black, but when above us, scarcely gray, as sad dreams indicate coming joy, so will it be with the so-often torturing dream of life when it hath passed.

HOPE AND COURAGE.—True hope is based on energy of character.—A strong mind always hopes, and has always cause to hope, because it knows the mutability of human affairs, and how slight a circumstance may change the whole course of events. Such a spirit, too, rests upon itself, it is not confined to particular objects and if at last all should be lost, it has saved itself its own integrity and worth. Hope awakens courage, while despondency is the last of all evils: it is the abandonment of good—the giving up of the battle of life with dead nothingness. He who can plant courage in the human soul is the best physician. To seek to govern men by their fears and their wants is an unworthy purpose—they desire to rule by means of cowardice. Love inspires courage and hope, and this is doubly the giver and preserver of life. Whatsoever teaches boldness to combat the manifold evils and assaults of life, enables us to win the crown of victory. Special care, therefore, ought to be taken in education to teach what true courage is—as well in social and domestic as in public affairs—and by what means it may best be suspected.

SORROW.—Sorrow sobers us and makes the mind genial. And in sorrow we love and trust our friends more tenderly, and the dead become dearer to us. And just as the stars shine out in the night, so there are blessed faces that look at us in our grief, though before their features were fading from our recollection. Suffering! Let no man dread it to much, because it is good for him, and it will help to make him sure of his being immortal. It is not in the bright, happy day, but only in the solemn night, that other worlds are to be seen shining in their long, long distances. And it is in sorrow—that night of the soul—that we see farthest, and know ourselves natives of infinity and daughters of the Most High.

Heavy clouds often bring softening and fructifying showers, when light ones are empty and pass over.

Baptizing the Sick.

Brother Holsinger:—In reading the death of Miss Camerer, in the C. F. C., and seeing that she requested to be baptized but for some cause was not, I have become anxious to know the reason, if proper to be made known, for I believe many others read it with the same feeling of anxiety. I saw a young woman carried to the water in an arm chair, and baptized; she got well and said she believed nothing else would have saved her with that burden on her mind. Another young woman was hauled on a sled several miles, and baptized, and got well.—A young man was also baptized in a Spring branch, while very low. He got well, and I heard him say that he firmly believed that bath to his body, and peace to his mind was all that saved him. He was a physician. I saw another young woman hauled to the river, lying on a bed. She was so low that we were afraid she would not live to get home, but she lived about a week and died happy. One more, quite a young girl. She took Typhoid Fever, and had a presentiment of dying. She was hauled to the water on Sunday evening, and in 3 days she died in Jesus. All these had Typhoid Fever, and all in the district where I live. I tell this to encourage the brethren and sisters not to be timid about baptizing the sick. The water revives them.

REPLY.

There is no impropriety in making known the reasons inquired into. They were omitted in the obituary notice for the sake of brevity. And tho' it is painful to us to revert again to the sad circumstance, yet lest a wrong impression should go forth, we will give a full explanation.

When Miss Camerer first took sick she was not alarmed as to the result, but expected in a few days to be well. She was however under conviction, and told me that she had formed the resolution that she would lead a different life, in which I encouraged her. From this I expected that when she would be well she would become a member of the Church. She was then mostly confined to her bed. Perhaps six days afterward I contemplated accompanying Elder Graybill Meyers to Philadelphia, but deferred the journey two days on account of wife's ill health. Miss Camerer was then up and about in the house. Feeling still a little timid about going away, I was urged by both women not to suffer their condition to disturb my mind and to go upon my mission without concern, as they would get along. So we set out on Thursday night. On Friday she became worse. On Saturday the physician was called again, and frankly told her she had inflamation of the lungs and Typhoid Fever. She then became alarmed, and regretted she was not baptized. She also inquired whether it could not be done, and asked the doctor whether she could not be baptized, as she felt as if she would not get well. He advised her to wait a little until she would get better. Had I been at home at this time I believe she would have been immersed. Timidity on the part of the attendants is perhaps the best excuse we can offer. Some even feel guilty of more. She soon became delirious and when I returned on the Thursday night following she was most of her time entirely irrational and never mentioned the subject of baptism to me. Had she requested it, rationally, even though she could not have raised her head, we believe she would have been immersed. We have even regretted that at the most favorable opportunity we did not introduce the matter to her. We have strong faith in baptism, but think it requires also strong faith on the part of the candidate in order to make it effectual. Such faith can not be exercised without the full use of all the faculties. We have confidence in her faith and repentance for she exercised it in her full mind; and we trust the Lord will accept the will for the work. In her delirium she conceived the idea that she had been baptized, and was a member of the church, and addressed us as brethren and sisters.—She also admonished others to come to the Lord, and expressed her satisfaction with her new life.

These are the facts of the case. The delirium was the peculiarity that stood in the way. We would no more baptize an unconscious adult than we would an untaught infant. We have had much exercise of mind upon this subject.—Some of our neighbors said: "she ought to be baptized," of course whether she knew it or not. Some would have brought a few drops of water and sprinkled it upon her while unconscious and called it baptism!—Others would even have carried her into the water and would have baptized her in the same condition! Then we have neighbors who would even have administered their baptism after life itself had departed. For our part, we would rather have one good, hearty, "Lord be merciful to me a sinner," than a score of such mockeries of one of heaven's institutions.

Our brethren and sisters have a right to inquire into all our doings, and it affords us encouragement to know that they are interested in our welfare, both as to our own doings, and our treatment by others.

Before we close this subject, we feel to make one more appeal to all our unbaptized readers, and especially those who know their duty. O, do not delay! Do chose the part of wisdom, the part of safety.—How much more pleasant to your friends to wait upon you when sickness comes, if you are calm and contented, than if you are racked with remorse.—And then your own soul! That precious boon, the loss of which the world itself cannot redeem. Do you wonder if the poor minister should be confused when he is called to the bedside of a person whom he has so often exhorted in vain? Do you wonder that he is timid to administer to you in sickness—under the most adverse circumstances—that which you refused in health, at the most favorable opportunity, and when offered to you with much entreaty? My heart's desire to God is that you may be saved. Jesus says: Whosoever believes and is baptized shall be saved." Our exhortation is that you will be baptized while you can believe.

In No. 13 we proposed to send Nos. 13 and 14, each containing a reply to a Campbelite preacher on feet-washing, for 10 cents, which we now take back, No. 14 being short—all owing to bad work. No. 13 will be sent for 5 cents.

Queries.

Will some brother give an explanation on Heb. 6: 18. "By two immutable things, in which it was impossble for God to live, we might have a strong consolation," &c.—The query is, By what two immutable things was it impossible for God to lie? D. L.

MAURERTOWN, VA.
March 31st '69.

Allow me the privilege of soliciting the Brethren through the Companion, who purpose going to the A. M. through this valley, to favor us with a visit and preaching, as this is a direct route from Hagerstown, Md. to the place of the A. M. and will be convenient for those who travel by public as well as private conveyance. A Rail-road and a good macadamized road lie through our church district. Those who consent to favor us will stop at this place and please advise me of their intention of doing so in due time, by addressing me as above.

E. B. SHAVER.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In White Co. Ind., February 5th, SAMUEL M. KNEPP, aged 22 years and 28 days. Funeral attended by the writer from 1 Peter 1: 24, 25.

At the house of brother Christian Brechbiel, MALINDA JANE SOYSTER, daughter of brother Joseph and sister Sarah Soyster, aged 2 years, 6 months, and 6 days. Funeral attended by brother David Fisher, Adam Young, and the writer, from Mark 10: 13—16. Our dear brother and sister while emigrating to Ills., stopped to visit her brother G. B. Dilling, and sister Betty Brechbiel in Carroll Co., Ind.; and while here death snatched from their embrace one of the little ones; yet they can feel assured though they have one in Indiana, and one in Pennsylvania, beneath the clods of the Valley, when their Redeemer comes to gather home his jewels they shall meet them again, if they with patience through faith hold out to the end. So we pray they may be comforted with this hope, and say with the Apostle, all things work to-gether for good to them that love the Lord.

J. S. SNOWBERGER.

In Back Creek branch, Franklin Co. Pa., March 22nd, PETER E. MAURER, son of brother George and sister Eliza Maurer, aged 3 years and 24 days. He was a bright and promising child, but God took him home to be one of his own. Funeral services by brother Adam Pheil and the writer.

JOHN SHANK.

Visitor please copy.

In the Pleasant Hill branch, September 19th, 1868, sister MARIA L. BOWMAN, aged 55 years, 7 months, and 15 days.

Sister Bowman was the consort of brother John A. Bowman, who was assassinated in the time of the late war, who was also aminister of the gospel, I have been personally acquainted with sister Bowman 25 or 30 yrs.; was also at her house divers times during her last illness; her life was the life of a christian; and she asked me time and again to pray the Lord to take her out of this troublesome world if was his will to do so. The night before she died she told me that she had a bright hope for the sweet enjoyments of Heaven. She left six children to mourn their loss; but we hope their loss is her great gain. Funeral services by brother M. M. Bashor, and G. L. Bowman, from second Timothy 4: 7, 8.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Be Kind to the Erring.

Be kind to the erring, the humble, the meek,
'Tis the coward alone would trample the weak;
Ye know not how deeply the past they deplore—
In charity cover their sins evermore.

Be kind to the erring, the lowly, the sad;
Oft circumstance ruleth, whose chain driveth mad.
Ah! boast not thy virtue, but con thy heart o'er,
Communion with self crusheth pride evermore.

Commune with thyself, think how reckless thou art
Enriching thy coffers to wither thine heart;
Take warning by thousands on yonder dark shore—
Remember, thy soul must exist evermore.

Cherish good for itself, nor measure thy gain;
Such motives are sordidly selfish and vain;
In deeds blessing all, and with heart gushing o'er,
Flowing on to the ocean of love evermore.

Religion is naught, all pretentions are vain,
If works are still wanting; ah! where is thy gain?
As bark cast away on some desolate shore,
As wreck on the deep, thou art gone evermore.

Thy days fleet away as a meteor's gleam;
Flashing bright for a moment they fade as a dream;
Yea, dream though it be, yet on far distant shore
Shall in chambers re-echo the past evermore.

As flower dost thou blossom, mere thing of a day;
As breath of the flower thou wilt vanish away;
Let love be thy motto this weary life o'er,
Then in sunshine of love wilt thou bask evermore.

For the Companion.

The Reign of Hezekiah, King of Jerusalem.

2 Kings 18 & 19.

God is eternal. He is incomprehensible to all and everything but himself. As is his eternity or existence, so is his incomprehensibility. As he is perfect and infinite in his attributes, so is he wonderful in his works, and so are his ways superior to man's ways. He purposes and he executes his purposes, and behold there is none to hinder him. He wills and he performs: he promises and he rewards: he warns and will punish. Surely, he is to be feared. All men should fear him. They that do not fear the Lord, are not wise, for "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

Hezekiah was king of the tribe of Judah in the time of the prophet Isaiah. The welfare and prosperity of Israel were the burden of king Hezekiah's heart. His reign as king of Judah commenced when he was twenty-five years old; and he reigned twenty-nine years in Jerusalem. "And he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord:" "he trusted in the Lord God of Israel." He was a righteous king.—Such was the loyalty of his reign that "after him was none like him among all the kings of Judah, nor any that were before him." He did not adhere to his own judgment and understanding, nor was he guided by the suggestions and inventions of other men; but "he clave to the Lord, and departed not from following him, and kept his commandments." In such a king the subjects of a kingdom might well trust. The children of Israel might well confide in the leadership of such a leader. But Hezekiah had his days of trouble and provocation. The children of Israel had their enemies: so have "the people of God" in all time. A certain king was warring against Israel in Hezekiah's reign. This king sent men to Hezekiah to inquire of him wherein he trusted; they tried to discourage him from his confidence in Israel's safety. One of the men even addressed Hezekiah's people in the foliowing insulting words: "Let not Hezekiah deceive you, for he shall not be able to deliver you:" "neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the Lord, saying, The Lord will surely deliver us: hearken not to Hezekiah." 2 Kings 18: 29—32. Any one should be able to detect the deception of such language. While the speaker was admonishing the people to beware of deception, he himself was fettered with the worst kind of deception. Hezekiah, on hearing these things, might well rend his clothes, cover himself with sack cloth, and repair to the house of the Lord. And so he did. Not that he had become entangled in the net of deception, but because some of his people might. He then sent chosen messengers to Isaiah, the prophet of the Lord. His confidence was in the Lord. He requested Isaiah to lift up his prayer in behalf of "the remnant that were left." The prophet answered: Thus saith the Lord, Be not afraid; * * * * I will cause him(the Assyrian king) to fall by the sword in his own land."

The king of Assyria now fell in conflict with another king, and "sent messengers again to Hezekiah, saying, Let not thy God in whom thou trustest deceive thee." This king claimed that as the Kings of Assyria had conquered and utterly destroyed all other lands, Jerusalem could not escape the same fate. He asked Hezekiah, "And shalt thou be delivered?"—How self-confident! How disdainfully he treats Hezekiah's hope of triumph and deliverance! How haughtily he questions! "Where is the King of Hamath, of Arpad, of Sepharvain, of Hena, and Ivah?" But God brought low his proud, boasting spirit. In answer to this second message of Sennacherib, King of Assyria, the wise Hezekiah took the same message, "went up into the house of the Lord, and spread it before the Lord." This exemplary act of Hezekiah shows what faith he had in the Divine Power. He laid the matter before him who never errs and whose work none can hinder. There, in the house of God, and before the Most High,—he offered his prayer for advice and assistance. He confessed the God of Israel; that he was God alone; that he had made heaven and earth; that the Kings of Assyria had destroyed the nations and their lands because their gods were "no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone." After this confession, he prayed:—"Now therefore, O Lord our God. I beseech thee, save thou us out of his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the [illegible] 2 Kings 19:14—19. The Lord heard that prayer. "I have heard," said the Lord by the prophet. "I will defend this city," said the God of Israel. And so it came to pass. The Lord delivered them. So complete was the deliverance of the remnant of Judah that they needed not in the least to defend themselves. This notable circumstance stands like a monument, planted by the pen of Divine inspiration upon the Record of the Holy Scriptures, to show that "the Lord will provide" for them that consult him in time of trouble.

"Though troubles assail and dangers affright,
Though friends should all fail, and foes all unite—
Yet one thing secures us, whatever betide,
The Scripture assures us, 'The Lord will provide.'"

Believer in Jesus, do you take lessons from the good words and deeds of the good who have lived long before you? Then consider the righteous acts of Hezekiah, king of Jerusalem. Are you deeply conscious that the Lord has given you a charge to keep, and a work to do? Then keep the charge faithfully, and lawfully do the work which he has appointed. Do your difficulties perplex you? Consult your Lord for direction, and he shall supply all your need. Phil. 4:19. Do your enemies trouble, and provoke, and menace you? Think of what Hezekiah did in his "day of trouble, and of rebuke, and provocation." Let no circumstances drive you from the field of Christian action. Nobly and cheerfully respond to the call of the Chief Shepherd, and follow him "whithersoever he goeth." When your foes threaten to invade your God-given premises, go up into your closet of prayer, and like Hezekiah, spread your condition and your wants before the Lord. Present your plea aright. and as the enemies of Judah's remnant were smitten in their own camp, and their leader by his own sons, so shall your foes be consumed in their own ways, and by their own weapons.

Marriage.

"The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; only in the Lord." 1 Cor. 7:39.

This portion of the word of God we find quoted under the head of "Queries". (See Companion, Volume 5, number 1.) And in connection with it, the question is asked:—"Why do our members unite themselves in marriage to such as we think are not in the Lord?" All I have to say in answer to the question is, Let such an one answer for himself. All I shall endeavor to do, by the assistance of the Lord, will be to give my views upon this scripture as I understand it. And in doing so, should I fail to give every Scripture its proper bearing I hope some brother or sister would be kind enough to set us right.

The first clause of the verses reads thus "The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth." That was in the mind of God from the beginning; that the only thing that should separate them should be death; and that they should be one flesh. But under the Mosaic law for certain offences they were allowed to use a bill of divorcement; and the cause of it at that time was because of the hardness of their hearts. So we find at that day a disannulling of the law that was from the beginning. And now then when the Savior comes his command in the new law, is:—"And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery. Matt. 19:9. And so we see there is still a proviso under the new dispensation, limiting the time that they are freed from the law to the time one of the the parties may become a fornicator or otherwise unto death. At least they are freed so far that they can marry another and not commit adultery. It is a positive declaration of the Lord, and we cannot vade it. And to reconcile Paul with the Lord, I think we must consider the prayer, and suffer, we'll be content. [illegible] Paul says in 1 Cor. 1: 17, Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel. Here, says Lizzy, consider the context. There is just as much consecration between Paul and the Lord as in the most perfect sense; and it is needful at times for the opposite of forgiving upon every [illegible] Being pray be known to them, what is to have. [illegible] saved it is holy consecration."

A [illegible] is held in very low estimation by God [illegible] as [illegible] to [illegible] command it as one of these did not fall in your day seventy times [illegible]." And again he says: "I agree to put in practice to [illegible] with [illegible]." I oppose [illegible] I do not think so. Feet-Washing.

"See that thou make all things according to the pattern showed the on thee mount." Heb. 8: 5. In Vol. 5 Nos. 1 and 2, we find a dialogue between brother J. and brother M. on Feet-washing, in which brother J. very easily convinced brother M. and converts him to believe in the double mode of administering this ordinance; so easily, in fact, that brother J's opponent is suspected by some of being a myth. I will attempt to write in defence of the single mode, and I shall address my remarks alternately to brother J., and brother M., and close by giving a few items of the history of the practice of the ordinance of Feet-washing by the mother Church at Germantown.

To brother J. You say, you have been solicited to write upon the subject. I, too, have frequently been requested to write upon this important question. Your dialogue opens the way for me, but I will trust to the word of the Lord Jesus Christ for inspiration, which alone can make us free, and wise unto salvation; and should be the foundation of all our arguments on this subject.

I have received numerous letters in relation to the question under discussion, from brethren in nearly all the states where they have churches. I have replied to some of them; but to answer all is more than I can do for want of time. The Companion has a large circulation in the Brotherhood; this communication may therefore serve as one general reply to my correspondents who have asked for information concerning the history of the practice of feet-washing by the church at Germantown; and, thus relieve my mind of a subject, which has caused me considerable anxiety.

Brother M., asks you for information about feet-washing. You tell him you will give him all the light on that subject you can, and ask, "What is dark to you, the design or manner of performing it?" Brother M. answered, "the manner of performing it." Now, here was an opportunity to point your querist to the precept and "example" of the Lord Jesus Christ, the great law-giver of the church, and example of this ordinance, but you failed to do it.

To brother M. Fallible and prejudiced men are apt to lead us astray. The ordinance of feet-washing is so plainly exemplified by our dear Savior, that, if we take him for our guide, we cannot be deceived. If we strictly obey Jesus in all his commands, we stand upon a sure foundation that can never be moved; for other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone. You told brother J., you had for years thought the one who washes should also wipe. To this I would cheerfully have said amen, had you told me, because the Master taught us to do this, when giving us his "example" or pattern.

I have heard brethren say, wiping is not mentioned by Christ. This would have been "vain repetition" because the use of a towel was a part of his "example," and hence it was sufficient to say, Do as I have done to you.

To brother J. You say to brother M., "You wash and wipe six brethren, I will wash and wipe two, &c." But Christ washed and wiped twelve. After making this assertion you ask, "Now is this following Christ's example?" I say yes, to the very letter, for he has not limited us to any number, but only to a strictness in following his "example" in washing and wiping "one another's feet."

We have scriptural evidence that feet-washing was practiced in the singular number in the early ages of the Church. Paul instructs Timothy to take a widow into the number, if, besides having other qualifications which he mentions, she has washed the saint's feet.—This is in the singular number. It is highly probable when Christians visited each other in primitive times they practised the ordinances, for "they broke bread from house to house," and that the entertainers washed the feet of their guests. This was in former times also practised among the brethren; an instance of which I will mention before I close. An observance of the ordinances in this manner is perfectly consistent with the word of the Lord Jesus; for he says, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there I am in the midst of them," then, two may hold a Love feast, and practice feet-washing, but not by the double mode.

Now for the number twelve. We are informed that the Pope, during what Catholics call holy week, washes twelve cardinals' feet. He girds himself with a towel, pours water into a basin, washes their feet, and wipes them with the towel wherewith he is girded. As far as "example" is concerned, the Pope is perfectly right; but in regard to number he is wrong, for Christ does not say wash the feet of twelve, but, "wash one another's feet." Dear brother, do not trifle with the number twelve, as the Pope does; for we have nothing to do with number in this ordinance but only with the "example" of our "Lord and Master," in the act of washing and wiping.

You refer to 1st Cor. 12th chapter and the 27th verse where Paul writes as follows: "Now ye are the body of Christ," and argue from this that the church represents the mystical body of Christ in the ordinance of feet-washing, but there is no foundation for this either in the precept or "example" of the Savior when he founded this rite. Admitting this theory correct, Christ was his own representative, but where was his representative of his "mystical body" the church? He did not call on the beloved disciple John, or any other disciple, to represent his "little flock" in the act of the towel.

A brother, now dead, was the first I think who started this representative theory, and it seems to me, other brethren have followed him in advocating it, without due consideration.

You say because Christ used two members—both the hands—of his physical body to institute this ornance, two members of his "mystical body"—the Church—ought to be engaged in its administration. It was natural, and nothing more, that the Savior should use both hands in washing feet, but to deduce the double mode from this fact, is, in my humble opinion, both unnatural and unauthorized. You say further, "It seems to me if the unlearned or unbelieving come among us at our Love Feasts, and see the body of Christ represented as I have stated above, they must say, "that is a fair representation of the performance as required in John 13th chapter." You suppose they must say so, but they don't on every occasion at least, for I have heard spectators assert when witnessing the double mode of Feet-washing performed, "That is not following the example of Christ."

To brother M. You have I think been too easily converted in favor of the double mode of Feet-washing. Now while you may thus have charged your mind, there is a large number of brethren who desire to return to the practice of the single mode; because it is in strict accordance with the precept and "example" of the Savior; and, if it were not for the strong opposition of some of the old brethren, this would soon be done.

There is much said about the "general order" in feet washing. The double mode is far from being general in the brotherhood; and, although a large majority of the brethren practice it, there is no authority for it in the records of the General Councils of the Church. The mother church at Germantown never sanctioned the change, for she still practises the single mode as the fathers did who organized her. A brother, who lives far away from here, preached for us not long since. He said in his discourse, referring to our mode of feet-washing: Your church is built upon a sure foundation, the immutable word of the Lord Jesus Christ. The same brother told me that our administration of this ordinance is perfectly right. No one will say it is not strictly in accordance with the precept and example of the great Teacher. Then why should not all adopt it and thus promote the peace, harmony and strength of the Brotherhood? We are sometimes asked: "When and how did the change from the single to the double mode take place?" We can say it was never authorized by the church at large, but was gradually adopted by individual branches, until at last it came to be regarded as a church order. No doubt it was at first thoughtlessly practised, because it was more convenient and expeditious than the single mode. Many of the brethren were formerly ignorant of the extent, and of the scriptural bearing, of the change, and, hence comparatively innocent in its continuance; but the subject has of late been so thoroughly examined and discussed through the medium of the Companion, that ignorance can no longer be pleaded in excuse of the innovation.

I had been a member of the Church forty years, before I was made aware of the great extent of the departure from the primitive practice of this ordinance. I attended the Yearly Meeting at Beaver Dam. Many of the brethren were assembled in the evening and there was a conversation on the subject of feet-washing, in which several took a part. Some one remarked that brother Wolf had adopted a new way, meaning the single mode. I waited until there was a pause in the discourse, and then told them I was sorry they were not better informed; that brother Wolf had not adopted a new way, for the mother church at Germantown had always practised the single mode. One of the brethren in reply to this said, "Why then brother Wolf certainly had a foundation to build upon." Before that time, as said, I was not aware of the great extent of the departure from the "example" of Christ.

At the conclusion of the conversation cited above, forbearance with one another in this matter was counselled; so that the entire Brotherhood might continue in fellowship and communion.

I will now say something about the mother church at Germantown. My father John Price, was a member of that church, and a co-laborer with Alexander Mack. They both preached at Germantown and Indian Creek. I remember seeing brother Mack coming to meeting in his cart with a white cover over it. I also remember seeing him wash the feet of the brethren and wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded. My father and he were very closely and tenderly connected in the ties of Christian love and fellowship. Their mutual affection may be said to have been as strong as that of David and Jonathan. Both contended earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. Both were fearful that the change in feet-washing, which had then, already, been effected in certain quarters, might be extended in the Brotherhood. So great was the anxiety of my father that before he died, he gave me a charge never to consent to this change. I promised him I never would, and I shall hold that promise sacred, as long as the Lord spares my life; because I have the answer of a good conscience in thus closely adhering to the Divine oracles.

I will now, before I close, mention the instance of feet-washing to which allusion was made at another point in this communication. My father made it a custom to wash the feet of the brethren, when he entertained them at his house. I remember particularly one occasion of this kind. I paid him a visit, after I had left the parental roof to try the world for myself. There were a goodly number of the brethren and sisters met there at the time. My father rose, girded himself with a towel, poured water into a basis, washed the feet of the brethren, and wiped them with the towel wherewith he was girded; and my mother did the same to the sisters.

To an Unknown Correspondent.

We cannot but sometimes wish, in spite of law and expediency, that souls were not separated by so deep a gulf of individuality, and that we had the power, not only to look into other's hearts, but to annihilate space. That this capacity is denied us, is doubtless a matter of great wisdom and mercy on the part of God, as it would not only give us possession of the secret things that belong only to the Infinite, but would destroy all confidence among men, and overturn the order of society. The feelings of a personal character that may have pervaded your heart it becomes me not to ask you to divulge: I do not wish to know. But what you have thought in relation to God, Eternity, and Deity, I have wished to be able to fathom. I have written too strongly and positively not to have stirred your bosom deeply, and your prejudices must either be invincible, or your mind exceedingly logical and penetrating, not to have felt uneasy in your ecclesiastical relations. I regard it utterly unworthy a noble mind to contend so persistently for anything not involving the veracity of God and the well-being of the soul, and these solemn verities are concerned. Hence I cannot but reiterate the points at issue between us, and press again and again upon your mind doctrines which the Holy Ghost has enunciated with as much simplicity and perspicuity as language admits of. Is it not astounding that, after all that God has done for the redemption of man, and the extreme plainness with which he has revealed his will, there should be any material difference of opinion in relation to any essential point in doctrine or practice! "Never man spake like this man" in both matter and manner, and any one "that has an ear to hear" and a mind to comprehend the simplest proposition, may know "what he must do to be saved."

"If a man love me he will keep my words."—It is not possible to present the test of fealty in clearer and more intelligible terms. Either Christ's words must be very obscure and difficult of understanding, or his love of truth must be very indifferent, or nothing will serve as our passport to Heaven but unswerving loyalty to his Word. The first would raise the imputation of cruelty, the second, unfitness for Sovereignty, the third alone being what reason would endorse as the necessary qualification in a Being who undertakes the salvation of a race of immortals. A fallen intelligence, endowed as man is, needs just such measures for his deliverance as God has instituted. If the Word Incarnate is necessary, then the Word written is necessary. If faith in the Personal Christ is essential, then obedience to the word is also absolutely required as faith's form or body. Without a representation to the sense of the Eternal, no blood would ever have been shed that could take away sin.—And without such a representation by letter, we would not know that any blood has ever been drawn from a human heart that enshrined the Deity. A revelation of God in Christ, and a preservation of the record in word-form, are cofactors in the scheme of redemption. Faith in Christ without the word is impossible; to have any conception of the Person, we must have some acquaintance with the record that gives the facts of his life. And faith in him from whom the word proceeds, must clothe itself with the commandments which the word enjoins, or it is without efficacy. Had God proclaimed the Divinity of Christ when there was in him no element higher than the human, or had he offered him as our Savior in the form of "bull or goat," although Divine in essence, he would in both instances have mocked and belied the human family. But because he is Essential Truth, and "loved the world," therefore "he gave his Only-begotten Son," in human form, under human limitations and conditions, working in a precise manner and for a definite end, as a ground of hope and a model of imitation for all. This principle binding him, and vitalizing his word, it must bind all who are filled with his Spirit, so that the most solemn emphasis rests on the words, "If a man love me he will keep my words." "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." John 14: 23. 1 John 2: 4.

Christ not only died for us, but died in a particular manner. There is something specific in all he did and all that he suffered. To have died by stoning or decapitation, would not have met the Divine purpose. It was not simply in accordance with custom that he was buried, but the counsels and predictions of God required it. Not only so, but the fulfillment of prophecy rendered it necessary that he be interred in a particular place. Emphatically so with the ordinances that relate to his death and burial. It was the Divine purpose not only to dispose of Christ's body after the crucifixion, but to make the mode of disposition prominent and symbolical. "Christ died, was buried, and rose again, according to the Scriptures." 1 Cor. 15: 3, 4.—"Be baptized every one of you" has as much authority and necessity in it, as the awful behest, "Awake, O sword, against My Shepherd, and against the man that is my Fellow." Both are matters of obedience, the one making Christ ours, and the other making us his. "Thus it behoovde Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead," and thus it behooves us to be "buried with him in baptism," and "walk in newness of life." That we are to be baptized with water, leaves no more room for variety of administration than in the application of Christ's blood for the removal of sin. So clearly and forcibly has Paul set forth the immersion of the believer, in Romans 6th, that to gainsay it is to call in question the burial and resurrection of Christ. "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain;" "Ye are yet in your sins." 1 Cor. 15: 14, 17. If we believe that it was necessary for Christ to be buried and to rise again, consistency requires, and scripture enjoins, that we accept the cognate doctrine "that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death. Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that, like as Christ was raised up by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Christ not only "died for our sins," but was sealed up under the power of death. So we are to be "planted together in the likeness of his death," that we may "be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Christ was buried and rose again literally, or there would have been no possibility of symbolical teaching in the solemn and significant event. Because the import of the Apostle's language is deeply and beautifully spiritual, are we therefore at liberty to mutilate, or wholly reject the literal, without which spiritual truths could not be conveyed? If the fact that the burial spoken of by Paul refers to internal condition and God-ward relation, is a sufficient reason for rejecting immersion in water, by which such condition and relation are symbolized, then we also leave the honor of God and the safety of our souls intact by denying the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The same law that calls for the finite and tangible as a medium for Infinite action, also requires the sacramental for Infinite representation.—We can as easily think without brains, or distinguish colors without eyes, as to give Christ-pleasing, symbolic representation of regeneration without immersion. The stupendous, all-important spiritual facts signified by the words, "buried with him by baptism," no more supersede the necessity of immersion, than the personal realization of the facts supersedes the need of a heart with which to feel them. The attempt to get above the necessity of expressing the great facts of redemption, and our personal experience of them, in God's own methods, is an attempt to get to Heaven without Christ. Nothing can be more intensely practical and outward than Christ's earthly life, because he was so truly Divine and Infinite. The same is true of his religion by which his followers are to be a "peculiar people." Instead of being labeled as non-essential in any of its externals, it is all the more rigidly and exactly ritual because of its origin and spirit, and the Divine-human constitution of the person in whom it has its life and mode of development. A religion that has no "burial by baptism," can drop the Christ of the Bible out of its creed, without incurring the charge of inconsistency, whatever may be lost in the highest interests of our immortality. Every argument advanced against infidelity, and in support of the central idea that "there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved," but that "of Jesus Christ of Nazareth," stands with all its force against diversity of sacramental administration, and in support of one mode in the observance of the institutions of grace. As we had neither wisdom to originate, nor power to achieve, what is least in the "great salvation," so we have no authority to alter what God has established.—Man's wisdom could no more see in water a mirror of the gospel, than it could compass the possibility of God being "manifest in the flesh." [illegible] important to retain the symbols that represent the saving facts of the Gospel. As certainly as no name [illegible] ground of salvation, no other baptism will [illegible] "the likeness of his death."

Thoughts on Dress.

As Christians we should consider it of some importance how we dress, although we are well aware some Christian professors think "it does not matter how we dress, so the heart is only right"—"these little notions in regard to dress are of no particular account." However, it appears the Apostle, and primitive Christians, and writers in different ages of the Church, took notice of these things. The Apostle says in regard to women's dress: "In like manner also that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shame-facedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array." 1 Tim. 2: 9. What a beautiful mark of pure and holy thoughts and desires! to see the children of God dressed modest, neat, clean and plain; no superfluities, such as, flowers, beads, pearls, gold, unnecessary ribbons, ruffles, &c. Plain and modest colors, not gay and dashy, are becoming our profession. We love to see, as the saying is, the dress or suit all of a piece, not too many different colors, nor too many different changes, not too many different modes or cuts. Brethren and sisters, it dont correspond to be continually shifting and changing. Let us have uniformity and stability. Truly, it looks as though we were all of the same mind and of the same judgment, to dress alike as near as possible, as members of the Church. It is true, we cannot advocate or urge a particular mode or cut as being binding; yet we have often thought the mode, &c. of dress as generally worn by the Brethren, seems to correspond well with the profession; and as the Brethren have always urged and admonished the members to be reasonable and consistent, so that modesty, neatness, and cleanliness, are to be connected with our manner of dress.—We think the mode and order generally adopted by them is commendable. We are sorry, indeed, to see such a want of uniformity among the members of the Church.

We have frequently thought of the Friends, called Quakers, as well as the Reformed Mennonites; they dress uniform, always neat, clean and plain. And as John Wesley wished in his day, we have often thought of the Brethren: "Let me see, before I die, a Methodist congregation full as plainly dressed as a Quaker congregation." Wesley's Sermon on dress, page 264 Clark also says: "If St. Paul saw the manner in which Christian women now dress and appear in the ordinances of religion, what would he think? what would he say? How could he ever distinguish the true Christian from the infidel? And if they who are in Christ are new creatures, and the persons who ordinarily appear in religious assemblies, are really new creatures as they profess in general to be in Christ, he might reasonably inquire: If these are new creatures, what must have been their appearance when they were old creatures?"

We shall yet add the remarks of a celebrated Medical writer on dress: "The perfection of dress is to be easy and clean. Nothing can be more ridiculous than for any one to make himself a slave to fine clothes; such an one (and many such there are) would rather remain as fixed as a statute from morning till night, than discompose a single hair, or alter the point of a pin. Were we to recommend any particular pattern for dress, it would be that which is worn by the people called Quakers. They are always neat, clean, and often elegant, without anything superfluous. What others lay out upon tawdry laces, ruffles &c., they bestow upon superior cleanliness. Finery is only the affectation of dress, and very often cover a great deal of dirt."

Let our outward appearance be an index to the heart, and let us in dress, as well as in all we do or say, have an eye single to the honor and glory of God.

Prayer.—2 Sam. 27.

In prayer we make known our desires and confess our faults to God and plead for pardon. We invoke God, Ps. 5: 2; adore him, 2 Chron. 20: 6; confess to him, Ezra. 9: 6; petition, Ps. 7: 1, and plead with him, Jer. 12: 1; profess or dedicate ourselves to him, Ps. 73: 25; thank him, Ps. 147, 1 Tim. 2: 1; and bless him, Ps. 103: 20—22.

"Prayer is the passion of the soul;
By it the bard's knowledge is told."

Much could be said on the above: but I shall be brief, as each heading speaks for itself. God is the only subject of prayer. The prayer of the sinner God will answer if asked according to his word: that of a "righteous man availeth much." And the united prayers of the Church have power. Behold the ministry surrounded by brethren and sisters whose souls send the sweet incense of prayer to God, mingling and comingling with the ministry, when it is facing the bleak minds, piercing cold, spattering rains, its feet in the stocks; in sickness, in sorrow, privations, temptations, or pleading with the dying sons & daughters of Adam, "earnestly contending for the faith once delivered unto the saints." And you see joy, peace, union and strength, and souls turning to God. When Paul and Silas were in prison bound by chains, guarded by inner and outer guards, the Church was engaged in prayer, and they (Paul and Silas) sang praises to God; the prison was shaken; the keepers quaked; the doors were opened; but hear the salutation, "We are all here." Brethren and sisters are we all at our posts?

We can pray in the closet or assembly. A number of the followers of Christ were at Jerusalem at the time of the visitation of the Holy Ghost, and no doubt they were engaged in prayer, as they were possessed of prayerful hearts. What was the result? Their hearts overflowed and imparted instruction to others; the borders of Zion were enlarged; the Church rejoiced. Brethren and sisters, think of this, and let us labor earnestly and in union. A heart-felt and practica prayer reaches the throne of God and brings an answer. Brethren and sisters, with the ministry, let us pray for ourselves, our children, our neighbors and all of Adam's race. Pray for your weak servant.

Universalism inconsistent with itself.

Our blessed Savior says: "But I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: fear him, which after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell." We infer from the above language, that there is a being who has power to cast into hell that wicked and disobedient soul who will not obey his holy word. It is claimed, however, by the Universalist that his having power to cast into hell is not saying that he will. This is very poor reasoning. Our Savior never said anything with out also meaning something; and we cannot speak lightly of his power without accusing him of using either hypocrisy or vain and idle language. We learn from this view of the above language, that, although all the inventions that can be devised by Satan, be hurled at the word of God, its original meaning will not be changed. We do not believe that God would act justly if he would deal in the same manner with the righteous and the wicked. Universalism teaches that he does not deal with them in a like manner; for the wicked are punished by being afflicted while in this world. But are afflictions sent to the wicked only? Is not the innocent infant very frequently made to suffer? Where is the class which has suffered more than the holy martyrs? When we notice the general difference between the afflictions of the pious and the wicked, we find that it is no easy matter to decide which class receives the greater amount while in this world.

Another contradiction is this: Universalists believe that all men, no matter what their actions are, will be admitted into Heaven; yet they build churches, pay their ministers to preach for them; and I have even heard their ministers pray. What argument can the universalist produce in favor of these things? Perhaps they will tell us that they intend to spread the gospel. But what advantage can there be in advocating their doctrine or spreading the gospel, when life and immortality are not brought to light through that gospel? Why spread the gospel when men can be saved without? Universalists tell us that we should love, but must not fear God. Our Savior says, "Fear not them that kill the body but are not able to kill the soul:—but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

On Revelation 21: 7.

"He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son."

Brethren and sisters, this is a great promise. If we overcome, we shall inherit all things. This is a joyful sound to all that are laboring under the cross of Jesus, our Lord. We must overcome in order to inherit. We must overcome the world and the lust thereof; for we cannot inherit heaven, and have the love of this world with us. We must renounce the love of the world, and love God with all the soul and mind. If we love God as we are commanded to love him, we will have little room left to love the world. Our heavenly Father has given us a work to do whereby we may overcome, if we do his work in faith and love. He has commanded us to "love one another;" do good to them that despitefully use us. The Apostle says: "By this we know that we love God, if we do his commandments." Therefore, let us do his commands and overcome the world, that we may inherit all things, according to the promise.

Here is another consideration. The God of heaven has promised that he will be our God and we his sons. This is a great consolation. O how all God-fearing souls should rejoice that there is such a promise! We should have this on our minds every day.—If God is our Father then are we his children and should do as he bids.

Our God has given us great consolation in this that if we overcome, we shall inherit all things, and that he would be our God and we his sons. This is a great comfort to all that do his service, and walk in the ways of his commandments; but to the wicked it is doleful. What a dreadful end awaits the enemy of God! Every one that will not repent and be baptised for the remissions of sins, should make haste and delay not to obtain an heirship of heaven. The Lord calls sinners to repent every day, and it would be well for them to give ear to the heavenly calling. Many give all their attention to matters concerning this world, and thereby neglect giving due attention to the calling of God.—This is the case with young people, especially. O young man, and young woman, the day is drawing nigh when Zion's Light shall come. Where will you be found? Remember, the time is precious.

All Night in Prayer

We know not what we owe those tireless nights of prayer. The world's Redeemer there made intercession for all coming generations. What vast trains of the children of men must have swept in review before the Savior's eye! And as the shepherd knows and recognizes each little lamb in all his flock, so our Shepherd in those nights of watchfulness and prayer, knew and looked upon us, for whom he came to suffer and atone. For his chosen he sent upward the voice of intense, earnest prayer, asking mercy for the sleeping world at his feet, and for the unborn world that he saw with divine vision.

Virtue is her own reward.

Selected by ROSIE SNOWBERGER.

The Romish Lady.

There was a Romish lady brought up in Popery;
Her mother always taught her the priest she must obey.
O pardon me, dear mother, I humbly pray thee now,
For unto these false idols I can no longer bow.

Assisted by her hand-maid a Bible she conceal'd.
And there she gain'd instruction till God his love reveal'd;
No more she prostrates herself to pictures decked with gold,
But soon she was betrayed, and her Bible from her stole.

I'll bow to my dear Jesus, I'll worship God unseen.
I'll live by faith forever;—the works of men are vain.
I cannot worship angels, nor pictures made by men;
Dear mother use your pleasure, but pardon if you can.

With grief and great vexation her mother straight did go
To tell the Roman clergy the cause of all her wo;
The priests were soon assembled, and for the maid did call,
And forced her in the dungeon to fright her soul withal.

The more they strove to fright her, the more she did endure,
Although her age was tender her faith was strong and sure.
The chains of gold so costly they from this lady took,
And she with all her spirit the pride of life forsook.

Before the Pope they brought her, in hopes of her return.
And there she was condemned in horrid flames to burn;
Before the place of torment they brought her speedily;
With lifted hands to heaven, she then agreed to die.

There being many ladies assembled at the place.
She rais'd her eyes to heaven and begged supplying grace:
Weep not ye tender ladies, shed not a tear for me,
While my poor body's burning, my soul the Lord shall see.

Yourselves you need to pity and Zion's deep decay;
Dear ladies turn to Jesus, no longer make delay.
In comes her raving mother her daughter to behold,
And in her hand she brought all her pictures decked with gold.

O take from me these idols, remove them from my sight:
Restore to me my Bible wherein I take delight.
Alas! my aged mother, why on my ruin bent?
'T was you that did betray me, but I am innocent.

Tormentors use your pleasure, and do as you think best:
I hope my blessed Jesus will take my soul to rest.
Soon as these words were spoken, up steps the man of death
And kindled up the fire to stop her mortal breath.

Instead of golden bracelets, with chains they bound her fast;
She cried, Alas! my God, now must I die at last:
With Jesus and his angels forever I shall dwell,
God pardon priest and people, and so I bid farewell.

Encourage the Young.

If a young man deserves praise, be sure to give it to him, else you not only run a chance of driving him from the right road by want of encouragement, but deprive yourself of the happiest privilege you will ever have of rewarding his labor. For it is only the young who can receive much reward from men's praise; the old, when they are great, get too far beyond and above what you may think of them. You may urge them with sympathy and surround them with acclamation, but they will doubt your pleasure and despise your praise. You might have cheered them in their race through the asphodel meadows of their youth: you might have brought the proud, bright scarlet to their faces, if you had cried but once, "Well done!" as they dashed up the first goal of their early ambition. But now their pleasure is in memory, and their ambition in Heaven. They can be kind to you, you can never more be kind to them.

Self-made Men.

The biography of every man who has risen to eminence of any kind, by his own talent and industry, is a lesson and stimulous to all who read it. Self-made men are living witnesses that God has endowed man with the material and powers necessary to accomplish the most desirable fortune and fame, and that it is by no means essential to a man's success or greatness, that he has not inherited appliences of aristocratic birth, wealth and consequent position, "forearming him" for his encounter with the world.

The greatest names on the page of history belong to men who have risen from obscure birth against wealth, and in defiance of what is called disadvantageous position, bearing in their nature the sacred fire they have kindled at the breath of the opposing tempest, and by unwearied, undaunted struggle, dawned, day by day, into a broader, stronger and more beautiful life. Such men, trusting to no fortuitious aids, and owing nothing to chances, have so beaten their pathway upward that they could not be thrust down by the accidents which disarm and discourage the mere favorite of circumstances.

It is not the men who have inherited most except it is in nobility of soul and purpose, who have risen highest; but rather the men with no dower save soul and purpose, who have made fortunate and adverse circumstances alike a spur to goad their steed up the steep and stubborn mount, where

"Fame's proud temple shines afar."

To such men, every possible goal is accomplishable; and honest ambition has no height which genius or talent may tread, which has not felt the impress of their feet.

Does death appear dark? Sin makes it dark. Has the future terror? Sin makes us afraid. In Jesus alone is light and peace. Commit your soul in faith to Him, and you will be able to say with Paul, "I know whom I have believed." Your life of faith and holy obedience being "hid with Christ in God, when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

To be insensible to the charms of piety, and the beauty of holiness, is to be entirely wanting in the best sense and taste a man can have. Whatever is excellent and desirable in the universe of God centres in holiness. Holiness is the ultimatum of human hopes and happiness.

Temperance puts wood on the fire, meal in the tub, money in the purse, credit in the country, contentment in the house, clothes on the children, vigor in the body, intelligence in the brain, and spirit in the whole constitution.

God's way is to cross man's way, that he may turn from it and live.

Paternal Care.

The wise and diligent traveler watches all his steps and keeps his eyes always directed to that part of the road which is immediately before him; but he does not incessantly look backwards to count his steps and examine his footmarks,—he would lose time and hinder his progress by so doing.

The soul which God truly leads by the hand (for I do not now speak of those who are learning to walk, and who are yet looking for the road) ought to watch its path, but by simple, tranquil vigilance, confined to the present moment, and without restlessness from love of self. Its attention should be continually diverted to the will of God, in order to fulfil it every instant, and not be engaged in reflections upon itself to see for to be assured of its state, when God prefers it should be uncertain. Thus the Psalmist exclaims, "My eyes are ever toward the Lord; for he shall pluck my feet out of the net." (Ps. xxv. 15.)

Observe how, in order to keep his feet in safety in a way sown with snares, instead of fixing his eyes upon the ground to scrutinize every step, he raises them to the Lord. We never watch so diligently over ourselves as when we walk in the presence of God, as he commanded Abraham. And in fact what should be the end of all our vigilance? To follow step by step the will of God. He who conforms to that in all things, watches over himself in every thing.

If, then, we never lost sight of the presence of God, we should never cease to watch, and always with a simple, lovely, quiet and disinterested vigilance; and, with a watchfulness, which is the result of a desire to be assured of our walk, not by our own light, but by that of God. We cannot behold the holiness of God without feeling horror at the smallest of our transgression.

In addition to the presence of God and in a state of recollection, we may aid the examination of conscience according to our need, but conducted in a way that grows more and more simple, easy, and destitute of restless self-contemplations.—We examine ourselves not for our own satisfaction, but to conform to the advice we receive, and to accomplish the will of God.

In short, we abandon ourselves into the hands of God, and are just as happy in knowing ourselves there, as we should be miserable if we were in our own. We desire to see nothing of what it pleases him to conceal. As we love him infinitely more than we do ourselves, we make an unconditional sacrifice of ourselves to his good pleasure; desiring only to love Him and to forget ourselves. He who thus generously loses his soul shall find it again, with eternal life. —Fenelon.

The Seven Wise Men of Greece.

1. THALES was a descendant of Cadmus, and born at Miletus, in Ionia. He traveled much and studied under the priests of Memphis, in Egypt, where he became learned in geometry, philosophy, and astronomy. He demonstrated the theory of the solstices and equinoxes, divided the year into 365 days, and believed water to be the principal of every thing. He died 548 years before Christ, aged ninty-six.

2. SOLON was born at Salamis, educated at Athens, and, like Thales, studied under the Egyptian priests. He was a celebrated lawgiver of the Athenians, and the friend of Crœsus, king of Lydia, to whom he made his famous saying, "No man can be called happy till he dies." He died aged eighty, 558 years before Christ.

3. CHILO was a philosopher of Sparta, whose saying was "Know thyself."

4. PITTACUS was a native of Mitylese, and was equally famous as a warrior and as a philosopher—having killed the enemy's general in single combat. He was a great legislator, and caused a law to be passed, by which all persons who committed crimes while intoxicated, were to be punished with double penalties. He died 570 years before Christ. His maxim was "Know the times."

5. BIAS was a native of Priene: he he died 566 years before Christ. His favorite saying was "Love your friend as though you expected him to be your enemy."

6. CLEOBULOUS lived at Lindes, was a writer of verses, died 564 years before Christ, aged 70. His favorite motto was "There is nothing better than moderation."

7. PERIANDER was king of Corinth. Although a tyrant and disgraced by many crimes, he was a patron of genious, learning, and the fine arts, and was constantly talking morality and philosophy. He died 580 before Christ, aged 80. We give two of his sayings—"A man ought solemnly to keep his word, but not hesitate to break it when it clashes with his interests." His other saying was in startling contrast to his wicked practices— "Not only crime ought to be punished, but every wicked and corrupt thought." Rather a difficult thing to do, without the criminal himself turned in former It is somewhat remarkable that all these seven wise men were living at the same time.

In a union of hand and brain lies the true strength of human achievment. Either, without the other, is powerless. The brain to plan, the hand to execute. Combined in the same individual, we have a directness of effort and a momentum of action next to irresistible. Hence, education, if true to its mission, will aim not only to intensify and refine the intellect and the moral perceptions, but will give due heed to the physical demands of the individual. "A sound mind in a sound body" is not only a happy contingency, but a natural and reasonable conjunction, founded not less in science than in beneficence.

Pure truth, like pure gold, has been found unfit for circulation because men have discovered that it is more convenient to adulterate the truth than to refine themselves.

Prefer solid sense to wit; never study to be diverting without being useful; let no jest intrude upon your good manners, nor say anything that may offend modesty or heedlessly hurt the feelings of another.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Moment of Peril.

More than a quarter of a century ago two vessels, in a gale off the Southern coast and wraped in the darkness of the night, where sailing towards each other. The commanders knew it not until suddenly, from the deck of one of the ships, rang out the trumpet-shout, "Hard-a-starboord!" The officer had caught sight of the approaching craft thro' the gloom when near the prow of his own. Instantly was heard in response the thrilling words, "Hard-a-larboard!" Every heart on those ships was still, as the white-robed arms of the leviathans of the sea: wave seemed to interlock in a terrific struggle, then part forever. Each swept onward towards its destined port, bearing the pale spectators of the scene.

Those ships had doubtless often been in danger, but never before nor afterwards was such threatened destruction warded off by a breath through the speaking-trumpet, and escaped by so small a margin of deliverance.

We believe that in heaven every ransomed soul will see in the life-voyage, among many dangers encountered, some single peril of decisive interest. It may have been the avoiding of a meeting with a dangerous companion, or stopping at the entrance of a theater, when the forces of evil were in wait for him, turning as it were a hairbreadth aside, because upon the inward ear fell just in time the warning tones of the silver trumpet borne by them of whom it is written: "And He shall give His angels charge concerning thee, to keep thee in all thy ways, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone."

That escape will have a solitary importance in all the earthly past, and will send up to the throne a strain of highest thanksgiving.—Such was its relation to life; to have failed of deliverance then was certain ruin forever. Some Christians can now look back upon this moment of dark and awful peril. Multitudes are daily passing safely, or making shipwreck at such critical moments in probation.—American Messenger.

Spiritual Hills And Valleys.

Pride, fraud, drunkenness, are as Mount Sier to the lovers of them.—But alas! how unsafe; if stronger against, and further removed from, the hand of man, yet nearer to God's hand in heaven, though we acknowledge no place far from God or from his thunder. But we say, it is not always the safest sailing on the top of the mast. To live on in the mountainous height of a temporal estate is neither wise nor happy. Men standing in the shade of humble valleys, look up and wonder at the height of hills, and think it goodly living there, as Peter thought of Tabor. But when, with weary limbs they have ascended, and find the beams of the sun melting their spirits, or the cold blasts of wind making their sinews slack, flashes of lighting or cracks of thunder soonest endangering their advanced heads, then they confess (checking their proud conceit) the low valley is safest. For the fruitful dew that fall fast on the hills stay least while there, but run down to the valley; and though, on such a promontory a man further sees, and is further seen, yet in the valley, where he sees less he enjoys more! —Thomas Adams.

Earnestness.

Unless I make religion my great engrossing concern, I shall be a stranger to all solid peace and satisfying enjoyment. I have at times caught a glimpse of the comfort which it yields the spirit, when I merge my will into God's will, when I resolve to have no will of my own separate from God. I feel quite assured that this entire renunciation of self and entire devotion to God's service would give a simplicity and grandeur to my existence, would throw an unclouded sunshine over all my ways, would raise me above the care and provocations of this life, would enhance even my sensible gratifications, of a higher order which constitute the main and essential blessedness of heaven. O my God, may it be thus with me! Call me out of nature's darkness into thine own marvelous light. Give me to aspire after the graces, and hold forth to my acquaintances and above all, to my children, the example of all righteousness. Conform me to the gospel economy under which I sit, that as Christ died for sin, I may die to it; that as he rose again, I may rise to newness of life, and feel it my meat and drink to do thy will.

"ALL is well that ends well" is Shakspearean, and like other familiar sentiments from eminent sources, is readily adopted as the rule of life. The sentiment is very unsafe for a guide to action. A great many unwarrantable acts may be said, from some points of view, to have ended well, while the means which were assumed to be justified by the end could be justified by nothing. It is not safe to do evil that good may come. It is the province of Omnipotence only, to bring good out of evil; but evil is not the less evil that good has come of it. Let us not assume the attrieutes of God, or seek to justify or palliate evil, because, through His omniscience, He maketh the wrath of man to praise Him.

The Unstable Man.

The reflection of every man's views melts him; whereof he is as soon glutted. As he is a noun, he is only adjective, depending on every novel persuasion; as a verb, he knows only the present tense. To-day he goes to the quay to be shiped for Rome; but before the tides come his tide is turned. One party thinks him theirs; he is with both—with neither nor an hour with himself. Because the birds and beasts be at controversy, he will be a bat and get him both wings and teeth. He would come to heaven but for his halting. Two opinions (like two watermen) almost pull him apieces, when he resolves to put his judgment into a boat, and go some whither; presently he steps back and goes with neither. It is a wonder if his affections being a little lukewarm water, do not make his religion stomach-sick. Indifference is his ballast and opinion his sail; he resolves not to resolve. He knows not what he doth hold. He opens his mind to receive notions as one opens his palm to take a handful of water; he hath very much if he could hold it. He is sure to die, but not what religion to die in! he demurs like a posed lawyer, as if delay could remove some impediments. He knows not wether he shoul say his Paternoster in Latin or English: and so leaves it and his prayers unsaid. He makes himself ready for an appointed feast; by the way he hears a sermon; he turns thitherward; and yet betwixt the church gate and church door, he thinks of business and retires home again. He receives many judgments but retains none; embracing so many faiths, that he is little better than an infidel. . . . He loaths manna after two days feeding, and is almost weary of the sun for perpetual shining. If the Temple Pavement be ever worn with his visitant feet, he will run far to a new teacher. . . . His best dwelling would be his confined chamber, where he would trouble nothing but his pillow. He is full of business at church, a stranger at home, a skeptic abroad, an observer in the street, everywhere a fool.—Thomas Adams.

Lazy boys and girls make lazy men and women, just as surely as crooked saplings make crooked trees. The great mass of paupers in our almshouses and criminals in our prisons, have come to what they are by being brought up in idleness. Those who constitute the business and virtuous part of our community, those who make our great and useful men and women, were trained up in their early days to habits of methodical industry.

If the Spring put forth no blossoms, in the summer there will be no beauty, and in autumn no fruit. So, if youth be thrown away without any improvement, riper years will be contemptible, and old age miserable.

Sunday Schools Books.

A letter lately received from a brother in Kansas, inquiring "what books the Brethren use, and where they may be obtained," has brought the subject to our consideration. And as we expect a request to be presented to next Annual Meeting for the appointment of a committee "to compile suitable books for the Brethren's Sunday Schools," we think the present a suitable time to suggest a few thoughts upon the matter, for the consideration of those who shall compose the council.

Such books are needed—greatly needed. New schools are being organized in all parts of the country, and are in want of books. It would be a great saving if the proper books could be purchased at the outset.

It is also desirable that good books only should be used in the Brethren's schools; books that teach and advocate the Truth. Those who have been connected with Sunday Schools know that it is difficult to obtain such books from the lists of Sunday School Libraries in general use. They either contradict the truth or omit it entirely.

It would also be quite acceptable to have a uniform series of books, throughout the Brotherhood, and especially in singing books. Nothing is more conducive to the success of Sunday Schools—and in fact all other schools—than good singing.—Unity is an essential element to good music. Division is discord, and discord is intolerable.

We can see no good reason why such a committee should not be appointed. No objection has ever been offered, except that it was too early yet, that same old excuse that attacks every improvement, and that is such a deadly weapon to all reformation. We hope therefore that the Annual Meeting will grant the request and appoint a committee composed of practical and persevering men, who will attend to the business entrusted to them without unnecessary delay.

Feet-Washing.

We give in this number an article from Elder John Price, upon the above subject. It was delayed several weeks in order to make room for the replies to those who are more in the dark upon thatsubject than our brethren.

Next week, if we can find time, we expect to close the discussion among ourselves, upon the subject of Feet-washing at least until after the next Annual Meeting, by giving a condensed expression of the original sentiments of all the articles upon the subject now in our possession, with a few criticisms of our own.

Newspaper Notices.

The following item has beer going the rounds of some of ou exchanges; and we tender ou thanks to our brethren of th quill for the advertisements We do not know whom to cred it first, having appeared in sever al papers as original:

The Church of the Brethren.—Th denomination, sometimes known by th name of the German Baptists and "Dunk ards," is popularly supposed to be found o ly in the recesses of Pennsylvania. But th Christian Family Companion, the weekly o gan of the denomination, published at T rone, Blair Co. Pa., gives notices of Chur Assemblies meeting in Indiana, Illinoi Maryland, Missouri, Ohio, Virginia, a

West Virginia. The doctrines of the Church of the Brethren, are summed up as follows:—They teach that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance Prayer Baptism by Trine immersion, Feet-washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through His Son, Jesus Christ.

The following is from the Baltimore Sun of April 9th:

"Several ministers of the Brethren Church commonly called German Baptists or Tunkers, have had a series of meetings in this city, and at Ellicott city, the early part of this week. They baptized two in the Patapsco, below this city, on Sunday afternoon, and two at Ellicott City. They hold that the Commission given by the Savior to his disciples, as recorded by St. Matthew 28: 19, plainly requires the candidate to be immersed once "in the name of the Father," once "in the name of the Son," and once "in the name of the Holy Ghost,"—the three actions constituting one baptism. They have no creed nor discipline but the New Testament Scriptures, take up no collections at their meetings, nor pay their ministers for preaching the gospel, as they believe they will be fully rewarded "for their labor of love" in the world to come. Hence they seek not for numerical strength for financial objects.—They also cast lot or elect their preachers.—They design organizing in this city.

The time for our spring Love-feasts being at hand, we would suggest that all announcements be written out briefly. And if there is nothing special to be given, such as pointing out the way, we think that the form of our table will answer every purpose. Those who advertise their meetings mean to extend an invitation, by the act itself.

It is now more than probable that our overland journey to the Annual Meeting will have to be abandoned, or at least the original design of it: preaching by the way, as it is now too late to make the appointments.

Answers to Correspondents.

Lewis Kimmel.— No money has been received from you for Mary Kimmel, Shelbyville, Ills. Are you sure you mailed the letter? We lately wrote an order for books, and looked anxiously for them for several days, when, lo! we found it in the envelope box. Of course everybody is not guilty of such awkardness but it might happen to some. Your letter, we think, has certainly not come to hand. Very likely in the same letter you had requested the change of address which also was not attended to.

S. L. Funderburgh, Lawrence, Kansas. The "pamphlet" or document to which you refer, was received. We get that periodical as an exchange, and hence, had that No. before you presented it. But, thank you. We had almost concluded to review it, and may yet.

Leah Cronce, Mechanicsburg, Ills. The money was received and paper regularly sent.

J. H. Miller, Forest City, Mo. Cannot supply debate on Trine Immersion. We send copy of debate on Immersion of which we have a good supply. But there is $1.00 in your favor. What shall we do with it?

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only

Eastern district of Ohio, May 4th., 9 miles south of Masilon, O.

North Western District of Ohio, Eagle Creek branch, Hancock Co., 7th May.

Brother Henry:—Please announce that we intend, the Lord willing, to hold a love-feast on the 26th and 27th of May next, at Foglesanger's meeting-house in the Ridge Congregation, 4 miles north of Shippensburg, Cumberland Co. Pa. Meeting to commence at 10 o'clock A. M.

We hereby extend a hearty invitation to the brethren and sisters to be with us at said meeting, especially the ministering Brethren.

DANIEL ECKERMAN.

Shippensburg Pa.

Greenville, Tenn.)
March 8th 1869. (

Dear Companion:—As you have paid me a visit weekly for the past three years, I have become so much attached to you that I can scarcely wait until the end of the week for your visit again to us with the good news you have gathered in a week's time from our beloved brethren and sisters in the different localities on earth; although there is some fault found with each other about different things, about certain words that are found in the Bible. Now this is all good, if we differ in kind and loving words,—words well seasoned with grace; but when we are always finding fault and differing with our Brethren in order to get up a controversy so we may make a display of much learning, and to make use of hard, sharp, cutting words, and there by wound one another's feelings; this is not good, but has an evil appearance; this ought not so to be, my Brethren. But let our words be full of love.

Now I do not wish to find fault, but there is a certain thing in brother Crosswhite's essays that I can't reconcile, and that is that John the baptist was not known in heaven by the name of John. How do we read? "The angel said unto him; Fear not, Zacharias; for thy prayer is heard; and thy wife Elizabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John." Luke 11: 13. Here we see that he was named John by an angel from heaven, before he was conceived, and therefore he certainly was known in heaven by the name of John before he was on earth; and this same angel said, (17th verse) that he should go "before the Lord in the spirit and power of Elias (or Elijah) to turn the hearts of the fathers to their children and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." He did not say that John went in the person of Elijah but in the spirit and power of Elijah. I believe John was known in heaven by the name of John, because he was named by the angel Gabriel, that stood in the presence of God; and finally, because we are all known by name while on earth, God knows us all by name by nature, by occupation and thoughts.

There is abundant proof in the Bible to these effects.

God did call Cain by name, and asked where his brother Abel was. He called Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Joshua David, Solomon, Samuel, and a host of others, by name, which proves that all are known in heaven, by the name they bore on earth. Now if John was named by an angel sent from heaven to Zacharias, to tell him to call his son's name John, Why was he not known by the name John in heaven? Will brother Jesse please tell us?

The reason why the sisters do not lay aside their garments, is, because they have deviated from our ancient sisters' mode of dress: they wore what was called a short gown at that time: they could draw that off and lay it aside when they washed one another's feet; but now they have them made so much like other people, that they cannot fulfil the example so exactly and literally.

A. J. CORRELL.

Brother Henry:—I have another subscriber for the Companion; am doing all I can for your paper, for I love to see it prosper, and go forth into all the world, carrying the Good News of salvation to many of the sons and daughters of Adam, who are scattered abroad throughout the land, scarcely ever hear the pure gospel preached or live at such a distance from the Brethren that they cannot enjoy the blessed privilege that many of us do of attending meeting every Sunday to hear the preaching of the word. My heart's desire and prayer to God, is, that many of our dear ministering brethren, (where they can be spared,) might be awakened to a sense of duty: that many might emigrate south or west where brethren are so much needed; and there locate, build up churches, and continue to build each other up in the faith.

This in my humble opinion, is the way missionaries should go. And I would further say in conclusion, that I am always glad to read Church News. We are trying to keep the Ark of the Lord moving. During last year there were seven added to the Church by baptism.

Brethern, when you travel in the west, make this one of your passing ways, for we are always glad when brethren stop with us.

JOHN FRITZ.

Richland, Iowa.

BLOUNTVILLE, TENN.,
March 28th 1869.

Brother Holsinger:—As I have no appointment to day and have an interest in the work of the Lord: I will therefore give you a few items of church news. Since our last Annual Meeting, I have helped to visit between twenty and twenty five members, who have all been baptized in the likeness of the death and burial of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. My field of labor seems large to me, I have been engaged most of my time, since our last Annual meeting in endeavoring to preach Christ and him crucified, in Sullivan county, Tenn. and in Scott and Washington counties of Virginia. I have lately visited one branch of the Church in Scott county, Va. lately organized; the interest there is flattering; we think by the help of the Lord there will be an ingathering in that little branch of the church when I visit it again, the first May next; at which time I also expect to visit the brethren north of Clinch River, and the friends in the Rye Cove where I once held a two day's meeting: all in Scott county. I lately heard from the last named place, and I have no doubt in my mind but that there will be a good work accomplished there, if the brethren are faithful to help to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. We sincerely crave the prayers of the church. Amen.

HENRY GARST.

A Special Invitation.

The brethren at Pipe Creek, Md., contemplate holding a Communion Meeting, (where the Y. M. of 1867 was held,) Lord willing, on Saturday and Sunday the 22nd and 23rd of May, commencing at 1½ P. M.; and hereby extend a cordial invitation to the ministering brethren to come to them on that occasion; and especially to those who attend this year's A. M., and can make it suit to come to us on their return.—Brethren who could come and stay a week among us are heartily invited to do so. Come and help us to labor in the Lord.

PHILIP BOYLE.

Queries.

1. In Acts 16: 3 we read: "Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and took and circumcised," &c. Will some one please compare this Scripture with Gal. 5: 2, 3, and give an explanation?

2. What is meant by the four beasts we read of in Rev. 4: 6 as being full of eyes before and behind?

3. In the second epistle of John we read: "The elder unto the elect lady." And again, in the fifth verse: "Now I beseech thee, lady." If she was a sister in the Lord, why does he call her "lady"? An explanation wanted.

JACOB BARE

Will some brother or sister give an explanation of 1st. Corinthians 3: 15? The passage reads as follow: "If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire."

JOSEPH WEAVER.

Will some brother give an explanation of Isaiah 43: 6?

DANIEL BOWERS

Will some brother be so kind as to give an explanation of 1st. John 5: 7? MICHAEL FORNEY.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Middle Fork branch, Clinton Co., Ind., April 5th, infant daughter of brother Franklin, and sister Sarah IDEL; aged 16 days. Funeral services by Elder Daniel Neher and John W. Metzger, from the last verses of 4th chapter of first Thessalonians.

J. N. CRIPE.

In Cedar Creek congregation, Dekalb Co., Ind., brother R. G. SITTEN, aged 42 years, 2 months, and 24 days. He leaves a wife and five children to mourn their loss. He was a member of the Church for ten years. Funeral discourses by Jacob Gump and H. Elson, from Rev. 14: 13

In Sandy Creek branch, Fayette Co. Pa., Jan. 17th. our much-loved sister, ELISABETH THOMAS, wife of brother Michael Thomas, aged 51 years, 7 months, and 15 days.

She received the anointing according to her wish. She was also a mother in the Samaritan cause. She had peace with every body, and was loved by all who knew her.—Funeral service by brother Joseph Recknor and the writer. Text, 1 Thess. 4 : 16—18.

JACOB BERGHLY.

Visitor please copy.

THE Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

To a Latitudinarian Brother.

In Galatians 3: 28. Paul announces a most momentous truth when he assures his brethren that in their new character and relation "there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." Because there is diversity in the manifold works of God, and yet no contrariety, many peoples and tongues and yet but one blood, many contend that schisms and guilds in religion do not conflict with the unity of the Church. But the same principle that allows this in the Church, also allows it in the family. If there were no families, united in the bonds of a common necessity, there could be no Church, and the principle that unites different sexes and temperaments in a compact so close as to constitute two but one, is a type of the amalgamation that affects the unity of the household of faith. If the fact that unity in diversity is every where manifest in the works of God, justifies the conclusion that conflicting sects can maintain "the unity of the Spirit," it also leads to the inference that separate and contrary interests in the family are compatible with domestic felicity, and that each individual may set up for himself in the matter of religion, and thus fill the world with as many sects as there are persons. God is a Trinity and yet One. And the insertion and in being of Himself into humanity constitutes Christianity. "I and the Father are one," is an expression full of meaning to the followers of Christ. No two are alike in all respects in any family, not even the unity of the Eternal Three. The Father is not the Son, and the Spirit is not either of the Others in the work achieved by each in the scheme of Redemption. In office and essence of being they are One, however varied may be their modes of operation. Where the Spirit of Christ prevails there is unity of sentiment, unity of purpose, and unity of action in all that pertains to the revealed of God. It is the nurture of this unity that makes the Church a Brotherhood, and its exhibition that gives the world the most persuasive and practical evidence of its Divine origin. To "be partakers of the Divine nature" is to manifest unmistakably that we are brought into harmony with a Three-One God, who will no more justify divisions in His "One Body" than in His Tri-Personal Being. All notion of plurality is as absolutely excluded from the one Church as from the One God. The oneness in Creation in all its relation to the Divine purpose, and the oneness of the family in the very diversities essential to its existence, are types of the unity of the Church in its Life, and the ordinances prepared by the Founder for its expression. Whether you have read sectarian books, or fallen into the society of creed-mongers, or whether with your own hook and line you fished your views out of the Dead Sea, I know not, but that somehow you have been poisoned with false doctrine is painfully evident from the [illegible] hand of fellowship to those who are itching for a new vocabulary of derision to pour on the followers of Christ in the institutions of Baptism and Feetwashing, is to have "fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." To bid God-speed to those who "make the commandments of God of none effect by their traditions," is to stand under the arms of Anti-christ and help to fill up the cup of God's indignation. To labor for unity by contaminating ourselves with every sect that offers opportunity, is like pretending to consolidate the conjugal compact & augmenting domestic comfort, by illicit commerce with other families. To denounce others as unchristian or ungodly because they cannot see with us eye to eye in matters which are too dimly revealed for our apprehension is not according to the mind of Christ: and to affiliate with such as pervert the plainest injunctions of the Holy Spirit, and substitute their own inventions for the arrangements of Infinite Wisdom, is nothing but climbing up some other way," thus identifying ourselves with thieves and robbers. What is wanting, my brother, that you must twist and distort into all sorts of religious attitudes, in order to be all things to all men? Is the Church so defective, that you cannot fill out the harmonious attractive outline of Christian Character, without picking up a morsel here and there, thrown out by antagonistic factions? You do not scruple to support doctrines & practices which are as widely separated by principle as Christ and Antichrist. All this it is pretended has for its impulse the all-comprehending love of God, working by different instrumentalities to compass the same end. This is a poor, false, disastrous representation of Christianity, and no one who takes comfort in it can feel at home in the Brotherhood. The unity of doctrine and practice, springing out of the unity of God, is so radical and inflexible that nothing but the living, Spirit-polished crystals of grace can be built into compactness and beauty upon it.

Baptism.

BY J. H. MOORE.

As much controversy has frequently arisen upon the claim, that a plurality of actions contained in the full demand of the commission, is [illegible] defendents of Trine Immersion to resort to the most awthentic proof, any where to be found, to sustain the fact, that a plurality of actions is taught in the Commission as given by Christ to his apostles; and as a dispute has arisen about the commission implying a plurality of actions, and we cannot decide the dispute to the satisfaction of some of our opponents, alone upon the law of the commission, it is necessary to take a sentence which contains a similar construction, and place it by the side of the commission and see if the latter will harmonize with the former, to sustain the plurality of actions in both.

If the sentences are similar, and the latter implies a plurality of actions, it is evident that the former does.

To prove that the commission implies a plurality of actions, by placing by the side of it a similar sentence, is the design of this article; and if the reader will follow me with an humble mind, I think I can show him that Trine Immersion is plainly taught in the Holy Commission; and in order to do this, I must choose a sentence and place it by the side of the former sentence. The sentence that I choose, will be found in John 19 : 20 "And it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin." I presume that there is no scientific scholar that would deny the plurality of actions in this sentence, as Pilate could not have written the superscription in the three languages with one action only; hence, he must necessarily have written at three different times. I wish to show, that this is similar to the commission and in sense has a similar construction. It is evident that when John made use of the three nouns,(Hebrew, Greek and Latin) that he did not mean that the title was written in the Hebrew people, or the Greeks, or the Latins,(or the Romans,) but in the language of the Hebrews, and in the language of the Greeks and in the language of the Latins. This is the true sense of the sentence, and cannot be justly denied.

I will now place it by the side of the disputed part of the commission, and let the reader see them side by side.

"And baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."—Matth. 28 : 19.	"And it was written in the language of the Hebrew, and of the Greek, and of the Latin." John 19 : 20.

It is admitted by eminent Greek scholars, that [illegible] may be used in its proper connection with the Son and Holy Ghost, without altering the sense; hence we will place them side by side in that form.

And baptizing them in the name of the Father, and in the name of the Son, and in the name of the Holy Ghost.	And it was written in the language of the Hebrew, and in the language of the Greek, and in the language of the Latin.

You now have a common-sense view of the two sentences, side by side; and who will say they do not imply a plurality of actions?

I have placed these sentences in these different forms; and is there any one that can justly claim that the right hand sentence does not imply three actions? If it implies three actions, it is evident that the commision does, as they are similar sentences.

We will agree that there is no real necessity of a dispute upon the expressions——"Baptizing them in the name of the Father," and "It was written in the language of the Hebrew,"——from the fact that both imply an action; and no one who is acquainted with language will go so far as to say they do not consequently, we can sincerely agree that each expression requires an action of itself, without the aid of other words, to convey the idea more distinctly; and if each expression of itself, contains a sufficient amount of words appropriately applied to convey the necessary idea, which indicates an action, it is clearly evident that the latter clause—"out of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost,"—"and of the Greek and of the Latin" —are not separate from the former.

We will agree upon the demand of the first clause, in the commission, and not upon the latter clause; it is necessary to consider them (or at least one of them) as a separate one, and show that each one of itself implies itself a single action. As the title-clause proves that another action, besides the writing of the title in the Hebrew, took place, why not the commission clause prove that another should take place besides the one in the name of the Father? We have proven that the first clause of the commission implies an action, and if so, what can the second clause imply? Can it imply the same thing that the first implies? If Christ desired that only one action should take place, and that is clearly specified by the first clause, why did he have the second clause?—since the first indicates all the actions necessary. If the first clause of the commission implies an action, and the second clause another, it is evident that the two clauses imply two actions; and if the two clauses are a proof of two actions, the three clauses must necessarily indicate three actions.

These thoughts I now commit to the sincere consideration of the reader, thinking that I have proven Three Immersion by the immutable word of the Lord.

The Bright Side.

Look on the bright side. It is after all the right side. The times may be hard, but it will make them no easier to wear a gloomy and sad countenance. It is the sunshine and not the cloud that makes a flower. There is always that hope or sound as which should cheer and fill the heart with warmth. The sky is blue even when there is black ones. You have troubles of your own, have others. None are free from them. Perhaps it is as well that none should be—. The world would not love to live—fortune and courage to make. That would be a dull one, and the sailor would never sing still, where there was nothing to fear on the ocean of the ocean. It is the duty of every one to extract all the happiness and enjoyment they can, without and within; and above all, to look on the bright side of things. What, though [illegible] The days will turn and the tread mill. In the long run the [illegible] What is ill becomes well [illegible] right. We are not [illegible] or [illegible] and they are sparing [illegible] right.—

[illegible] to look on the bright side of things. A gloomy spirit can cast a dark shadow over all God's beautiful universe.—Voice of Truth.

For the Companion.

Non-essentials.

Under this persuasion many of our kind friends and neighbors are living and comforting themselves—that this commandment or such an ordinance is not essential to salvation. And yet holding forth that their hope is so bright, and their assurance so great, of being in perfect favor with their Creator, that if it were not for the Law and Testimony whereby to detect right from wrong, and truth from error, we would be in a sad dilemma indeed. But for our happy consolation the Savior has said, (Matt. 7 : 15, 16.) "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheeps' clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves : ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns ? or figs of thistles ?" And 21st verse : "Not every one that saith unto me, 'Lord, Lord,' shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

Now dear reader, and fellow traveler with me to the bar of God, from the above quotations with many others in Holy Writ it will be seen that the Lord will require a strict obedience from the children of men in the keeping of all his commandments. And for the satisfaction of our kind friends, and brethren too, we will try to cite you to the people that lived under the Old Testament dispensation, and the consequences that followed them that obeyed not the word of the Lord. Gen. "thou shalt not eat," but of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.—Adam transgressed, and the result we all know.

We pass the deluge and the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and come to the servitude of Israel in the land of Egypt, which servitude was very grievous unto the children of Israel, (and sinner yours is no better). Well the Lord gives a command to Moses to request Pharaoh to let Israel go, but the king declines, and what are the consequences ? Ten judgments befall the Egyptians before the Israelites fully get clear of them. Now we notice the people of God's peculiar choice, the descendants of faithful Abraham, who staggered not at the command of God in the offering of his son Isaac, but obeyed the command, and it was accounted unto him for righteousness. But sorrowful to tell, the descendants of faithful Abraham were not all Abraham-minded, but oftentimes murmured at the doings and ways of the Lord, whereby they displeased him ; and they not only murmured, but some of them also boldly disobeyed the Lord, of whom were Nadab and Abihu, sons of Aaron and priests of the Lord, who offered strange fire, and the fire slew them. Read the commencement of the 10th chapter of Leviticus : read also in Numbers 12th chapter, about the leprosy of Miriam ; 14th chapter about the murmurers; 16th chapter, about Korah, Dathan, etc. ; 21st chapter about the fiery serpents ; and 22nd chapter, about king Balak sending to Balaam for to curse the children of Israel, wherin Balaam made very honest pretentions of obeying the command of the Lord, but inwardly having a secret hankering after the presents and honors of the king, as the sequel reveals it. The dumb ass, speaking with man's voice, forbade the madness of the prophet. This circumstance seems to agree with 2nd Thessalonians, 2 : 10, 11, 12. And as for Moses, who was the writer of the foregoing narratives, for the disobedience of one command, could not enter into the promised land. Read also Joshua 7th chapter about the transgression of Achan where he had taken the Babylonish garments and two hundred shekels of silver and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels' weight, which he hid in the earth in the midst of his tent, but could not hide them from the Lord. And the Lord also had ways and means to bring the unlawful gain to light.

And now to the last, but not least, of Old Testament transgressions that I intend speaking of in this place. You will find it recorded in first Samuel 15th chapter. This shows what good meaning accomplished in that day and time. To be more fully understood, we will quote the 22nd and 23rd verses. "And Samuel said : Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt-offerings and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of the Lord ? Behold ! to obey is better than sacrifice : and to hearken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, [illegible] rejected thee from being king."

And now, dear reader, whoever you be, the above Scriptures I have selected as a well-wisher of your and my undying souls and as a lover of the truth. And as all disobedience is sin in whatever shape or form it may be, it becomes all God-fearing people to hold forth the truth as contained in the Bible, although a great many good-meaning people may have it to say that this or that writer is too particular, or this or that preacher is too stringent, and thereby with old, good-meaning king Saul lose their eternal kingdom in heaven. But the apostle John by the command of the Lord has written (Rev. 21 : 14) : "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have a right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Then, I understand religion to be the keeping of the commandments. And I further understand that religion begins in the heart and not in the head, for that is a little too high ; but when the heart is right the mind will be right also, and that I understand to be in the head : and when these are right, the good fruit will begin to show itself just as the Savior would have it : "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Regret not the golden age that is behind.—There is one before and beckons you. Its rewards are not for the idle, but for the brave hearts disciplined to toil.

For the Companion.

"If so be that we suffer with him." Rom. 8:17.

The language here expressed by the Apostle signifies that every child of God must pass through suffering. If we would be "joint heirs with Christ," we must suffer with him. If we ever expect an admittance into the Everlasting Kingdom, we must undergo a share of suffering before that event. Paul suffered; and when he would have the Lord remove his suffering, his Lord would say, Never mind Paul; suffer it to be so, for "my grace is sufficient for you:" my strength is made perfect in weakness.

Let us take the lives of the forefathers for examples, and see whether they had sufferings to endure.—Look at what was endured by Abraham, the father of the faithful. I imagine that we would think it more than we would be able to bear. It seems to me as though I can see that good old father, and his only son, traveling toward the mountain where he was to offer him upon an altar. We do not find that he complained; but that he humbled himself under the mighty hand of God and suffered it to be just as God had commanded.

We will take the life of Joseph, and see what he suffered after he was separated from his loving father. He was taken by his brethren and thrown into a pit, after which he was taken out and sold a slave into Egypt. Yet Joseph learned obedience and suffered all things. Again, we see him accused falsely, and was cast into prison; but the Lord was with him, and, in course of time, delivered him. Thus, through suffering, he was brought to honor and happiness.

Look at the sufferings of Job. With what patience he suffered the loss of all things; yea, even of his sons and daughters! He was afflicted from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet, and yet he patiently bore all. Job is a good pattern of patience under suffering.

But let us take a review of our Savior's life. The first thing was obedience; and then we find him in the wilderness suffering the temptations of the devil, and without anything to eat for forty days; but all this did not move him. And then we hear him exclaim: The foxes have holes; the birds have nests; but the Son of Man has not where to lay his head." His tormentors buffetted him, smote him with the palms of their hands, and even spit upon him. And when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate, the governor. They covered him with a scarlet robe, put a crown of thorns on his head and a reed in his hand, and bowed before him and mocked him: and thus he suffered a long train of trials untill he yielded up his life at the hands of his cruel enemies. He was oppressed and afflicted, yet opened not his mouth. "In his humiliation his judgment was taken away."

Behold what the Lamb of God has suffered for us! What a highly-favored people we are! We live in a land of plenty, and have all things within reach that that one should wish for. But remember, "if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together; for I reckon," continues Paul, "that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us.—And if we wish to know wherein we must suffer with Christ, let us turn to the first chapter of second Peter, and see if those Christian graces be in us. We find the Apostle confirming the souls of the disciples and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the Kingdom of God; for unto us it is given in behalf of Christ not only to believe on him but also to suffer for his sake.—"It is a faithful saying: If we be dead with him we shall also live with him; if we suffer, we shall also reign with him; if we deny him, he also will deny us." Now dear brethren, let us not think it too unpleasant, to go to meeting; for remember, we must suffer with him, if we expect to be rewarded. We are too apt to say, "Well, it don't make much difference if I don't go, so the minister is there." So the minister might also say, "There is no use in my going, for there will be no one there." But let us not so reason. Let every soul say in the language of Joshua: "As for me, and my house, we will serve the Lord."

Much more might be said of the sufferings of the apostles and prophets, and of the blessed Lamb of God, but let the foregoing suffice. May the good Lord grant us grace that we may all live faithful unto the end, and receive an inheritance among all the sanctified, is the prayer of your unworthy babe in Christ.

A Mother's Love.

Happy is he who knows his mother's love. What is so pure? The patriot expects fame, the friend sympathy, the lovers pleasure. Even religion, while she waters her faith with tears, looks forward to the best fruit of her labor, and her love. But material affection springs from the breast, uninvoked by the touch of interest. Its objects are the weak and woeful. It haunts the cradle of infantile pain, or hovers near the couch of the faint and forsaken. Its sweetest smiles break through the clouds of misfortune, and its gentlest tone rises amid the signs of suffering and sorrow. It is a limpid and lovely flow of feeling, which gushes from the fountain head of purity, and courses the heart, through selfish designs and sordid passions, immingling and unsullied. What is so firm? Time and misfortune, penury and presecution, hatred, imfamy, may roll their dark waves successfully over it; and still it smiles unchanged; or the potent allurements of fortune, opulence and pride, power and splendor may woo her, and yet she is unmoved—a mother "loves and loves forever."

Offense.

To day, while all alone, and busied about the common household duties, I was meditating over the little word offense, which signifies "displeasure or scandal." Jesus has said that it is impossible but that offenses would come; he also says: "But woe unto him through whom they come." Luke 17: 1. Woe—that gives us to understand that the offender will be punished; and, we fear, pretty severely, for we are told that it would be better for us to have a mill-stone hanged about our necks and be cast into the Sea, than to offend one of these little ones—children of God.

Dear brethren and sisters: I solemnly fear that when we examine ourselves closely, we will see that we are too neglectful of this which is of so great importance. There are various ways to offend. Some of us possess such very timid, sensative feelings, that it takes but very little to offend. We plainly see that we cannot be too careful in our talk, and in our every action, lest we be the cause of offense to some one, and then we have committed a sinful act. It is a lack of duty; and the worst of all, it causes a stumbling, and perhaps even make a hatred that will be obstinate to subdue. Just see what offense leads to. Should we not pray, by the help of God, to be clear from such a sin? I am sorry to say that I know a few characters who really appear to be happy when they have wounded the feelings of some of their fellow-creatures. If this is so with any of us, I think we should at once try to [illegible]

We cannot ask favors of high heaven, and at the same time care not whom we offend. If we have the boldness to ask heavenly favors we certainly can expect them to be granted; if we do. I fear we will offend the All-supreme One, who so patiently bears with us, in our much weakness, instead of pushing us away offensively or debarring us from the light, as would be if used according as our deservings. "Let us not, therefore, judge one another any more; but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling-block, or an occasion to fall in his brother's way." Rom. 14: 13. I fear we can easily throw little stumbling blocks in the path of our brother or sister; such as half sneering at their talk, or turning away from their opinions, or perhaps not noticing their talk at all. If we act thus, it is certainly offensive.

Look at the little prattler that can only totter around its mother. If she pays no attention to its prattle, and pushes it off, it not only becomes offended, but disgusted and angry. And as we are only babes, (though some of us are full grown) we should be careful not to kindle anger and disgust. Let us rather "heap coals of fire," by kindness. Would to heaven that we could always feel kind towards all men: then we must be prayerfully watchful in the guidance of our master, lest we leave much undone. We must be equally careful, that our "good be not evil spoken of." We are watched on all sides; and our heavenly path is beset with many temptations that are calculatad to draw us from our watchguard. May we be watchful and grow stronger in the Divine love, is the sincere prayer of your very weak and unworthy sister in the Lord.

Frankness.

Frankness is supposed to be a common virtue. It is most uncommon. It is indeed an extraordinary thing. It requires truth, simplicity, love and genuine goodness. Many men speak truth very plainly when angry; many speak pleasant truth frankly. But few there are whose souls are so balanced in an atmosphere of love that they speak whatever needs to be said, to each and to all, plainly, gently and fully. The dearest friends live together for years without daring to speak things which they know, and which each party knows that the other knows. Parents live with a reserve years long toward their children. Children carry untouched unsyllabled thoughts and feelings that take hold of their very being. Friends meet and part day by day—friends so true that they would almost die for each other, or, what is harder than this, who are willing to live for each other—and never speak of things that each knows is passing in the other's mind. It is very strange to see people come up to conversation in topics that, by due examination are sacred, and without word or look, one glides past on one side and the other upon the other side, and meet beyond going down the common channel again. Was there ever a thoughtful, sensitive person, that dared to be open, transparent, frank?

But, however this may be, there can be no doubt that Christian people are not frank enough for each other's good. If men knew how to speak the truth in love, how rich might one become! A man might stand then in the focus of all the wisdom of all his friends. But refusing to let their light shine, men now grope in the partial light of their own wisdom, distempered by selfdrive.—Exchange

The most common error of men and woman is that looking for happiness somewhere outside of useful work. It has never yet been found & never will be while the world stands. Of all the miserable human beings it has been our fortune to know, they were the most wretched who had retired frem useful employments, in order to enjoy themselves.

The Twelve Foundations.

"The wall of the city had twelve foundations." Rev. 21: 14

The seer beheld these foundations laid in twelve massive tiers or courses, undergirding the holy city beneath the jasper wall, clasping it round and round in solid and burnished coils, as of adamant. And in these jeweled stones, cut in luminous ciphers, so as to be plain to all who drew near, were "the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb." What a recompense for life-long trial, when John saw his own name, not branded in the earthly Jerusalem, but blazoned on the wall of the Jerusalem above!

Not through eminent merit, or shining graces, are these names there, but as "apostles of the Lamb." These are they which "followed the Lamb" withersoever he went. They heard his voice, and loved his ways, and learned of him who was "meek and lowly;" and when he died and rose again, and went up to heaven, they went forth in the power of his promise and spiritual presence, and preached over the world salvation through his blood.

The first received the baptism of fire. These were the first heralds of the cross. In the simple truths of the gospel which they first uttered, they laid the foundations of the City of God.—"The church is built on the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself be the chief corner stone." And it is meet that on the lowest stone of the spiritual temple their names should be preserved in everlasting remembrance.

Here, O Christian men! behold the deep-hewn foundations of your hope. Learn how safe and inviolate is the charter of your inheritance. That hope is based on the living rock of truth, the faithful word of him who is "the Truth." Bless God for the glorious and unperplexing simplicities of the gospel. Cling to its elemental sayings, its plain verities. "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."—"Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." "Come unto me all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." How rich that field of truth wherein no foot can wander without striking on some such golden vein of mercy!

Yours is a "city which hath foundations," "a kingdom which cannot be moved," "an inheritance which fadeth not away," "a tabernacle which will not be taken down." Amidst the false and wavering shadows of Time, "you have in heaven a better and more enduring substance." "Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath such recompense of reward." Be ye "steadfast and unmoveable" likewise.

These "foundations were garnished with all manner of precious stones." But what is mingling radiance of sapphire and topaz, of amethyst and chrysoprase, to the glory of God, to the vision of the Savior? Yet these are there, all that earth holds excellent and precious; and the loveliness even of earth should lead you to discern, in material elements and forms, types and similitudes of heaven. If such is the embroidery of the footstool, what must be the splendor of the throne! Surely the almond-knobs and lilly-work that wreathe the door-posts of the temple, the fair adorning of God's outer courts, should make you long to "see his power and his glory," so as only they are seen in the sanctuary above.

"Oh, send out thy light and thy truth: let them lead me, let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles."—Psalm 43: 3.—Burns.

The Music of the Spheres.

The universe is a great harp, and each orb a string, at least, attuned. Sin has broken that string, and now there is a jarring in the notes that ascend to the throne of the Eternal. One great end of redemption is to re-adjust this jarring string of our world. The whole universe, in some measure, felt the fall of man, just as one discordant string tells upon the harmony of all the strings of a musical instrument; and the whole universe will feel the effects of redemption when this world is once more put in tune by the hand of love and mercy. Then sweeter melodies and sublimer harmonies will arise than any that have yet ascended to the throne of the Eternal.—Anon.

Feel What You Say.

The tale of the traveler's cloak is an old and familiar one. The wind, seeking to remove it, blew its fiercest blast; but the traveler only drew his cloak the closer about him.

"I will show you a better way," said the sun, and he shone upon the traveler so bright and warm that the cloak was gladly laid aside. Every natural heart wraps about itself the cloak of cold indifference to the claims of the religion of Jesus. All religious teachings are vain which fail to penetrate or melt this icy covering. This is the great difficulty which in some form meets every religious teacher.

A few thoughts on the subject of the Annual Meeting.

Many of our brethren were at our Annual Meeting last year, and can testify with me that much dissatisfaction was felt not only by the brethren but by others also by reason of the large concourse of people that attended with us. The time has come that we cannot all enjoy the Annual Meeting as we did when the Church was in its infancy; when we could all sit together in one common room and distinctly hear and understand the words as they fell from the lips of our old Brethren; when they were permitted to preach the Gospel at the place of meeting and even to wash one another's feet, and sit together as in heavenly places. But that time has gone by. Our number has increased and largely multiplied, and has therefore required changes, not far different orders or customs, but for convenience to maintain the order of the Church; and still to maintain that order, we must make changes to meet circumstances as they are required.

Our object should not only be for enjoyment at the meeting while in session, but what will result from it afterward. If the counsels of our Brethren are good we can enjoy them equally as well afterwards as as the time they are given. When we look at the vast expense, of going to, and holding our Annual Meeting, and our enjoyment comparitively small, shall we not adopt a different plan?

I now wish to propose a plan. Let the District Meetings remain as they are at present, by the congregations sending their questions with two delegates to the district meeting, and let the congregations be numbered in the districts: then let the papers be presented in regular succession, from first to last, and let the district meeting give answers to all the questions, keeping a record of those questions and answers which they consider to be of a local nature. The answers are to be added to the questions and sent to the Yearly Meeting, and let each district meeting appoint two elders such as carry out the decision of the Annual Meeting in their own congregations, as delegates to compose the entire Annual Meeting. Let them chose their clerk and moderator. Then number the States from East to West with the number of districts in each State; then proceed to counsel without a standing committee, commencing with the first district of the first State, to receive the papers for counsel as at a district meeting, until all is through; and let the questions appear on the minutes, with the answers given or approved of by the Annual Meeting to be sent to the churches where they originated, thus representing the Council of the Apostles at Jerusalem. Social Prayer-Meeting.

God who sent his own dear Son from his celestial abode to this sin polluted world, to redeem fallen humanity, has commanded us to "watch and pray," and the more we watch and pray the better it will be for us. But satan who was not ashamed to approach our blessed Redeemer after he had fasted and prayed so much for us, is trying by his carnal devices, to keep us from that closest communion that we may have with our God. Dear brethren, we who have neglected this important duty, which will, if conducted in accordance with the gospel, establish us firmer in the faith of the blessed immortality, and unite us stronger in the bonds of gospel love and affection, 'let us not forsake the assembling of ourselves together, but "let us come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need."

In my humble opinion, I do believe if the followers of Jesus would assemble themselves more frequently at the house of God and pray for, and admonish one another we would let our light so shine before men that there would be many more brought from darkness to the light of the everlasting gospel, wherein they could glorify our Father which is in Heaven. Just think of it, dear brethren; there are many of our friends who have lived within the vicinity of the church for a number of years who are still in the clutches of the enemy! Should not we, by the help of God, who has done so much for us, try to win their precious souls to Christ? If social meeting has been a benefit to those who have conducted them, let us not forsake the assembling of ourselves together any longer upon this important occasion, but let us assemble ourselves together and admonish one another; and so much the more as we see the day approaching.

Exposition of Matt. 11: 11.

John the Baptist in his imprisonment had sent two of his disciples to Jesus to inquire, "Art thou he that should come?" The question implied a weakness. It made it seem as if John's faith was wavering. Had John not said to these very disciples, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world"? But when these disciples have left, Jesus defends this seeming want of faith on the part of the forerunner.—He declares him not to be a reed easily shaken by the wind of doubt and uncertainty. Nor was he a weak, effeminate person as one in fine clothing in the king's palace. But instead he stood at the head of all the Old Testament prophets. He was the last and greatest of the forerunners of Christ. He stood on the very threshold of the new dispensation. That was a dark dispensation. Few in it obtained a correct faith in the Messiah to come. But now says Christ when I have fully set up my kingdom on earth and shall have accomplished and completed the works of redemption so that men may look at it as a finished work, the least in this kingdom shall be greater than the greatest of all who looked forward to the time of my coming.

In what respect then is the disciple of Jesus to-day greater than was John the Baptist? He is greater in the extent of his religious privileges and enjoyments. Greater in a knowledge of the plan of salvation—in a perception of religious truth—in a feeling of God's love and compassion for a sinful world. John had never seen a Savior who had hung upon the cross.—He is greater in the ground of his faith. The least disciple may have a deeper insight into the spiritual things of God than could the greatest prophet of the past have.

Child of God, yours is a sweet privilege. In the prison house of your doubts and fears you can have greater assurances of God's love for you than did ever the forerunners of Jesus possess. You have greater light—greater knowledge—a nearer view of the great heart of Jehovah than it was the privilege of the greatest Old Testament prophet to enjoy. Ought you not love God more for his richer distinguishing mercy towards you? You are greater in all these respects because God has now highly favored you. See to it that you abuse not your privileges.

Review of "A Dialogue on Feet-washing," by J. S. Flory.

Having read the above dialogue I wish to review a portion of the same. We will commence with the following:—

Brother B. "You are beginning to see the inconsistency of trying to follow the incidental and necessary steps of the Savior, when making preparations to establish an ordinance to teach us humility, &c. Particularly when those things are not commands or binding on us to observe."

Brother A. You do not mean to say we are not commanded to follow his example?

B. "We are to follow his example just as far as he has commanded us to follow it."

Here Brother A. asks, How far is that?

Brother B. in answering this question is very careful not to tell brother A. that the Savior both washed and wiped the Apostles, feet. He acknowledges that Christ says: "I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you." Brother B. certainly knows that Christ both washed and wiped. We cannot see what any brother can gain by speaking against the example which our Savior has commanded us to follow, and contending for that which is neither command nor example. For one to wash and another to wipe is not Christ's example, neither is it anywhere commanded.

Profanity.

How many swear! The old swear; the young swear; the men swear; woman swear; children of less than six summers swear; and church members swear! Oh can it be that those, who bear the blessed name of Jesus, swear? Yes they—some of them—swear. They may not use the grosser terms of profanity—terms that make the hair stand on end, and shock the common sensibilities of man, yet they swear. They may not use the name of God, or the name of Jesus, or the name of the devil; and yet they think nothing of swearing "by golly," or "by gum," or "by George," or "by jingo," or "by gosh," or by something else equally improper. This is a somewhat refined way of swearing; and yet it always sounds harshly on the ears of a refined Christian.

Then there are others who use still milder terms than these; who often cry out, "good gracious!" "oh mercy!" "La me!" and the like. Now these are soft, sweet, innocent words in proper connections, but otherwise they are the letting in of profane water, the beginning of swearing. They are to swearing what the blossom is to sour fruit, or the little acorn to the giant oak. That church members use such terms, no one will deny. You hear them drop from consecrated lips on the street, in your parlors, in circles of gaiety, in halls of fashion, and in the most refined society of our day. But whether used through ignorance, or habit, or intention, they are used sinfully in such connections.

Jesus says: "Let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than this cometh of evil."

Shakspeare says:

> "'Tis not the many oaths that make the truth;
> But the plain single vow that is vowed true."

Let me say to as many church members as may read these lines,

> "Maintain your rank, magnanimity despise—
> To swear is neither brave, polite, nor wise."

Remember that you are church members, in union with "the body of Chris," and the oracles of the Lord Jesus. Oh defile not then the Lord's vessel, profane not His name, reproach not His Church, dishonor not His cause, and soil not the Christian character. Speak words of soberness—words of truth—words of reverence—words of chastity—words of propriety—words of refinement—words of tenderness and love—words becoming those professing godliness. Daily offer the prayer of David: "Set a watch, oh Lord! before my mouth: and keep the door of my lips."—Lutheran Observer.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Bad boys Make Bad men.

Many years ago, a little boy lived in ancient Rome, who was very cruel to harmless animals. He delighted to torture and kill flies, and would pursue the little creatures hour after hour with a pin, to pierce them through, and see them flutter and die in agony. Do you think that a boy so cruel became a kind, loving man? Not he. As he grew older, he exhibited the same cruel disposition towards men. At last he was made Emperor of Rome, and then he advanced in cruelty at a most fearful rate. This man was the bloody Nero, who killed his own wife, and ordered his mother to be assassinated. Nor was this all. He delighted so much in cruel things, that he finally ordered the city to be set on fire, just to see how it would look. And when it was burning, he seated himself upon a high tower, and sang and played upon his lyre. Was this strange? Is not a cruel boy likely to become a cruel man? Killing men in manhood, is only a further development of killing flies in childhood.

An aged sea captain, who had spent a long life on the ocean, said to a lady, "On shipboard, I can tell in a very short time what any sailor was in his boyhood." It was because "the boy is father to the man." He added, "I find invariably that a bad sailor is made out of a bad boy." When he saw a reckless, profane, vicious "son of the deep," he at once concluded that he was little better when a lad. Now this was just what might be expected. It is just what is seen in other things. Poor cloth makes a poor coat. Poor farms produce poor crops. Poor timber makes a poor house. And so wicked children make wicked men and woman.—Mother's Treasury.

"Acting a Lie."

Flora was an only child, and as she was obedient at home, so she was at school. She wanted to know all the rules of the school, that she might not break any of them. One day her teacher said that when a question was asked, any one of the class who could give an answer might raise her right hand. Flora was telling her mother about this, when an older girl said, "Sometimes the girls in our class raise their hands when they cannot answer the question. The teacher thinks they can, and gives them credit for a perfect lesson." At home and in sunday school Flora had learned that she ought always to speak the truth. The little girl stood for a moment looking very grave, then she spoke out bravely: "I would not do that, because I think it would be acting a lie." Flora was right. To do such a thing would be acting a lie, and the dear little girl loved truth and would not act a lie. God, our Heavenly Father, loves the truth, but he hates a lie. (Prov. 12. 22).

Passing away.

A writer beautifully treats this subject as follows:

It is astonishing with what rapidity time passes away; how the days the weeks, the months and the years roll around, carrying with them the life, beauty and the hopes of this world into a vast and unknown future. It seem but a short time indeed, since we all felt and enjoyed the springs and buoyancy of youth the delights of home, the influence of parental love, the society and counsel of friends, who now sleep in the grave; and yet some of us are aged, and the majority have attained to mature manhood. The young of the present generation are growing up around us, but in our youth we new them not. While we have been passing on, in the direction of the grave, they have sprung to occupy our places and follow rapidly in the rear. Before us we see the aged tottering along in their feebleness, and leaning upon their staves; behind us is the youth flushed with promise, and the infant pratling in its mother's arms. That circle has been kept up, unbroken, since the morning of the creation; that circle will be kept up, unbroken, untill time is lost in eternity.

Our life is a moving panorama—the pictures on the canvass pass before our eyes, delighting us for a moment, but each containing a solemn lesson and warning. He is cut an indifferet observer who does not study himself. There is the ocean, the lake the river, the mountain and the vale; the one swells in its majestic grandeur and murmurs its defiant tones, which are heard upon either shore; the other rests like a calm mirror reflecting the light of the millions of stars that sparkle in the blue concave; the river dashes on in its way to the sea; the mountain lifts its head among the clouds and casts its frowning shadows into the val below; the vale echoes the songs of its birds, the hum of human voices, the lowing of herds; while here and there is the the busy town with its active life, its ceaseless commotions, its impetuous struggles, its attractive homes and the spires of its churches pointing towards heaven. The bell rings and the pictures passes away from our sights to be seen no more. Thus it is with human life. It is an association of objects, interests, attractions and beauties, which burst upon our sight, perform their mission and accomplish their purpose, and are then lost to sight.

A good Lesson for Boys to study.

A strong and sensible writer says a good, sharp thing, and a true one, too, for boys who use tobacco: "It has utterly spoiled and utterly ruined thousands of boys. It tends to the softening and weakening of the bones, and it greatly injures the brain, the spinal marrow, and the whole nervous fluid. A boy who smokes early and frequently, or in any way uses large quantities of tobacco, is never known to make a man of much energy, and generally lacks muscular, and physical, and mental power. We would particularly warn boys, who want to be anything in the world to shun tobacco as a most baneful poison.

The laws of health are infallible; the relation between transgression and the penalty is invariable, and the affliction of the latter is certain to follow upon the former. There is nothing about which young persons are more beguiled and deluded, than the belief that they can transgress natural laws and jump the penalty. Punishment for a violation of natural law is just as certain as that the sun itself shines, and none can violate a law of his body or any part of it, that there is not registered in him a penalty.

For every one, life has some blossoming cup that is not mixed with bitterness. At every heart there is some fount of pure water, and all men, at some time or other, taste its sweetness. Who is he that has not found on his path of life some fragrant rose-bush, scenting all the air with its sweet of virtue, that the storm of time can never destroy?—Write your name in kindness, love and mercy upon the hearts of the thousands you come in contact with, year by year, and you will never be forgotten. No, your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you have touched as the stars on the brow of evening. Good deeds will shine as the stars of heaven.

Musings.

In the solitude of the forest, weather clothed in the green mantle of Spring, the brighter glow of Summer, or the sere and yellow leaf of Autumn, I can find so much to admire, and so much to reflect upon, that I have often ceased to wonder that there have been, and still are, men, who, laying aside all the ties that bind them to society, seek some secluded spot, far from the busy haunts of men, and enter into a primeval state of being, with no companions save the wild beasts of the forest and the handiwork of Nature's God. Whenever one turns his eyes the beauties of creation strike his view, and kindle in him those kindred feelings which prompt him to exclaim—Oh! with less of vice and more of virtue, how beautiful a habitation would this earthly tabernacle be. The lord of the fowl and the brute might then walk hand in hand with her who was given to him as a helpmate, through meads and shady dells, engaged in the contemplation of Him who is above all others, without a wish to gratify, save that at the end of his probationary term, he might be taken to scenes of still higher enjoyment than those of this terrestrial globe. But such is not man's destiny whilst continues a restless and discontented being, and is dissatisfied with the bounties nature has lavished upon him. No, though civilized and enlightened (as in the pride of his heart he calls himself,) whilst he continues to pursue that phantom of the imagination which has rendered thousands miserable, and sent millions to an untimely grave, he cannot be happy, for it is the bane of his existence. Under the vain delusion that it will render his prosperity, if not himself, comfortable, he goes on accumulating from year to year, until at last he finds one foot placed on a pile of gold and the other in the grave, while conscience, if not hardened as hard as Pharoah's, presents a catalogue of covetousness oppressions and crimes, sufficient to plunge him headlong into the jaws of that place which is the sure recipient of those who to gain the world lose their soul. Of this class money is the god that is worshiped, and wo to him that is without it; it is their stepping-stone to power and respectability—conceals their crimes, no matter of how deep a dye—renders nugatory the power of the law—and in short, does any and every thing they wish, until the grim monster death calls, and places them by the side of the poor laborer whom they despise while living—the poor orphan who was fed with the crumbs from the floor—or the poor beggar whom they spurned from their proud hall.—Echo.

Perseverance in Well-doing.

A busy, useful life, and none other, is a life of well doing; is a noble life, though passed in a cottage; is a happy one, though its path be rough and thorny. In a world where there is much to do, it allots little time for self-enjoyments, and no time for sinful ones. Filled up with the duties of home and business, with the paramount interests of eternity and of our souls, with good deeds done to others, and the claims they have on our help, its days, instead of walked on leaden feet, seem to fly on eagles' wings—the busiest life appearing all too idle, and the longest proving all too short for the work we have to do.

Like a toil worn laborer, weary in, though not of, his work, the Christian may sometimes wish it were concluded, and long for sunset that he might leave the field to go home. His is the desire of the Psalmist, "O that I might fly away and be at rest!"

Yet toiling and enduring, bearing others burdens along with his own living not far from himself, regarding every day as lost which is not marked by some good got or done and regarding himself as the steward of God's bounty—not a lord, but a laborer in the vineyard — that man though he may be weary in will not be weary of, well-doing.

Say No!

Are you solicited to engage in any pursuits or to enter into any engagements which your conscience reject, or which you foresee will bring a cloud on your prospects honor and usefulness? "Thou shalt say, No" Are you pressed to grant favors or indulgences to persons who have no right to ask them or who can only be injured by their favors or indulgences, too that you are not in a condition to bestow consistently with your other engagements? "Thou shalt say, no." Are you importuned to join in any amusements, to consent to any measure which you believe will sully the purity if your character or lessen the weight of good influence, or in any way exert a mischievous effect on society? "Thou shalt say, No. Let the consequence be what they may. "Thou shalt say, No." James Walker.

A dollar once broken into, soon goes. It is the same with a resolution. A resolution unbroken is as hard as gold; once change it, and it is thrown, as it were, into as many coppers, and rapidly melts away.

MY CROWN.

Laid up, prepared for me. A crown that will fit no other brow. A crown which neither man nor angel, other than myself, can wear for Jesus makes no mistakes in the adaptations of grace here or the rewards of grace hereafter. And this my crown has long been preparing—"laid up in heaven" for me. Yes, laid up but not finished. Its jewels are not all set yet, neither do all its stars sparkle now, but Jesus is gathering and treasuring them, and will take care that no precious stone is lost. Every one will occupy its true position, and gold, and silver, and precious stones be found in their appropriate places.—Some of these have already been borne by angel hands in heaven; and by the grace of my dear Savior, I am seeking to lay up other treasures also. Also these will be fitly set, as apples of gold in pictures of silver in my crown.

But though these jewels of grace are inwrought in it, my crown is the gift of my Savior, and is incomparably more precious than the jewels which adorn it. It is unique. There is no crown like it on earth. It is a crown of righteousness. There is no stain upon its purity. It is clear as the sun and white as the light. And it is a living crown, a crown of life. I shall never be called lay it aside, neither will it ever be taken from me. It will never fade or need renewel. The brow it presses is and must be immortal. Wearing it, I shall enjoy perennial youth, and be exempt from sickness, pain and death, and shall reign with my Savior a king and priest forever. And there are many similar crowns, for Jesus says to each of his disciples, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

You, dear reader, may have a crown like mine, but fitted to your brow. I hope you have one in preparation. If you do not, you have not. The apostle could say, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me in that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—National Baptist.

Closet Work.

Flee to the closet as your life, your safeguard, your hopes, your joy. God is there, Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit, salvation. No one can discharge family duties acceptably, household ministrations and governmental relations—no one can resist the wiles of the devil manfully, sustain an equilibrium of calm, peaceful, humble resignation and joyfulness, without gaining wisdom and strength in the closet. Wives do you believe this? Mothers do you? Mark well, behold that mother, that daughter, coming from the closet, with a face shining with holiness, as did that of Moses when descending the Mount of God. What now? Panoplied! Armed with helmet, sword, and shield! Her feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace! Satan is bruised under her feet! Satan finds no lodgment! All his fiery darts are hurled in vain. She is clothed with humility. The graces of the spirit shine forth radiantly; love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith. She goes forth from the closet armed.

Sisters, mothers, daughters, old and young, flee to the closet; have your regular stated seasons; adhere to them strictly, undeviatingly. Let no earthly care deprive you of these.—Home Truths.

An Impressive Incident.—At the funeral of a little child, a silver-haired pastor entered the room.—Heeding not the chair placed for him by the small table with the Bible upon it, he walked to the little form, gazed upon it, and laying his hand on the ivory forehead, spoke first to the dead: "Dear lamb! safe in the fold; safe in the fold!" Every heart throbbed, and every eye gave forth its tears at this sweetly solemn congratulation. The words of comfort rested in the parents' hearts then and ever after, and those present who had also mourned, believed and looked upward.

"A word fitly spoken, how good it is!" That loving sentence was the better prelude to the hymn and prayer, and the heart turned down with love to the book whence they were taken.

The Journey of Life.—Ten thousand human being are sent forth together on their journey. After ten years one third, at least, have disappeared. At the middle point of the common measure of life but half are still on the road. Faster and faster, as the ranks grow thinner, they that remained till now become weary, and lie down and rise no more. At three score and ten a band of some four hundred struggle on. At ninety, these have been reduced to a mere handful of thirty trembling patriarchs. Year after year they fall in diminishing numbers. One lingers a lonely marvel, till the century is over. We look again and the work of death is finished.

While we may be disposed to laugh at those who are weaker than ourselves, let us remember that our superiors may likewise hold us in derision. It is unwise in those who have superiors to deride their inferiors.

The Boy with a Straw Hat.

A CRIPLED beggar was striving to pick up some old clothes that had been thrown from a window, when a crowd of rude boys gathered about him, mimicing his awkward movements, and hooting at his helplessness and rags. Presently a noble little fellow came up, and pushing through the crowd, helped the poor cripled man to pick up his gifts, and placed them in a bundle. Then, sliping a piece of silver into his hands, he was running away, when a voice far above him, said, "Little boy with a straw hat, look up!" A lady, leaning from an upper window, said earnestly, "God bless you you, my little fellow! God will bless you for that!" As he walked along he thought how glad he had made his own heart by doing good. He thought of the poor beggar's grateful look; of the old lady's smile, and her approval; and last and better than all, he could almost hear his Heavenly Father whispering "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy." Little reader, when you have an opportunity of doing good, and feel tempted to neglect it, remember the little "boy with a straw hat."—Echo.

SINGING.—Singing is a great institution. It oils the wheels of care, supplies the place of sunshine. A man who sings has a cheerful heart. Such a man not only works more willingly, but he works more constantly. A singing cobbler will earn as much money again as one who gives away to low spirits and indigestion. Avaricious men never sing.

The man who attacks singing throws a stone at hilarity, and would, if he could, rob June of its roses and August of its meadow larks. Singing promotes health, strengthens the voice, the organs of the throat and lungs, and prevents or cures consumption. Singing is an excellent agent for promoting mental hygiene.

The child of God will soon know the full import of all the precious promises,—the wicked will soon know what is meant by the terrible threatenings of God.

Feet-washing.

We now propose to close the discussion upon this subject at least until after the next Annual Meeting. It has been continued much longer than we had expected, or desired. Nevertheless we believe it was necessary that it should be discussed; not that the point in dispute is of much signification, but the issues arising therefrom. We believe the Annual Meeting should be more liberal upon the matter than they have heretofore been. We think each congregation ought to have full liberty to act for itself upon all matters not plainly defined in the Scriptures. We may be too liberal, but these are our convictions. Where the word of God is plain we will not give an iota, but we think Jesus himself has made the way narrow enough, without our blockading it with our own commands and traditions.

We agreed last week to give the original ideas of all the articles on hand upon the subject, and hence will proceed to glean them, though we shall perhaps not get all, as several we know of coming to hand, are not now before us, one is from Elder Jacob Steel, and another from one by the name of Leedy. They may yet come to hand.

No. 1 is from John W. Diehl, Panora, Iowa. He thinks the order of the Brethren in Feet-washing is in accordance with the general order of the Christian service, two and two, and is just as near the precept and example of Jesus.

No. 2. By Abraham S. Leer, of Girard, Ills. Has no argument either way. Thinks there is no use in discussion, and we ought to trust the matter to the Annual Meeting, where the matter will be decided rightly, as "we always have the best learned brethren to do business there."

No. 3. By C. Kline, Mt. Sidney, Va. Favors the single mode but offers no new proof. He says: "some brethren say they would not turn their hand for the difference, and yet tell their brethren not to give an inch." He also asks: How could the Savior have used words that would have been more favorable to the singular mode of washing feet, than those he did use?"

No. 4. From E. Umbaugh. It appears entire elsewhere.

No. 5. D. D. Sell. Exhortation to close the discussion.—Nothing else.

No. 6. Jacob Troxel, Cerro Gordo, Ills. Is in favor of the general order. Thinks some evidently put too much emphasis on part of the example, while they overlook other parts entirely. No new argument.

No. 7. J. Shontz, Tiffin, Ohio. Does not want the subject discussed, as he fears it is sowing discord among us: and exhorts to unity and harmony.

No. 8. Peter R. Oaks, Farmington, Ills. Sentiments about the same as No. 7.

No. 9. A. J. Correll, Greenville, Tenn. Counsels moderation and forbearance; and especially against "hard sayings."—Thinks brethren on both sides of the question have feelings and souls, and may be wounded. We are to be no stumbling block neither with hand nor foot; nor tongue, nor pen. We must look with an eye of charity upon one another, for brethren on both sides are conscientiously honest. If we can sustain our position by good, sound reason, and by the law and testimony, in loving words that melt on the tongue like honey-comb, to convince the brethren of their error, then we should continue the discussion until we accomplish our end. He thinks "one side of the question is a little up grade," but does not signify which. He is an elder, near three score years of age, and admonishes his brethren in that office not to be strikers.

No. 10 —Wm. Arnold, Somerset, O. This article got into the bottom of our Manuscript Box or it would have been published. Have not room to give even a synopsis of its contents.

We have three more before us, from elder Jacob Steel, V. E. Gary, and S. N. Wine. These will all be put away for future reference, but hope they may not be needed.

And so we rest the subject, and hope the discussion may result profitably, to the preservation of brotherly union.

ANNUAL MEETING.

May 18th 1869, near Salem, Roanoke Co. Virginia.

DISTRICT MEETINGS.

East Pennsylvania district, in Tolbenhacken branch, Lebanon Co. Pa., 2 miles South of Myerstown Station, 6th of May.

Second district of Virginia, 7th and 8th of May, in Beaver Creek meeting-house.

Eastern district of Ohio, May 4th., 9 miles south of Masilon, O.

North Western District of Ohio, Eagle Creek branch, Hancock Co., 7th May.

LOVEFEASTS.

Aughwick, Huntingdon Co. Pa., 8th and 9th of May.

Pipe Creek, Md., 22nd and 23rd of May, commencing 11 A. M.

Foglesanger's meeting-house, 4 miles north of Shippensburg, Pa., 26th and 27th of May, commencing 10 A. M.

Information for the Brethren who expect to attend the Annual Meeting.

I have completed the arrangements for traveling facilities on the Virginia and Tennessee Rail road. All members attending the meeting will share the benefit of this arrangement, which is, that they shall pay full fare on the way going to the meeting where they will procure a certificate from me, which will return them over said road free of charge, good for ten days from date of meeting.

I will further inform the brethren that the cars arrive at Salem, (the place of stopping) going west at half after eight o'clock in the evening; and coming east at five o'clock in the morning. There will be conveyances in readiness to take the members to the place, or vicinity of the meeting on Sunday evening, Monday morning, Monday evening and Tuesday morning. If a few ministering brethren should arrive at this point at an early day, to attend the previous meetings, they will be received by the brethren at the depot by informing them of their intention as to the time, &c. For this purpose address Moses Brubaker, Salem, Va.

It is advised that the brethren generally do not arrive at this point until the time specified, when they will be met by the general arrangement. The place of meeting is about four miles from the depot. I will here repeat that the brethren in Botetourt County intend (no preventing providence interfering) to have meeting at different places for several days before the Yearly Meeting: say to commence on Friday 14th of May. Brethren attending these meetings who travel on the cars, will stop at Bonsacks Depot where they will be met by the brethren, who will convey them to where their services are wanted.—Those coming by private conveyances will get into the vicinity of the brethren, at Amsterdam, and will find entertainment, and an opportunity to be at meeting until time to go to the place of Yearly Meeting.

B. F. MOOMAW.

BALTIMORE MD. }
April 9th 1869. }

Dear Brother Henry:—I have both good and bad news to write to you. Elders John H. Umstad, Jacob Trostle, Jesse Roop and Ephraim W. Stoner, labored with us on the 4th and 5th inst., with great acceptability. Brother Stoner baptised the two candidates I referred to in my former letter. Others acknowledge that we have the gospel to support us in our doctrine and practice. Brother Trostle baptized two young men at Ellicott's city, some 12 miles up the Patapsco; and three more are applicants for initiation into the visible Church.—Quite a number of Methodists have applied to know if we will baptize them, and let them remain in the Methodist connection. Of course we cannot, for they could not obey the other commands of the blessed Redeemer. Their preacher in order to allay their fears, told his flock that "the Savior stood in Jordan, on a stone, and John took water up in a horn, and poured it on the Savior's head." What a subterfuge!

But as to the bad news. We purchased a lot of ground of John Eager Howard, in this city, in 1787; and in 1808 the meeting house was removed; and the Trustees permitted the Disciple Baptists to build a meeting house, with the understanding that we could use it, whenever we desired it. They have now given us official notice, that we cannot occupy it any more. We are now compelled to hire halls, until it is settled as to our rights to use the house as a place of worship. There is no doubt we have the entire legal right to use it, but they have possession at present. We must forthwith elect Trustees, in order to take possession, as all the old Trustees are dead. Pray for us.

Yours in the Lord.

L. J. GROVE.

Notice to brethren going to Annual Meeting.

I have made arrangements with the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. Co. for all the members who have been in attendance at Annual Meeting and have paid full fare going to be returned free of charge. I also made the same arrangements with the Cumberland Valley R. R. Co. from Harrisburg to Hagerstown, and there strike the Baltimore and Ohio Road. In consequence of the arbitrary demands of the Northern Central from Harrisburg to Baltimore. I have made no arrangements with that road. Hence brethren following the directions of Brother Moomaw may lose the benefit of half fare from Harrisburg. I have requested the Pennsylvania brethren to attend to the Pennsylvania Central, and the Va. Brethren to attend to the roads south of Washington D. C., north of that they are too far off, and better leave to others nearer by. So far as the Baltimore and Ohio, and Cumberland Valley roads are concerned, you will pay your fare going, asking no questions, and at Annual Meeting you will procure a ticket by me, which will return you free of charge to all points you may take the road east of Columbus Ohio, But Brethren coming from via Pittsburg must at Harrisburg take the Cumberland Valley road to Hagerstown, (and not to Baltimore.) This is the correct route, (but the difference is not much,) but I could not accede to the unreasonable demands of the Northern Central road.

D. P. SAYLER.

Dear Brother Holsinger :—I feel like writing a little for your columns for the first time.

We must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God. Now we know that the children of God have been persecuted in days gone by, and we must expect persecution more or less, if we want to live up to all that God requires of us to do; but we must be steadfast in the faith. We do not have to contend with what Paul of old had, yet we have to be laughed at and pointed at with the finger of scorn by those who go into our society; but we can bear with them, as we know God is merciful to them as well as to us. God may yet open their eyes that they may see the error of their ways before it is too late.

Now brother, if you deem these poor lines worthy a place in the Companion, insert them; if not throw them into your waste box.

I feel also like throwing in my mite to pay for those who are not able to pay for the Companion. I will enclose 50 cents for some one who is not able to pay the whole.—We have no members here who are not able to pay for it, if they want it.

ROSANNA GAULT.

West Salem, O.

Notice to the Brethren going to the next Annual meeting.

Dear Brethren:—I have made arrangements with the Orange, Alexandria and Manasses R. R., and all its branches, for all the members who will be in attendance and will have paid full fare going, to be returned free of charge. You will pay your fare going, ask no questions, and at the place of Annual Meeting you will procure a return ticket from the clerk. We should be very glad to see the brethren coming up on the O. and A. Road through the valley, and visit our churches. It is always refreshing to hear other voices. We hope brethren will start in time, so that they may spend a little season with us.

There will be conveyances from one church to another. If you wish to stop further down the valley, you have noticed through the Companion that brother Myers has given the brethren's addresses. I live a short mile from Broadway station; and the brethren will be ready at any time to bring you from there. Write in time, so that the appointments may be made for any one that wishes to come through here. My address is Bowmans Mills, Va.

SAMUEL KLINE.

The same notice was also sent us by brother John Neff, of Mt. Jackson, Va.—EDITOR.

Brother Henry:—I will hereby inform the brethren and sisters generally that we expect to hold a communion meeting here in Johnson Co. Mo. which will be (the Lord willing) on the 27th of May. To be held with the brethren a short distance north of Knobnoster.—Brethren wishing to visit this country, will please take a note of this, and especially do we solicit our laboring brethren to be with us then. Brethren who can make it suit to comply with the above request, will inform the brethren previous to the time; all such information may be addressed to Joseph or Isaac Wampler, Knobnoster, Johnson Co. Mo., who will convey them to place of meeting.

By order of the Church.

A. HUTCHISON.

Centre View, Mo.

Brother Henry:—Please notify through the Companion that the brethren of Upper Conewago branch Adams Co. Pa., have set apart the 22nd and 23rd of May next, to celebrate the ordinances of the Lord's House, at Latimore meeting-house, near Deardorf's Mill.

Brethren coming by Railroad should be at Mechanicsburg on Friday 21st at midday, so we may have time to convey them to the place of meeting the same day, as the distance is 16 miles. Brethren wishing to be met at Mechanicsburg should inform me.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Jay Co. Ind., March 18th, SUSANNAH WITZEAL, aged about 92 years.

She was mother of brother Daniel Witzeal, whose father died in Augusta Co. Va., about 36 years ago. She was brought up in the German Reformed church, though had often said, "If I were not so old, I would be dipped too; but am too old now." O my dear young friends, take warning. Do not put off the heavenly calling. The Lord wants your young days and tender hearts.

JOHN G. NEHER.

In Poweshiek Co. Iowa, April 10th, ELIZABETH, daughter of friend Jacob and Christina ROWLAND, aged 4 months, and 23 days. Funeral services by the writer from Luke 18: 15—17.

J. S. SNYDER.

March 12th, in Shanksville, Berlin congregation, Somerset Co. Pa. sister ELIZABETH SPEICHER, consort of brother Solomon Speicher. Aged 70 years, 8 months, and 16 days. Funeral services by brethren G. Schrock and D. P. Walker, from Rev. 14: 13.

D. H. WALKER.

In the Lick Creek branch, Williams Co., Ohio, sister MARY DOHNER, aged 66 years and 8 days, leaving a husband and six children to mourn their loss. Funeral services rendered by brother George Stockman.—Text, Rev. 14: 12, 13.

JOHN BROWN.

At Manheim, Lancaster Co. Pa., January 23rd, sister MARY HOERNER, widow of brother Andrew Hoerner (deceased), aged 75 years, 3 months, and 7 days.

She had been an exemplary member in the church for a number of years. She bore her affliction and suffering with patience and resignation. Funeral services by Elder Daniel Fry, from Rev. 22: 14.

A. ROYER.

In Upper Conowago congregation, Adams Co. Pa., March 18th, at the residence of her son, brother JACOB WOLF, aged about 98 years, and 7 months. His was the part of a quiet, peaceable and inoffensive brother.—His posterity was large. his children being 7 living and 5 dead; grand-children, 65 living and 15 dead; great-grand-children, 165 living and 26 dead; great-great-grand-children, 3 living, making 240 living and 46 dead; in all, living and dead, 286. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of people. Occasion improved from Rev. 14: 12, 13, by the brethren.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Infidelity.

A LETTER TO A SKEPTIC.

An awful expression, indeed, on the infidel's doctrine, that its strenuous supporters have all mentally thrown off their sentiments in the moment of trial! or introduced their existence in more wretched hours! To see their is no trial. is awfully erroneous, which, my dear friend, you may clearly see from the following texts: "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse." Rom. 1:20.

My dear friend, creation is full of the wonders of God. If we view it in all of its parts, in leaf, in flower, in stalk or in creature and beauty. [illegible] the flowers [illegible] and in the [illegible] grass, [illegible] we read "our Father in heaven." [illegible] the [illegible] handiwork of God. [illegible] mandate, "Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters." [illegible] the sun, as it were, [illegible] the [illegible] twinkling in the heavens, as upon the waters, or the mellow light of the moon, [illegible] of beauties. The mighty ocean bears on its heaving bosom, a [illegible] roar of conviction; and, when its waters, [illegible] as a slumbering babe, sweeps silently yet majestically on, testimonial to the [illegible]. In the gliant sapling, nodding to the passing winds; or in the stalwart oak lifting its head to the deepest gales, is printed some of the most [illegible] of a wonder working God. All nature speaks to declare a [illegible] God. The [illegible] so to proclaim his never-ending greatness, proclaims invisible things. The [illegible] of stars, all [illegible] that their lamps were lit at the throne of Deity. The hoarse voice of the angry billows, [illegible] they give evidence to the same fact. God has often been expressed as a maker of [illegible] most of great value, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

For the Companion.

On Luke 4: 18.

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor: he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised."

When we examine the Old Testament Scripture, we find from sundry predictions by the holy prophets, that a King should arise to save the fallen race of Adam's family. "His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." Of the increase of his government there should be no end. "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren like unto me, him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass that every soul, which will not hear that Prophet shall be destroyed from among the people." From a further examination of the scripture, we find that this King was born of the Virgin Mary, seen by the wise men of the East, &c., And the Spirit of God rested upon him; he grew in grace, as well as in stature, and soon was found preaching to a dying race, working miracles and gaining the praise and honor of a great many around him. We also find him at an early age conversing with men of distinction and great wisdom, and thus creating great surprise at his wonderful doctrine. We find him in the synagogue at Nazareth; and they gave him a book of the prophet Isaiah, when he read the above quotation: after which he says, "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."—As much as to say, that he was the one whom Esaias the prophet had reference to. And certainly he was the one upon whom the Spirit of the Lord rested, and was commissioned to preach the gospel to the poor, broken-hearted, etc.

The first clause—"He hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor"—may in the first place be represented as being all of us. We are all poor; we inherited our poverty from our first parents. They, as we are all aware, were placed in a beautiful garden, eastward in Eden, and enjoyed the presence of their God and Creator. Then could there converse with God, and were as angels, so happy. But oh! the cunning deceitfulness of satan, who led them astray, till they could no more enjoy the presence of their Maker. So with us. The tempter has led us astray, far from the fold of God; we have wandered in forbidden paths, and can now but look back remorseful, no more in that pure angelic state of innocence. But now our great Minister, the Anointed, stands ready to receive us, if we are only willing to forsake our sins, and come to him: for he has said: "Whosoever cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." So we need not despair; for our sins can all be made white in the blood of the Lamb. In this we are all poor; all have need of a Savior.

2nd. It may be used in reference to the poor in spirit,—those feel themselves unworthy to approach a throne of grace,—those who feel themselves unworthy of the least notice of their Divine Master. Some probably are in unfavorable circumstances, reside distant from the house of God, cannot repair often to the house of worship, and are surrounded by enemies on every side; consequently do not feel strong, but weak and unworthy. They may have access to a throne of grace, only around the family altar. But, fellow-travellers, are you such? Oh, rejoice with me that such are the words of our Divine Master: "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Though your earthly enjoyments are not so pleasant as of others, yet look forward with an eye of faith to that period when you will be filled with the fullness of God, and enjoy his presence forever.

3rd. It may be used more particularly in reference to the sinner who is yet dwelling in darkness. Oh sinner, this great King was anointed to preach the gospel to you. He invites the rich and poor, the noble and ignoble; all have the same invitation to come and partake of the marriage-supper of the Lamb. We find among the children of men, in ancient as well as modern times, when a feast is to be made, that often times just the gentry or nobility are invited to the festal board; they seem very partial in their solicitation. When the Queen Esther made the banquet of wine, she invited only the King and Haman to partake of it; and how soon was Haman communicating it to his friends that the Queen did not permit any one else to come to the banquet. But Christ bids all to come to the feast. "Ho! every one that thirsteth, come and partake of the fountain of living waters." "Come for all things are now ready." Come while the fountain is flowing. If your soul thirsteth by the movements of the Spirit, oh bid it go to drink and return unto thee "a temple fit for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit." Do not quench the spirit, for the Lord has said: "my spirit shall not always strive with the heart of man." While you are awakened to a sense of your duty, oh come to this great physician, who can affect a cure without fail. Let not the multitude of your sins keep you back, nor the darkness of your crimes. "Though your sins be as red as crimson, they shall all be made white as snow." So you have no excuse, but have free access to a throne of grace. Do not delay, for great is the dangers of procrastination. You may soon fall, and if not prepared, your doom is sadly fixed forever. Are you weary and heavy-laden? "Come," says Jesus, "to me and I will give you rest,—my yoke is easy and my burden is light." "If the righteous are scarcely saved, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?" If the righteous are scarcely saved! Are you doubting whether you can enter into the fold of God? History informs us of a noted general, when about to ascend the towering cliffs before him, with his men, asked the engineer: "Is the route practicable?" The reply was, "it is barely possible." Then said the general, "let us push forward then," and the march commenced. Oh sinner, so it is with you. You think the gospel road to salvation barely possible ss, but push forward with the utmost zeal: knock at the door of mercy for Christ has said, he will open to you. Come partake of this healing balm, this ystal fountain, in which you can wash away all your ilty stains: "For the night cometh wherein no man n work." Yes, the night of death. Are you bro- n down under the load of sin, groping your way rough darkness? Come there is yet balm in Gilead r yet, your sins can all be blotted out, your troubled ind restored to peace, and join the ranks of King manuel

While we were yet in sin, we were led captive by e wily works of Satan, and our eyes were blind to e wonderful works of God. We could not see afar f, and were bruised under the very load of sin. But w Christ has offered to relieve us of all our burdens: receive us into his fold, where we can go in and out nd find pasture; where we can drink and never never rst. We can enjoy the company of his people here. nd entertain a lively hope of enjoying the company f our Savior beyond this vale of tears where there is o more sin, no more sorrow, no more sickness, no ore death. "To day, if ye hear his voice, harden not our hearts; but give the more earnest heed to the hings which you have heard, lest at any time you hould let them slip."

Humbleness of Mind.

This rare Christian ornamententitles its possessor to exalted estate. "Before honor is humility." The lest are called upon to wear it as a garment,—"Be othed with humility." And yet, this soft mantle, d delicate jewel, is unknown, and despised by the ultitude, and too often trampled under foot by the oud. "Not he that commendeth himself, is approved, t, whom the Lord commendeth." It is the most pre- us gem in the heavenly casket. So choice this gift rowing from above, that it is rarely formed on rthly soil.

[illegible]

Our Lord Jesus, bids us learn of Him, who was self the very embodiment of this grace,—"Learn e, for I am meek and lowly in heart." We are to [illegible] serve upon them to cheer and revive them, with smile and approval. It seems a hard thing to the d heart of man, to renounce himself, and to sing with the despised Tinct—"A poor sinner, I am—and just nothing at all." And yet this is true wisdom and blessedness. "Blessed are the poor in spirit for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." To be happy, we must be clothed with this garment: it is essential to our relig ious influence and usefulness. "God resists the proud:" and man also rejects, and dislikes an assuming and ar- rogant person. These vain and earthly distinctions are repudiated in our Lord's Kingdom. The Gospel Law is, to condescend to men of LOW ESTATE."

Have no respect to the proud: call no man master: prefer others to thyself, and take the lowest seat.

We feel at once, that these precepts are antagonistic to our earthly rules and to our usual behavior. No wonder we have so much contention, and trouble every- where, in the family, and in the Church. In the Bi- ble all our woes are traced to the deficiency of this grace. Pride makes wars, and sorrows, and rogues, and suicides

Men robed in purple and fine linen, scorn and neglect the poor and helpless. How self-inflated the proud Pharisee, contrasting himself with the poor pub- lican! yet the latter was comforted, while the former continued wretched, and miserable, and blind, and na- ked. We fear there is too much of this Laodicean glo- ry in our Christendom. Let us examine our condition, and let us present the "sacrifice of a broken and con- trite heart, with which God is well pleased."

Late at Meeting.

We commend to the consideration of those who are in the habit of getting to Meeting late the question which a little boy put to his mother. The incident is furnished by a correspondent of the Advance:

Many years ago a little son not four years old, one Sabbath morning, came very cautiously and quietly down the chamber stairs as though afraid of awaken- ing some one. Coming into my room and softly lay- ing his hand upon my shoulder, he whispered, "Mam- ma, is it wicked to get up so early Sunday morning as you do other mornings?" The little fellow knew that we had sometimes to stay at home because there was not time to get all the children ready. That was a les- son to me—a lesson which I have never forgotten.

So long as you see one star in the sky, the sun is not risen; so long as one leak admits the water the ship is not safe; so long as one sin reigns in a man's heart, and is practised in his life, Jesus is neither his Savior nor his King.—The Jews have no dealing with the Samaritans.

It is the proper office of faith to believe what can- not be seen, and the reward of faith to see what they have believed.

For the Companion.

To the Assistant Editor of the Companion.

To "live unto God" is to realize the Divine Presence, and feel the claim of his Sovereignty upon every faculty of our nature. As there is a self-consciousness in the life of sin, so there is in the life of holiness, although this latter is not sufficiently dominant to serve as a ground for the assurance of faith, as the other is for the assurance of condemnation. One sin is a sufficient fundamental cause of reprobation, but a life time of exemplary piety will not suffice for a ground of hope. There is nothing that is more tolerant than the life of Christ as it comes into our self-consciousness, & nothing more intolerant in relation to sin & error. The meat that is "offered in sacrifice unto idols" it would not eat, as such, to keep a world from ruin; & what is permissible it would not do "while the world standeth," if the indulgence might lead another to a fatal offence. To be scrupulous in regard to any thing that has been put to wicked use, where the thing used is not of itself sinful, is weakness of mind, but a truly Christian temper bears with it; but against the abuse of any thing good, or the allowance of evil under pretence of good, holiness hurls its anathemas with all the vigor of eternal rectitude. That so much upheaving and trouble has ever burdened the bosom of the Church, is owning to the fact that so large tracts of soul lie waste over which the Rightful Owner does not hold sway. Some are strong enough to eat all things, while another for very weakness eateth herbs, while one is pronounced addle-pated and the other licentious. The destruction of self, as a governing power, will enable the weak to thank God for the Samsons in Israel, and the strong that there are weak ones to take care of. We need lion-killers so as to retain practically the idea of strength and sweetness, and no less do we need babes to keep the breasts of Divine motherhood ever flowing. Children in the family, by their very helplessness, repay all the toil and care of nursing. When they dictate to their superiors, and grow fretful and restive they forget that they need the support of the strong more than the strong need the inspiration of their artless efforts in the direction of matured goodness. While we must ever have in the Church those that need milk and those that require strong meat, every true believer has in himself the babe that drinks and the man that eats. We never outgrow, or ought, our spiritual babyhood, as to character, however much it is necessary to add in breadth, and nerve, and vigor. Christ took all the past with Him in His personal history, as an ever-conscious element of His life, and it is in this fact that we find the ground of the hope presented in the Gospel in relation to childhood under the bad liabilities of hereditary sin. And Christ in us the hope of glory makes the ripest saintliness only a glorified childhood. To take the child up into the man, to have the purity and innocence of life's dawn throw its radiance and attractiveness over the character developed by fierce & persistent conflicts with a world lying in wickedness, is the grand consummation of the Spiritual energies as the Builder and Beautifier of God's broken shrine. To make this possible include the stupendous work of Christ, to make it actual requires the ever-present and ever-active agency of the Holy Spirit, and on our part calls for all the trust Godward, all the meekness manward and all the renunciation selfward, of which human nature is capable.

The face of every saint is toward Jesus, and reflects somewhat of the lineaments of the Author and Ideal of faith. The life of every newborn soul is a ray from the Sun of Righteousness and whatever its specific color may be, has the same elements and direction as all others. Whether the beams of the sun fall on ocean, mountain, fielder forest, silver lake, putrid morass emanate from one source, and consist of the same properties. The one God has revealed Himself in a multiplicity of forms in nature, all pointing in some particular, to the one Personal Revelation of Himself in matter for our redemption. But however many may be the ways and means he employs to make religion personal, when once Christ becomes to us what He became to the world in his human person, there is but one way. Divine providence employs means without number to effect the incarnation of himself with the individual through Christ, just as he revealed himself in manifold forms before Christ to foreshadow his advent and impress men's great want, but as soon as the headship of Christ is practically acknowledged, and his life becomes our inspiration and his word our directory, there is but one mode of expression for the Divine mind ding as a Body. God leads the Christian as his way by a varied discipline, as he leads the inner into the way by various methods, but the believer has only one way of developing his life and evincing his allegiance in accordance with the expressed will of heaven. Wherein God has revealed his Mind there is an adaptation to the race. What is for one is for all. Christ did not confine himself to one locality, nor did he deal with all alike, when on earth. He was born at Bethlehem, reared at Nazareth, lived at Capernaum, and died at Jerusalem. But both life and death were for all. The assumption that what comes to us in the form of instruction may be varied in the features, without which it would signify nothing, is entirely groundless.—Nay more. It limits God, his holy word, his boundless grace, although this sin is charged on those who insist on unity of faith and practice in all that God has made a matter of clear revelation. No one can enter heaven without holiness. No one can be holy without faith. No one can believe without obedience. And no one can obey who follows "cunningly-devised fables," and puts the "traditions of men" in place of "the commandments of God." What phenomenon if the creed of man-worshippers were in actual proclamation: "Be baptized every one of you," except such as prefer sprinkling or pouring. "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you," unless any among you feel so much "greater than the Lord," that they deem it non-essential.—This may sound vulgar to many, but it is only filling the ellipses which our would-be saints are causing in the Word which no one can remove or enlarge with impunity. All have sinned, and therefore all need to repent. All have had the possibility of perfect obedience to any law that faithfully represents the character of God, and therefore all must be saved by faith in him in whom this possibility inheres. And every external arrangement that refers to these internal conditions, is as universal as the nature to which such conditions are demanded. There is as little propriety in being sticklers for what is not revealed, as there is in being captious in regard to what is. But what emanates from the Church's life, to meet the exigencies of her history, has on it the stamp of sacredness, and may not be impugned unless something more in harmony with the life of Christ take its place. God has given us but one Savior, and but one way of salvation in him, and by this one method he is bound as well as we. Yet he has left a wide margin outside of express revelation, not for individual opinion of what is revealed, but for individual discipline. Although he announces in advance how he intends to prepare souls for his kingdom, or deal with them after they are in, all his measures accord with what is clearly unfolded. As the countless hues of flowers all get their shading in the one simple essence of light, so all that God respects in us as individuals, and which requires diversity of management, is in perfect harmony with "One Spirit, One Body, One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism." In the rigid unity of the Church, in which the same things are believed and done, and no variableness is allowable, there is sufficient border on which to carry on all needed operations of discipline and counsel, from the Annual Conference down to the family of two. And for an individual, or a clique, to interpose in such proceedings on the ground simply of precedent, introducing discord and confusion, shows neither wisdom nor humility. Jehovah cannot improve and is above the possibility of erring in his disciplinary measures in relation to the Church. But man, even in his sanctified state, is imperfect in character and knowledge, and must needs depend on his sanctified intellect for originating and applying advanced measures, as to himself, the family, and the Church. The intolerance that would lay its interdict on the advancement of the kingdom of Christ in the form of new measures in regard to exigencies for which no express direction is given, is sadly at variance with the Spirit of Christ. And to introduce new measures in the sense of vital disconnection with the life of Christ in the Church, is to oppose the interests of Christianity, and practically place the wisdom of Christ on a level with that of fallen, fallible man.

To the Young in Christ.

Dear Sisters and Brothers in the faith of Jesus: I as one of your young sisters, address you by this endearing appellation, trusting it may reach many of my dear young sisters and brothers in the cause of Christ, with whom I am not personally acquainted, but hope our spirits often unite around the throne of mercy, and in the love of our blessed Redeemer. In this we should be united forever. Though we are young, we have a great work to accomplish, if we prove faithful to the solemn vows we have made before God and man. What are we doing for the establishment of Christ's Church here on earth of which we profess to be members? we believe it to be the true Church; but are we faithful children of God? We stand as members of the Body of Christ, so we should be faithful in that we profess to be. Are we warning sinners to flee from the wrath to come? Do we set a holy example to our associates, showing them that religion is not a vain thing? And are we encouraging our elder brethren and sisters that are faithful laborers in the Vineyard of Christ, and, particularly, our ministering laborers, who have a great work resting upon them, if they are faithful to their calling? They should go through heat and cold to preach the gospel to the wandering sheep. They have many dangers to encounter, which we, as private members, have never known. And do we hold up their arms for them by our being faithful to the cause as we vowed before them when we entered the Church?

We should seriously ponder these questions and consider what each member has to fulfil for the building up of Zion. How many do we see going on in their sinful ways, not thinking of the life to come, who seldom think of their immortal souls, not concerned about the world to come after they have left this tabernacle of clay. They proudly lay up treasures in this world which is not our home, and will soon come to an end. This world's riches shall pass away. Where then shall the proud and trembling sinner appear? When the great King shall descend to Judge the world, then they will remember how they spurned the counsel of the Lord when salvation was within their reach. Oh dreadful day to the millions that shall sink into everlasting ruin! Painful thought to feel how little we are doing to call the lost back to the house of Israel. Oh dear brothers and sisters, are we drawing them by our influence? We have a great influence over the young: let us strive that it may be for their good instead of causing them to think there is no reality in the religion we profess to have. Oh let us think how much more good we can do for the salvation of souls. Though we are not preachers, we can do much for the Church: we should preach to the world by our holy walk and conversation. We can encourage our ministers in their labors: let us pray that they may understand God's word as he has laid it down and preach the pure gospel, teaching them to observe all the commandments, not only some of them and leave the rest undone, because the pride of our hearts, and lusts of the flesh, bid us do so. It is not from God that causes so many to believe that his commandments which seem so low are not essential to salvation, but the wicked spirit which is ruling the hearts of many, who believe this and that commandment is not a church ordinance, though they are plainly written down, and would be observed if they would control their evil hearts and become more humble and would believe God instead of men. God has plainly given them to us, but man has changed them. Oh let us pray for the Spirit of Christ; and that we may obey all things whatsoever he has commanded, is the prayer of your weak sister in the faith.

To Old Age.

You have now, perhaps, arrived at, or are past, your three score and ten. How necessary it is for you to examine yourself whether you be in the faith. The occupation of the world may have forbidden you many opportunities of communing with your own heart. Things of a more exalted and spiritual nature should secure your closest attention for the remainder of your days. But a short time is, to all appearance, left for you on the earth; but it is to be hoped, that you have laid up some treasure in heaven.

Worldly goods can avail you nothing in the world to come. Your death-bed must be an awful one, unless you are supported by your Father who is above. Have you let all those golden opportunities pass? Has Sabbath after Sabbath glided away unnoticed, or perhaps desecrated, by you? Have weeks, and months, and years, rolled by and brought you to the very verge of the grave, but unprepared to meet your God? O, old man, your case is lamentable, but let us trust that it is not too late to make your peace with heaven. The eleventh hour may have passed, the twelfth may be about to strike but yet there may be time. The thief upon the cross obtained forgiveness almost in death. He confessed the Lord Jesus Christ in his dying hour, and received the promise of being in Paradise with the Savior. Go now and do likewise; pray through the merits of Christ to be pardoned for all your past sins; pray for grace it is the gift of God, to enable you to lead the residue of your life in the fear and love of God that you may become his faithful servant, an receive at last that crown of glory that never fadeth, but is as eternal as the heavens.

The Words We Need.

"Add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity."—Peter, and apostle.

The above scripture is rich and strong. It is a cumulative statement and finds sublime climax. It is distinctly logical, each member of the statement being in kindred relation to the one preceding it, and all finding source and native affinity with the first. It is a test of christian character, which, if a man can stand, he is true, great and beautiful. It includes all the essential ideas of a full-orbed, rational manhood. It rules out of individual christian life, ignorance, atheism, drunkenness, licentiousness, chafing, hatred, injustice, and makes it strong, positive, self-sacrificing, pure, broad, tender, and binds up the whole under the sweet clasp of love. Such a life was Christ's and ours is to be hid with him in God. The man who can do this adding, has learned the secret. It is the vital arithmetic. The science of Faith is unfolded in this adding. If faith, as Peter here uses it, cannot find outlet in virtue and temperance and brotherly kindness and bloom out at last into the summer rose of Love, whose tint and fragrance are eternal joy to all pure souls, then did Paul say unwisely, "it is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Ah what sturdy men these apostles were! How their dialect rises above the theological chatter and denominational catch-words of the present time! Here is a creed that has marrow in it—is full of "spirit and life." It is one that a man can believe in and be the better for it. It is a creed that reaches into the brain not only, but roots downward into the heart and grows in between the "soul and spirit." It is not a speculation, nor abstract metaphysic nor a crystal ether. And yet it is fundamental and satisfies every final demand of manhood. It is the true begetting of the Holy Ghost in the soul; for the "fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."—Christian Radical.

Poetry as an Educator.

The men who know man best are the great poets. They are great poets through the warmth and breath and faithfulness of their sensibilities, their sympathetic consonance with the voices of the human heart, and, above all, through ceaseless desire for the better. To utter and embody conceptions springing out of such soil there needs a rich and flexible, a clean, refined diction. Thence poets are the regents of language. Great poems are the highest classics; that is, they are the best products of the first class of literary work. Thus, besides the the primary claim which good poetry has to be an educator, as tending through the truthfulness and purity of its thought and sentiment, to purge and elevate the sensibilities, it has a secondary claim, as furnishing the finest molds of speech—transparent, sparkling, deeply-freighted words in golden cadences. These their claims have always been academically acknowledged.

"WORDS—WORDS!"—Hamlet. Who shall speak slightingly of words, or deny their potency for good or evil? While it is true that "a word fittly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver," yet an unreasonable word, a careless, an irritating word, is a poisoned arrow, rankling in the bosom—and leaving perhaps a wound never to be healed this side the grave. How often has a harsh, perhaps unmeaning word, spoken by one, who would give worlds the next moment to recall it, poisoned all the pure springs of enjoyment, and overspread the happy, smiling face with instant gloom, causing the bitter burning tears to flow, and leaving a memory which may rankle at the heart forever. O, let us keep a strict guard over our lips! that the tongue, that "unruly member," may never inflict upon the sensitive heart of another some rankling wound which we can never heal.—Echo.

Every act of sin is more injurious to him who commits it, than it can possibly be to any other who suffers by it; it will return into the conscience, and perform a strange work there.

If God has prepared the kingdom for you, he will prepare you for the kingdom; and if you are under preparation, you are very anxious and concerned that God should carry on his work.

Selected by GEORGE MYERS.

The Diligent or Faithful Minister.

[We clip the following from a work in our possession, and add and take from it to suit our faith and practice. It has been encouraging to me and may be to many of our brethren, if you think it worthy a place in your columns.—C. M.]

The ministration of the gospel must ever be considered as a standing evidence of God's gracious designs to a guilty world. Had he no intention of pardoning sin, of rescuing miserable mortals from the deplorable state in which they are involved, we should never have been blessed with such an institution. We should never have heard of the joyful intelligence which this institution proclaims. This ministry is not committed to the highest order of creatures, but to men of like passions with ourselves; to men only is it given to participate in this honor; and that, not to men who never sinned, but to those who were by nature children of wrath; even as others, called by Divine grace, introduced into the way of the Lord, and filled with the most ardent concern for the welfare of immortal souls; they are intrusted with the sacred treasure to communicate to others. He who has raised them up has not left them without motive, without encouragement, nor without direction in the performance of so great and important a work.

First, a minister's business is to preach. It is not sufficient that he believes he has a clear perception of the beauty and harmony of Divine truth; that his judgment is well matured, or his memory well stored. Sweet indeed are the moments of retirement, profitable and delightful the hours spent in examining and investigating the truths of the Gospel; though the study of the Scriptures must not be our constant dwelling; we must go forth, we must preach, we must dispense to others the riches communicated to us. The Scripture no where encourages silent ministers; for thus saith the Lord: "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, who shall never hold their peace, day nor night." Isaiah 62: 6, 7. Ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence: cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice, like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins. He that hath my word let him speak my word faithfully. Now, if this be the case, how ought we to watch against everything that would operate as an impediment to this work! Suffer me to speak, my brother, and I will say, that you must not be deterred by any thing, except God himself should silence you by sickness or any extraordinary dispensation of his providence. You must not be impeded by any particular study. I would be sorry to say that a minister should not have any subject that is likely to be useful; but the minds of some, however, have been so absorbed that their hearts have been destitute of all spiritual feeling, and thus have philosophized away their congregations, and have been left to wonder that their wisdom has been so little regarded. But if you have a favorite, be careful that it is in accordance with your calling, and feed the people with the pure word of God.

Again, you must not be silent because you can easily get others to preach for you. Some scarcely ever preach, but through the mouths of others; they are always glad when they can get others to do their work, but what should we think of that servant who had promised faithfully to perform his duty, who should be always finding substitutes in order that he may be idle; this would be an intolerable evil to the world.—What, then, must it be in the church? And what a poor character is it to give of a minister to say of him, he does not like preaching; that he would rather get any one to officiate for him than preach himself; of this, however, I do not, I cannot, suspect you. There is one caution, however, permit me to suggest. There are many who call themselves preachers, who are of very indifferent abilities; who are always looking out for an opportunity to deliver or make a display of their talents; and there are others who may be good men, but are so fond of setting themselves up, that they would sooner reward you to let them preach, than you them, for their services. These, in my judgment, we had better avoid. The minister should not be hindered with much business of any secular kind. A minister's house, indeed, must not be like a desert, where no one is ever seen; but then it must not resemble the cold ways of concourse, where it is difficult to move. Let your acquaintance consist of those who can help rather than hinder you in your great work. It is better to have a small number of spiritual, zealous associates, than to be engaged every day from one end of town to the other, or from one neighbor to the other in useless visits, and endeavoring to form a large, and what some might call, a respectable connection.

Again, you must not be silent because you feel a sense of your own unworthiness, or meet with but little success at first. Many of God's ministers are greatly distressed on this point. How many have turned aside, wept, and said: "Alas! how can I preach to others, when I know and feel so little myself. What unbelief, what struggling corruptions, what little sense of the importance of the great work in which I am employed! Should I not be all life, all activity, all concern for the glory of God? These have been the sad reflections of many, and even those who have been faithful too. How many also have almost been induced to be silent from a consideration of their little success, and like Jeremiah, have resolved to speak no more in his name! These reflections and imperfections are sufficient to us in being silent. What minister is so fit to ascend the pulpit as he who has a deep conviction of his imperfections?

Remember, it was the upright Job that said: "Behold I am vile." Job 40: 4. The great Isaiah that exclaimed, "Wo is me, for I am undone." Isaiah 6: 5. And the holy, useful Paul said: "O wretched man that I am." Rom. 7: 24. Your heart, then, instead of causing you to be silent, will often furnish you with a subject on which you may preach with considerable feeling. As to usefulness this must be left with God, who can tell what the net contains while it is in the sea. It should be an encouragement for us to preach often, as no one can calculate the effects of one single sermon. Some conviction may be wrought, some impression made, some conscience roused, some truth left in the mind of those whom we may never see again, nor hear of until the judgment day; but who may then come forward and bless God for the very sermon which we thought never did any good.

But I should be very sorry if, from what I have written, any one should imagine that we are to preach without study or knowledge. I should tremble to make such an assertion. Sanctified knowledge is a great blessing; but as for sanctified ignorance, I know of no such thing. Superstition, bigotry, persecution, and a number of evils spring from an uncultivated mind.—Labor to gain information, especially of the sacred Scriptures. What are we to preach? Not our own fancies or sentiments, or curious plans; but let us remember that it is a most awful and dangerous thing to aggrandize self at the expense of truth. We may stand long enough telling the people what they ought to be, but it will all be to no purpose, except the vital principle from above be given, the nature changed and the soul brought to possess that grace of faith which worketh by love.

Secret Prayer.

Our Savior, in language the most emphatic, has enjoined upon us this duty: "Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father who is in secret, and thy Father who seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." How distinct is this command! And yet it is to be feared that by many professed Christians it is more neglected than almost any other.

1. Let us contemplate ITS IMPORTANCE. When midnight spread its gloom over Judah, why was our Savior found a lonely wanderer in its most unfrequented wilds? Luke tells us it was his custom to retire to those solitudes for private, secret devotion. We have many instances given in which he united with his disciples in social prayer; but every day he left the crowds with which he was surrounded, and went alone to hold communion with God. Christian! is it not important that a duty should be fulfilled which is enjoined by the Savior's lips, and enforced by a Savior's example.—And remember that this is secret prayer; the prayer of retirement: the communion of the soul with God, when that soul is withdrawn as far as possible from every external influence.

The example of pious men in all ages of the world, shows the importance of secret prayer. Witness Daniel, three times a day retiring to his chamber for prayer. Read the biography of any eminent christian, and you will find that it is in secret prayer that his strength has been obtained. O, there is a host of worthies who rise at once in attestation of its infinite importance. And another host may be seen of languid, spiritless, desponding professors, whose lives are passing unprofitably and wretchedly away because they do not strengthen their faith and animate their zeal by the devotions of the closet. Here lies the cause of so many doubts and fears of the christian; of that paralysis of christian feeling which makes so many professors an incumbrance and a burden to the church.

There are peculiar sins to be confessed, which it is not proper to confess in public or in social prayer.—The christian needs to go to God in all the confidence of a private interview, and there to unfold the inmost secrets of his heart. He has peculiar temptations from which he needs to be guarded; peculiar trials under which he needs support; and he must in private go to God, that he may seek relief for these private wants.

Secret prayer affords the most direct intercourse the soul can have with God. In the hour of retirement and solitude the soul is most perfectly cut off from all external influences. It can then be more easily ushered into the immediate presence of its Maker. These are the occasions in which the soul breaks from the trammels of earth, and soars, as it were, on angel's pinions, to the bosom of its God. And it is from such visits as these that the soul returns to earth, refreshed with draughts from the fountain of life, warmed by the joys it has felt, and showing to the world around, by the glow of its feelings, that it has, like Moses, seen God in the Mount.

2. The MANNER in which this duty should be performed. When our Savior says, "enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father," he does most undeniably mean that we should go to some place alone, where we may pray to our Father in secret. It does not do to say that we can pray any where; that we can, in the bustle of business, withdraw our minds and have sufficient communion with God. The Savior's command is positive, that we must seek retirement and there in secret make known our requests to God. Surely, if Christ found it necessary to withdraw from the crowd, and even from every friend, that his devotions might not be disturbed by passing scenes, it is the most egregious folly for the frail disciple of Jesus to pretend that secrecy and retirement are not essential in his own acts of devotion. Yes, follower of Jesus! you must actually go to the place of retirement. It may be to the chamber; it may be to the grove; but it must be to some place where, alone and uninterrupted, you may commune with God.

There should be stated times for secret prayer. As far as possible, the habit should be formed of going at particular hours of the day into the presence of God. Unless the Christian has resolution to form a plan, and to abide by that plan, he cannot make advances in the Christian life; he cannot enjoy religion. If you say, "I will daily enjoy the privilege of secret prayer," and yet do not set apart some particular portion of the day, which you will appropriate to this duty, you will find that your resolutions are made but to be broken. The evening twilight appears to have been the favorite hour with our Savior for this purpose. Daniel selected the morning, the noon, and the evening, as his seasons of private devotion.

The very design of secret prayer is to enable the christian to approach God with the least possible restraint. We should at such times, with great particularity, acknowledge sin. Has any temptation excited irritated feeling? In your closet confess that individual sin to God. Have you neglected duty? In penitential prayer allude to the time and to the circumstances, that your heart may not be sheltered by the vagueness of mere general confession. In your closet review your actions, and speak to your Maker distinctly what you mean, when you are a sinner. In the solitude and the silence of the soul's retirement with God we may become acquainted with ourselves. This is the way to make confession of sin which is acceptable to God.

We should also in secret prayer pray for particular blessings. You are a parent. Your son is at a distant school, surrounded by new and trying temptations. In retirement plead for him by name. State distinctly the temptations to which he is exposed. Thus may you pray with a degree of fervor and distinctness which would be impossible and improper even in the more public circles of social prayer. When our Savior united with his disciples in prayer, his petitions were general: "Thy kingdom come," "give us day by day our daily bread," "forgive us our debts," "lead us not into temptation." But when he retired to the garden, in solitude, his prayer was, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me." Here he unveiled all his secret sorrows to a Father's view. Imitate your Savior, and daily in secret prayer, remember your friends, calling them by name.—Remember your own particular temptations, and your own particular sins, and thus will your Father, who heareth in secret, himself reward you openly.

3. Consider the ADVANTAGES of secret prayer.—There is no exercise of the christian which has so powerful an influence in promoting spirituality of mind.—The secret communion with God seems to introduce us into his immediate presence. If we go to the closet with the distinct confession of sin, and asking particular blessings, we can hardly fail of receiving an influence into our own hearts which will be abiding.—There never can have been a case of one who perservingly frequented his closet, and there found rest to his soul, who was not a spiritual man and a growing christian. And the christian who does not pray in secret must be a languid and a heartless disciple.

There is no preservative from sin so potent as this. An hour of temptation may overcome the christian.—He may be left to the commission of sins, the thought of which now makes him shudder. Temptations may be thrown in your way, and you have no safety—you have no protection but in prayer. He who comes from the audience chamber of God, from intimate communion with his Maker, has faith so bright and strong that temptation will in vain assail him. Standing on the very verge of heaven, breathing the very atmosphere of that pure world, he will be enabled to say, "Get thee behind me, Satan." The path to the commission of sin lies invariably through the neglect of secret prayer.

There is no exercise which can so purify and tranquilize the mind. It is this which gives that "closer walk with God," which ensures "a calm and heavenly frame." This is the mount upon which the christian may stand above earth's vapors and smile at earth's storms. When Jesus went to the garden as the hour of death approached, he was in an agony. But he came from that garden calm and composed. Thus, christian, may you obtain a composure of mind, and a calm, steady enjoyment, which no opposition or trials can ruffle. And how happy is the heart, thus fixed on God; thus steadfast in a joyful serenity which nothing can disturb. Neglecting this duty, how full does the heart become of worldly cares! How often depressed with anxiety! How will trifling obstacles disturb and irritate! The remedy for all this is secret prayer. Then is the spirit alike independent of great calamities and of petty vexations.—American Tract Society.

Afterwards—to Glory.

With what blessed counsels doth our Heavenly Father guide us. He guides over mountain-tracks and through valleys of lowliness; guides where our own foresight is at fault and our wisdom is but folly. He guides us in safety to the last, and then—what then? "Afterwards He receiveth us to glory." Not yet. Afterwards. The guidance must be ended before the glory begins. After our tears and fears and sorrows—and after the fulfilment of the sacred mission the Master gave us—then cometh the glory. This is a rainbow-word composed of seven distinct hues all beautifully blended. A light that floweth out from the eternal Godhead; a knowledge which reveals all hidden mysteries taught us by Jehovah himself; a purity which walks in white among the seraphim; a peace that passeth all understanding; a love born of the Redeemer's wounds on Calvary; a joy forever unsullied by a single tear; a holiness as lustrous as that worn by the Bride of the Lamb. These are seven colors that blend into the one dazzling and insupportable brightness. No earthly eye hath seen it. No earthly ear hath heard its unending swell of harmonies. No human heart hath conceived it. The glory of God doth lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. Remember, O child of sorrow, that the blissful "Afterwards" will come—afterwards to glory.—Voice of Truth.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Go To Work.

Nothing is more salutary to the human soul than the direct work of saving men. There is a basis of fact. There is the next ground for action. There is man dying in his need, and there is a power which you may apply for his transformation. Therefore go to work upon men and with men. And let me tell you, there is nothing that you could do that would be more salutary to your own soul. I speak what I do know when I say that there is nothing which brings men back from the desert of sandy and arid speculation: nothing which brings a man in again to the shore from the cheerless ocean of doubt; nothing which gives us such faith and certainty as laying aside all reasoning, and engaging in the practical work of the Gospel. I know that there is a restorative influence in that work. I know that, whatever doubts I may have, once let my heart and hand join together in working with men for their elevation, and spirituality and salvation, and my doubts disappear; I know in whom I believe: I know the work to which I am appointed. And the sweetest thoughts that I ever had of God came to me in the act of laboring for my fellowmen. The most glorious views that I ever had of man's interior life, and of essential divine truths, were ministered to me when I was working for the salvation of others.

A True Marriage.

I believe there are few thoughtful men who have not come to regard as one of the least explicable among the great riddles of the earthly economy the rarity of well-assorted marriages. It might be so different, one cannot help thinking. The adaptations for harmony so wonderful! the elements of happiness so manifold and so rich! yet how often —how miserably sometimes—it all miscarries! the waters of paradise turned to fountains of bitterness, the gifts of heaven perverted to curses upon earth.

I do not mean that there are few unions yielding reasonable comfort, friendly relations, a life free from open quarrel or secret heart-burning: but I speak of the marriage without flaw or jar—a matting alike of the material, with its intangible affinities and its wondrous magnetisms, and of the immaterial principle within that survives the death-change. I speak of a heart-home pervaded by harmony not only unbroken, immutable as that of the spheres; felt to be so by those whom it blesses, calms, satisfies; a social state to which when man and woman attain, there remains nothing in the way of earthly need or acquisition, save daily bread, to be coveted or prayed for.

Some think that in this trial-phase of our existence, no such state of harmony and happiness is to be found. Among few that do find it none of these skeptics will have place. No entrance into that temple except for those who believe!—Without faith in the good and the beautiful—the good that is felt, not seen—the beautiful that must be conceived before it is realized—a man is shut out from the highest enjoyment. And such a man can do little to meliorate the world or elevate his race.—Lippincott.

Soul's Rest.

The needle's point in the seaman's compass never stands still, but quivers and shakes till it comes right against the north pole. The wise men of the East never stood still, till they were right against the star which appeared to them; and the star itself never stood still, till it came right against that other star, which shone more brightly in the manger than the sun did in the firmament. And Noah's dove could find no rest for the sole of her foot all the while she was fluttering over the flood, till she returned to the ark with an olive branch in her mouth. So the heart of every true Christian, which is the turtle dove of Jesus Christ can find no rest all the while she is hovering over the waters of this world, till it have the silver wings of a dove, and, with the olive branch of faith, fly to the true Noah, which signifieth "Rest," till Christ put forth his hand out of the ark, and taking it in, receive it to himself.

A Woman's Influence.

A Christian woman gave her hand to the man on whom she had already placed her tenderest affection. He possessed almost every grace, but was destitute of the grace of God. By spending the early part of his life in a foreign land, and associating with those who had the reputation of gentleman, he had imbibed the fashionable habit in that place of using God's name in vain in common conversation. His new and much-loved wife sought to reclaim him. She knew the only way to his heart. She took advantage of his love for her to win him to Christ, and she effectually succeeded.

One day, as she was standing before him, in company with a few friends who were listening to his conversation, in order to give additional interest, as he supposed, to what he was relating, he added the name of Christ. He looked at his wife, and saw her in tears. He was confused. She raised her hand and gently pressed his chin. "O!" said she, "if you knew how much I love that dear name, you would never again pain my heart by trifling with it."

His heart was touched. He was unable to proceed. He asked her forgiveness, and soon left the room. In this way he was saved from ruin and is now an eminent example of piety.

GOOD MANNERS are the blossoms of good sense, and it may be added of good feeling too; for if the law of kindness be written in the heart it will lead to that disinterestedness in little as well as in great things—that desire to oblige, and attention to the gratification of others, which is the foundation of good manners. The happiness of our life is made up of little courtesies; little kindnesses, pleasant words; genial smiles; friendly letter, and good deeds.

Build not thy nest on any tree on earth, seeing that God hath sold the forest to death.

Jerusalem and the Sacred Mountains.

Of the ancient Jerusalem nothing remains except the natural features, which still retain an interest from the historical associations attached to them. The modern city, El Kods, by the Aradin's term signifying The Holy, is revered and visited by Jews, Christian and Mohammedan pilgrims. Its walls enclose a circuit of about three miles, a somewhat greater extent than the Jewish capital, as mount Calvary is comprised within them, and contains about 30,000 souls.

The oldest city was destroyed by the Babylonians; that which was trodden by the Divine footsteps was demolished by Titus, A. D., 70.

Mount Moriah, on which stood the magnificent temple of Solomon, and Mount Zion are in the south part of the city; at their foot is the memorable pool of Siloam. On the south of the city is the Aceldama and Hinnom, or Gehenna, and on the east the valley of Jehosaphat.

The mosque of Omar, called El Iarem, the Holy, is a vast pile of buildings, composed of a cluster of mosques and moguls, revered by Moslems as the second great sanctuary of Mohammedism. It is said to be built over David's tomb, and to contain the sacred stone that formed Jacob's pillow.

Among the numerous Christian churches and convents, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, built near the tomb of the Savior, is the most interesting.

Lebanon is not an isolated peak, but a chain of mountains running through the south of Syria. The wood for King Solomon's Temple was cut from its slopes, and many of the sacred utensils were made from its fragrant cedars. Jerusalem was sometimes called Lebanon, because the temples and houses were built almost entirely of the cedars.

As Moses wandering one morning among the slopes of Horeb, saw before him a solitary bush blazing from top to bottom, but still unconsumed. Every branch was a fiery branch, and every leaf a leaf that glowed unwasted in the still flame. As he stood amazed and awe struck at the sight, a voice exclaimed; "Take thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place on which thou standest is holy ground."

Mount Moriah stands just without Jerusalem, where the rude altar of Abraham rose nearly four thousand years ago. The proud city has risen and fallen beside it, the generations of men come and gone, and wholedynasties of kings disappeared one after another; yet there it stands as it stood in the wilderness when it was trodden only by the wild beasts of the forest. Years after the temple of King Solomon threw the sunbeams upon it, and the children of Israel paid vows there.

The Flowers of Palestine.

"The hills in the region of Mount Tabor," says Dr. Bellows, "offer better pasturage than any we have met in the Holy Land, and yet there seem fewer flocks upon them. But its flowers have taken advantage of this absence of cattle and people, to spring up in a variety and beauty I have never seen equalled. We gather bouquets in a few moments by the path, which I defy any London or New York conservatory to equal in beauty, and freshness, and variety, or in rarity. Such feathery things, such fairy shapes, such delicate colors, such exquisite contrasts, were never, it seems to me, combined in any nosegay, and I felt then, as I do now, ashamed that my feeble botany could not name and place them. I made their beauty the amende of a most honorable mention. Could I have sent one of these Syrian bouquets to each of my beloved friends at home, I would gladly have paid the New York price for a hundred, and a hundred might have been plucked from a rod of ground. But their frailty was equal to their freshness and delicacy. There is a solemnity in the houseless, treeless, unpeopled state of this fine country, which is an affecting preparation for the approach to the great centre of Jesus' ministry, the Sea of Galilee. Nature seems to say there is no room in this sacred regionbut the memory of him whose glory fills the earth. The hills are green, and flowery, and fragrant, but they refuse any meaner service than that of acting as the witnesses of Him who once, putting their lilies above Solomon in all his glory, used them as His altar and His pulpit.

God Sees us.

One day the Astronomer Mitchell was engaged in making some observations on the sun, and as it descended towards the horizon, just as it was setting, there came into the rays of the great telescope the top of a hill about seven miles away. On the top of that hill was a large number of apple trees, and in one of them were two boys stealing apples. One was getting the apples, and the other was watching to make certain that nobody saw them, feeling certain that they were undiscovered. But there sat Professor Mitchell, seven miles away, with the great eye of his telescope directed fully upon them, seeing every movement they made as plainly as if he had been under the tree with them.

So is it often with men. Because they do not see the eye which watches with a sleepless vigilance, they think they are not seen. But the great open eye of God is upon them, and not an action can be concealed. There is not a deed, there is not a word, there is not a thought, which is not known to God. If man can penetrate with the searching eye which science has constituted for his use, the wide realmof the material heavens; shall not He who sitteth upon their circuit be able to know all that transpires upon the earth, which he has made the resting place of his feet? Let the three little words at the head of this article not be forgotten, but let young and old remember the great truth which they contain. Thou God seest me.—Christian Era.

Lessons for the Young.—No. 2.

OBEDIENCE TO PARENTS.

My Dear Young Readers: After some delay, I present you with a second lesson. But I trust you have not forgotten the former lesson: for in it was contained a certain thought which it is my purpose in the present lesson to examine and explain more fully. The thought alluded to occured in connection with the inquiry whether it would be due respect to parents, if children take their own time to do an errand which the parents intended should be attended to immediately. Respect to parents is a duty, but it is only a part of a greater and more comprehensive duty—obedience to parents.

In order to know how much is required of you to obey your parents, you have only to consider the meaning of the word obedience, which is "compliance with a command." To comply with a command, is, to yield to what it requires. To be obedient, then, to your parents, is, to be obedient to them in all needful, rightful and reasonable demands. If your parents are Christians, they ought not make demands at such a time and in such a manner, as would tend to provoke or make you feel ashamed; neither should they require impossibilities. It is often true, too, that children provoke their parents by disobedience, and thus parents will sometimes do or say what they would not at other times for all the world. Guard, then, dear children, against the sin of provoking your parents, and the great sin of grieving a Christian parent.

Do you remember the name of the wisest man? If not, read the book of Proverbs in the Bible.—He was a great and good man; and I have no doubt of his once being a good youth, who loved, respected, and obeyed his parents. His father's name was David, the Psalmist. His mother's name was Bath-sheba. The Lord named him SOLOMON,—this name signifies peaceable. When David was king of Israel, he determined to build a great house of worship; and he said: "Solomon, my son, is young and tender, and the house that is to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries: I will, therefore, now make preparation for it." And he did before his death. He gave Solomon a charge, or command, "to build an house for the Lord of Israel." David would have built the house in his own time, if the Lord had not said to him: "Thou hast shed blood abundantly and hast made great wars: thou shalt not build an house unto my name, because thou hast shed much blood upon the earth in my sight." 1 Chron. 22: 8. Solomon obeyed the command of his father, and became a wise and useful man.—His writings, which you find in the Bible, are full of advice and instruction for every one that seeks and loves to be advised and instructed; but he says, "fools despise wisdom and instruction." Prov. 1: 7.

If you will read the history of the youthful days of the men I have named you will find that they were dutiful and obedient to their parents, or guardians. "Noah was a just man, and perfect in his generations;" and his children must have obeyed him, or they would have been destroyed even as those who refused Noah's teaching and were drowned in the flood. Think also of Abram, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Samuel, David; and, in the New Testament, of John, the Baptist, and others among whom was Timothy, who, in his youth, had received much instruction in the Holy Scriptures. You, too, my young friends, can become good and honorable. If your parents give you advice, do not turn from it. If they remind you of your faults, do not permit yourselves to become offended, but rather thank them for the interest which they show in your welfare, and at once strive to become what the children of good, Christian parents should be. Do not hesitate to come when they call; nor to go when they send you; nor to refrain from what they forbid. And let me assure you, that if your youthful life is moulded by cheerful and respectful obedience to your kind parents, you will not depart from the way of moral Right, and the Law of God, when you leave the parental roof. Read Prov. 22: 6.

Men Without Hearts.

We sometimes meet with men who seem to think that any indulgence in an affectionate feeling is weakness. They will return from a journey, and greet their families with a distant dignity, and move among their children with the cold and lofty splendor of an iceberg surrounded by its broken fragments. There is hardly a more unnatural sight on earth than one of these families without a heart. A father had better extinguish a boy's eyes than take away his heart. Who that has experienced the joys of friendship, and values sympathy and affection, would not rather lose all that is beautiful in nature's scenery than to be robbed of the hidden treasures of his heart? Cherish then, your heart's best affections. Indulge in the warm and gushing emotions of filial, and fraternal love.

Middle Penna. District Meeting.

The meeting convened in the James Creek congregation, Hunting-Co., on Monday morning, April 26th. The brethren had made arrangements by which the cars stopped within a furlong of the meeting house during the meeting. There were meetings of public worship on Saturday evening, Sunday and Sunday evening, at the meeting house, and on Monday evening at several other places, all of which were well attended.

The following are the branches of the Church, with their representatives:

NAMES OF DELEGATES.

Antietam,	Jacob Price, D. F. Good.
Aughwick,	John Spanogle, James R. Lane.
Back Creek,	John Shank, Geo. Mourer.
Buffalo,	Isaac Myers, Samuel Longanecker.
Clover Creek, 1 query	J. W. Brumbaugh, G. W. Brumbaugh.
Codoras,	Jacob Shamberger, Christian Ness.
Duncansville,	D. M. Holsinger.
Falling Spring,	—not represented.
James Creek,	Isaac Brumbaugh, Geo. Brumbaugh.
Lewistown,	John Price, Archy Vandike.
Lost Creek,	Michael Bashore, Solomon Seiber.
L. Conawago, 2 queries.	J. Raffensberger, Joseph Myers.
L. Cumberland 3 queries,	David Nisley, Moses Miller.
Marsh Creek,	By letter.
Perry,	Isaac Ebey, Wm. Pandabaker.
Ridge,	J. R. Fogleswanger, Daniel Eckerman.
S. S. Valley, 1 query	Jacob Steel, Andrew Snowberger.
Spring Run,	P. S. Myers, A. Myers.
Stone Valley,	James A. Sell.
U. Conawaga, 1 query.	D. Longanecker, Adam Brown.
Upper Codoras,	A. Miller, H. Hoff.
U. Cumberland, 1 query.	Daniel Keller, Daniel Hollinger.
Warriors Mark, 2 queries.	Graybill Myers, H. R. Holsinger.
Yellow Creek, 1 query.	Jacob Miller, Daniel Snowberger.

Last year's officers were re-elected.

The Minutes of last year's meeting were read and approved.

Eleven queries were submitted to the council, which were answered as seemed just.

An application was received from the Upper Canawaga branch, Adams Co., for next meeting, which was granted.

Elders Graybill Myers and Moses Miller were elected delegates to Annual Meeting, the former to represent the district on the Standing Committee.

Some important business was submitted to the council, and some questions were warmly discussed, although a general good feeling was preserved throughout the deliberations.

As will be seen above there was a good representation, only two branches that had no delegates. The majority of the congregations had two representatives.

The brethren at James Creek were well prepared to entertain the meeting. They have one of the best and most convenient meeting-houses in the District. Another advantage is that there are a great number of members residing in the immediate vicinity, and they all seem to be alive.

The Minutes of the meeting may be had by members residing in the District, at 7 cents, or 60 cents a dozen.

The Companion from the Annual Meeting to end of volume Five.

The Companion from the Annual Meeting, including the first number issued after the meeting, and the minutes as soon as published, together with our report of the proceedings of the council, to the end of this year, will be furnished at 90 cents. We should be highly pleased to add several hundred new names to our list. Will our friends make another effort for us. The locality of the meeting will be a new one for the Companion and we hope to make many new friends.—Please make the announcement that the balance of the volume from the Annual Meeting, with the Minutes will cost only ninety cents.

We expect to go to the meeting prepared to settle all accounts, and hope all our agents who will attend, and are in arrears, will meet us prepared to square up. We need all that is due us, and are obliged to pay Bank Interest for the full amount of all that is due us.—Our income for the present year will be proportionally smaller than the preceding three years, on account of the enlarged paper and other improvements, and it is therefore quite necessary that we shall use strict economy. Every dollar of interest that we pay must be deducted from our living. Hope we shall be enabled to make credits to the amount of several hundred dollars by June first. Those who have not yet paid to the agents will please take this notice as invitation to do so at their earliest convenience.

Love Feasts.

The time for a number of Love feasts was finally agreed upon at the District Meeting, and hence the large addition to our list. It was thought to give sufficient notice in this way, as congregations who have their meetings inserted mean to extend an invitation, and it will be so understood.

Earth Cures.

Experiments have lately been made at the Pennsylvania Hospital, at Philadelphia, with the Earth cure. Dry sifted earth is applied to the wounds and sores. It has been used in a number of bad cases in the Hospital with magical effect. Its tendency is to absorb the excrement and thus mitigate the offensive odor; relieve pain and assist nature in the healing. It is hoped that mother earth may be found to be a useful balm in restoring man from the many ills to which he is subjected.

Our Contemplated Journey to the South.

We now expect to start upon our journey to Va., on Monday night next, 10th inst. We go via. Harrisburg, Baltimore, and Washington, and expect to be accompanied by brethren J. W. and G. W. Brumbaugh and perhaps others, and expect to arrive at Bonsacks at 8 o'clock P. M. of the 13th.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

March 17th, in the Waterloo, Iowa, congregation, MAGGY CATHARINE, infant daughter of brother Jonas A. and sister Carolina FLICKINGER, aged 1 year, 11 and 7 days. Occasion improved by the Brethren by reading and speaking from 1 Peter 1 : 24. May the Lord comfort and bless the sorrowing parents.

Also, in same congregation, March 20th in the City of Waterloo, Sister POLLY CROSS, consort of John Cross, aged 58 years, 4 months and 18 days, leaving 10 children to mourn their loss, eight of whom are members in the church.

Also in same congregation, same day, sister BARBARA SHAFER; aged 84 years 9 months and 24 days. She died suddenly; leaving six living children, besides a great many grand, and great grand children to mourn their loss. On Sunday the 21st inst. the remains of these worthy sisters, and mothers in Israel, were conveyed to the Brethren's Cemetery, near their meeting-house 4 miles south of the city, followed by a very long concourse of relatives, friends, and neighbors, paying the last tribute of respect to those whom they loved. Occasion improved by the Brethren by reading and speaking, from 2nd Timothy 4 : 7, 8. Text with the wise man, "Then shall the dust return to the Earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."

ELIAS K. BRECKLY.

In the Berlin branch, Somerset Co. Pa.' March 27th, ANN ELIZABETH, daughter of friend Michael and Lydia LONGSDORF, aged 15 years, 5 months, and 24 days. She was buried on the 28th at 3 o'clock, in the German Reformed burying-ground, followed by a very large concourse of people. Funeral preached in the German Reformed meeting-house, by the writer, from Heb. 9: 27, 28.

In the Elklick branch, Somerset Co Pa., March 29th, EVE, consort of friend Emanuel KLINGAMAN, aged 63 years 9 months and 8 days. She was in a suffering condition some 20 years. Occasion improved by brother C. Berkley and the writer.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Happiness.

When are we happiest? When the light of morn
Wakes the young roses from their crimson rest?
When cheerful sounds upon the fresh wind borne,
Tell man resumes his work with better zest,
While the bright waters leap from rock to glen —Are we the happiest then?

When are we happiest? In the crowded hall,
When fortune smiles, and flatterers bend the knee?
How soon—how very soon—such pleasures fall!
How fast must falsehood's rainbow-coloring flee:
Its poison flowrets leave the sting of care:
We are not happy there!

Are we the happiest when the evening hearth
Is circled with its crown of living flowers?
When goeth round the smile of harmless mirth,
And when affection from her bright urn showers
Her richest balm on the dilating heart?
Bliss! is it there thou art?

Oh, no! not there! it would be happiness
Almost like heaven's, if it might always be,
Those brows without one shading of distress,
And wanting nothing but eternity:
But they are things of earth, and pass away—
They must, they must decay!

When are we happiest, then? Oh! when resigned
To whatsoe'er our cup of life may bring;
When we can know ourselves but weak and blind
Creatures of earth! and trust alone in him
[illegible]
Oh! we are happiest then!

Fragment of a Letter to an Alien.

You say you attended the Young Men's Christian Association in Chicago, and listened to a lecture on the relative importance of body and soul. The speaker's sentiments you regarded as hostile to the Bible, and a barrier to the promotion of virtue, and felt constrained to rebut them, which brought upon you a sweeping storm of criticism. The question is a strange one—whether the soul or the body is the man? Why did you not tell me what view of the subject you maintained, and the principle arguments by which you fortified your position? I take it for granted that you sided with the truth, and this is, if man must be dissected, and his personality placed in his material or immaterial constitution, the latter has the best claim to such honor.

Much can be advanced in favor of the opposite view, sufficiently plausible to wear the guise of truth, but thoroughly analyzed, it is infidel ground. It requires body and soul to constitute humanity, but if the latter retains its consciousness in the separate state, which the scriptures emphatically affirm, it has in it the elements of the true man. The image of God enstamped on man was character, but along with it went a basis which made such a character possible, namely immortality. The character may be lost, as that was connected with his power of choice, but not the rationality which was its condition, as this is wholly above the control of created intelligence. The mould into which God placed the immortal essence, can certainly not claim superiority over the essence itself, on which he impressed his own lineaments. If the body distinctively constitutes the man, we are justified in giving it more attention than the soul. That the soul is at all points worldward dependent on the body, helps not the materialistic theory. Nor yet the fact that Christ required a body to make atonement for ble; and had it not been essentially immortal, atonement had not been necessary. If the soul would walk, or speak, or handle, it must have hands and feet, lips and tongue. If these members are amputated, is there so much of the man gone in the higher and proper sense?—When the bodies of Saul and Jonathan were reduced to ashes, were not these individuals, in all the completeness of their proper selves, somewheres, in the consciousness of their identity? As man is here constituted, the soul cannot think without brain nor feel without a heart, but this does not place our proper personality in the material organization, any more than it places the personality of God, as Redeemer, in the human garb he wore while on earth. The soul is not more dependent on the body in relation to what is visibly objective, than was Jehovah on human nature for the expression of his Deific Life to restore his lost image to man.—The relation of body and soul does not give the material superiority over the immaterial as to real personality, a whit more than the relation of humanity and Divinity in the person of Jesus brings the uncreated into inferiority. That the soul is subject to the body, does not prove that our proper personality centres in the latter, any more than the subjection of the Divine-human to earthly parents, raised Joseph and Mary above the Fatherhood of God. The doctrine of the body's superiority over the soul, as to personality, connects itself logically and legitimately with every form of Atheism. Christ died for the body because there is a soul in it, and the body will be raised again because there is a soul awaiting it.

"Let us go on unto Perfection."

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. Heb. 6: 1, 2.

Beloved brethren and sisters in the Lord: by the assisting grace of God, our Heavenly Father, I will try to communicate a few thoughts that have been impressed upon my mind for some time, from reading so much contention in the Companion in regard to the mode of washing of the saints' feet. I was often reminded of the above admonition of the apostle Paul to his Hebrine of Christ, and to go on unto perfection. I was also reminded of another Scripture where our Savior rebuked the Scribes and Pharisees that they have omitted the weightier matters of the law, &c., and that they strained a gnat and swallowed a Camel. I have often greatly feared that thus it might be with us, that perhaps we might contend very strong for certain modes or forms, and might omit or neglect the weightier matters, and may not have the true work of grace wrought in the soul. There is danger that it might be so with us; yes, we can obey all the external commands and yet lack the greatest command which is charity or love.—The apostle says, "though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries and all knowledge, and though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. Cor. 13: 1, 2.

Our blessed Lord instituted the ordinance of feet-washing to show humility, and to teach us that we are all on an equal footing in the family of God, and that we should serve one other; for he says, "the servant is not greater than his Lord, nor he that is sent greater than he that sent him; also he that would be great among you, let him be your servant." We may contend very strongly for a certain mode and yet lack that true substance—the true love of God, and that undefiled love of our Brethren. See John 13: 34.

We read of a new command our dear Savior had given unto his disciples that they shoul love one another as he loved them, for he says, "By this thall all men know that ye are my disciples. if ye have love one to another.—35 verse. Now love is the fulfilling of the law, and if we love him we will also kee all his commands, and his commands are not grievous; but they are delightful. If we have the true love of God in our hearts, we will have the mind of Christ, and it will be our meat and drink to do the will of our Father which is in heaven, and it will be our daily work to leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ and to go on unto perfection, and not strive too much about things to no profit, which subvert the hearers. Because we see the [illegible] which we must all stand before the great Tribunal Bar of God to give an account of our stewardship. O that the Lord would impress it solemly upon our every heart to examine ourselves to see whether we be in the faith, for many shall come in that day, and knock, and say, "Lord open unto us" and they must hear that dreadful denunciation: Depart from me all ye workers of iniquity: I never knew you, for I was hungry and you gave me no meat; I was naked and ye clothed me not; and in prison and ye visited me not, &c."—These are some of the christian virtues that we must have to be willing to contribute to the needy in their afflictions, for the Savior says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

How is it with us, beloved brethren and sisters? Are we striving to do all the good we can unto our fellow men? Are we willing to spend and to be spent for the glory of our God? Are we willing to present our bodies as living sacrifices unto God, which, the apostle says, is our reasonable service? Do we with the apostle

"count all things but dung for the excellency and the knowledge of Christ"? These are all important questions for us all to take into consideration, so that we can go on unto perfection.—Therefore it becomes us to examine ourselves daily to know whether we are making progress in divine life, so that we may be able to stand when our blessed Lord shall come to gather up his jewels. O what a glorious time that will be, if we are prepared to meet him; but woe unto us, if we have professed his name in vain.

Beloved, I think in my humble opinion it would be much more to the glory of our God and to the salvation of souls, if our beloved brethren that have the ability to write, and do write for the columns of the Companion, would exhort us more unto holiness, because "without holiness no one shall see the Lord." Therefore, let us leave the principles of the doctrine of christ and go on unto perfection, and strive to imitate our great High Priest that hath opened for us the way and hath given himself for us. Then let us examine ourselves to see whether we have that undifiled love for our brethren that our Lord has commaded us to have; for "love is of God, and he that loveth is born of God, for God is love. But he that loveth not, knoweth not God If a man says he loves God and hateth his brother, he is a liar and the truth is not in him." Beloved let us not love in word, but in deed and in truth. "And whosoever hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

Wm. N. CLEMMER.

Life of Faith.

"I may be faint and weary," says the believer, "but my God cannot be. I may alter and fluctuate, as to my frames; but my Redeemer is unchangeably the same. I might utterly fail and come to nothing if left to myself; but the Spirit of Truth hath said, 'I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.' He will renew my strength, either by changing my weakness into strength, or by enduing me with his own power. He is wise to see and provide for all my dangers; he is rich to relieve and supply me in all my wants; he is gracious to hear and to answer all my prayers; he is omnipotent to deliver and defend me from all my enemies; he is faithful to perfect and perform all his own promises; he is eternal and immortal to bless my poor deperding soul with eternal blessedness and immortality. Oh, what a great and glorious Savior for such a mean and worthless sinner! Oh, what a bountiful and graciously indulgent friend for such a base and insignificant rebel! What am I, when I compare myself, and all I am of myself, with what I can conceive of my God, and of what he hath kindly promised, even to me! What a mystery am I to myself, to angels, to men! A worm of earth to be like a star of heaven; a corruptible sinner to be an incorruptible saint; a rebel to be made a child; an outlaw to become an heir; a deserver of hell to be an inheritor of heaven; a stronghold of the devil to be changed into a temple of God; an enemy and a beggar to be exalted to a throne, to be in friendship with God, one with Christ, a possessor of his Spirit, and of his honor, happiness, and glory forevermore; and all without any right to any one thing on my part, but the miseries of a lowest hell! Oh, what manner, and what matter of love is this? Lord, take my heart, my soul, my all! I can no less.—Ambrose Serle.

Give the meaning.

Preaching, to be truly such, is essentially expository, whether the text be a single phrase or an entire chapter. The preacher is an expounder of God's Word. The first inquiry in dealing any text should be, "precisely what does the Holy Spirit mean by this passage?" It is to be assumed that each statement of scripture has a definite meaning, and the sole business of the preacher is to find out what this meaning is, and then to make it known to his hearers.—Study and prayer—minute study and earnest prayer—will be needful for this work, and every energy of body, mind, and heart will be exercised in it. But the work itself remains one and the same—the simple interpretation of God's Word, according to the sense which God Himself has fixed and revealed—the noblest and most blessed work in which man can be engaged.

Every morning meditate on the uncertainty of time to come, and every evening examine the employment of the day past.

Words.

"Words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

The beautiful words above quoted, was suggested to our mind upon reading a short article from the pen of our beloved pastor, which appeared in the Companion, No. 8 of present Volume. The article alluded to is beautifully characteristic of its author. Kindness and love are its only ingredients. Did we all possess these amiable qualities to that degree which it is our privilege, then would our Church be just what our Savior prayed it should be,—one even as the Father and Son are One.

But we are told, that our translators have given us an incorrect rendering of the above passage; that it ought to read, "A word fitly spoken is like golden citrons in silver baskets." This rendering makes it more plain, and conveys the thought, that an excellent saying, suitably expressed is as the most acceptable gift in the fairest conveyance; or in other words, should, the thoughts with which we are burdened, be sublime and grand, then should the language, which is made the medium of their communication, correspond with the dignity of the subject.

Nowhere do we find such pure, lofty and elegant language, as is employed by the inspired penmen; because, no other writers were ever burdened with such sublime ideas. Those who have perused the most eloquent productions of the most gifted, uninspired writers, agree in saying that beauty and grandeur of style to the writings of the Bible. The learned Calvin has said of the sacred volume, "that its energetic influence causes the beauties of rhetoricians and philosophers, or any thing we have read in Aristotle, Demosthenes, or Plato, or Cicero, almost entirely to be forgotten." A late writer has also said, in reference to this blessed Book, "The learning of the Bible is the most varied and profound; its specimens of musical science the most simple, sweet, and celestial that ever vibrated on the human ear; its imagery the most flowing, gorgeous and diversified that ever entertained created fancy; and its poetry the most elevated, holy, and ecstatic that ever inspired the human soul! In perfection of eloquence, the Bible can have no competitor. No uninspired orator could ever be found to compare with the prophet Amos. The epic grandeur of Milton, and the entrancing raptures of Homer, return behind the curtain of midnight, if compared in eloquence with that single stanza from the lips of the inspired herdsman of Tekoah. Amos 4: 13." Bishop Cowth, in speaking of the 14th chapter of Isaiah, says; "How forcible is this imagery, how diversified, how sublime! How elevated the diction, the figures, the sentiments! The Jewish nation, the cedars of Lebanon, the ghosts of departed kings, the Babylonish monarch, the travelers who find his corpse, and last of all Jehovah himself, are the characters which support this beautiful lyric drama. * * * * There is not a single instance in the whole compass of Greek and Roman poetry which, in every excellence of composition, can be said to equal or even to approach it." The royal sage also says; "A soft answer turneth away wrath; but grievous words stir up anger." Sometimes in our zeal to propagate something that is dear to our minds, we lose sight of the above beautiful maxium. Instead of our every sentiment being thoroughly imbued with that perfect love which "suffers long; is kind; which envies not; which vaunts not itself; is not puffed up; does not behave itself unseemly, seeks not its own, is not easily provoked, imputes no evil; rejoices not at iniquity, but rejoices with the truth; bears all things, believes all things;" we are prone to have our sentiments tinged with an opposite principle.

We have, with painful feelings, read some of the articles that have appeared in our beloved Companion. Our hearts have ached with very grief at some expressions contained in some communications, which seemed to savor of the spirit of contention. We should by all means try to suppress this spirit, the spirit of contention. Our Savior has told us that a house divided against itself shall not stand. Matt. 12: 25. Why is it that we who profess to be governed by nothing but the blessed Gospel must be so divided? Why cannot we all speak the same thing, that there be no divisions among us? and that we be made "complete in the same mind and in the same judgment?" 1 Cor. 1: 10, 11. Methinks, that one fruitful cause of contention is [illegible]. We are told that "with all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, we should forbear one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Ephesians 4: 2, 3. Sometimes we contend about matters that are not revealed in God's word, with a vehemency, unbecoming the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus.—It is true we are told to "contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." Jude, 3. We must firmly adhere to that which is clearly revealed as truth; and must oppose that which is clearly revealed as error. But there are some matters about which the Scriptures are not specific, and about which the Brotherhood entertains diversity of opinion. One of these subjects, is,that of Sabbath School. Now upon such matters, we cannot be too careful. Caution and prudence should dictate every word we utter. It would be well indeed, if, when we are discussing such subjects, we would take the advice of the apostle Paul, "That no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way." Romans 14: 13.—Some brethren think that Sabbath schools would be an excellent auxiliary to the Church; others, that they would not be productive of good, but evil.

We lately received a letter from an aged brother, whose hoary locks and bending form show that his battles are well-nigh fought, and his victory won. This dear brother, whom we love in the truth, disapproved of Sabbath Schools. He said considerable against them. Now, we are a friend to Sabbath Schools; we were brought up in them, and served in the capacity of teacher for a long time, when we were connected with the M. E. church. We confess, that we loved the service dearly; and, even now, do we love to contemplate the happy seasons we used to spend with our beloved classes. We would be glad, indeed, if our dear brethren and sisters here, were of our mind in this matter, and would organize one in this arm of the Church. But, if they see differently, we love them none the less; and we feel that they love us none the less.

When we anserewd our brother's letter, we said nothing about Sabbath School; we did not wish to oppose him; we have peculiar reasons for loving him.—He it was, who first showed us, that we were not obeying the commands of God; and could not obey them where we were. The result was, we determined to go where we could do so.

In Companion No. 11. pages 152, 153, there is an article on Sabbath Schools. In the last section of said article, we read words which startled us. The writer says: "Dear brethren and sisters, I entreat you as one who feels for sinful mortals, to look at this work as it is. Not with blasphemy and prejudice, for it is a matter of serious consideration." Although we admire the general spirit of the article, yet we were grieved,—oh how deeply grieved!—at the use of such words in such a connection, especially blasphemy.—Webster defines it thus: "Blasphemy; An indignation offered to God by words or writing; reproachful, contemptuous, or irreverent words uttered impiously against Jehovah." Judge now of our surprise and grief. We read the word over and over again, hoping that we might be mistaken. Can it be, thought we, that one member of Christ's Mystical Body will apply such dreadful terms to other members, or even intimate that they are guilty of such an awful crime as blasphemy, simply because they differ from them about a point upon which the Scriptures leave room to differ! When it comes to using such terms, whither, oh whither! hath love fled?—that love which Paul so much extols in the 13th chapter of 1st Cor. and without which, he says, he would be nothing, though he should have all knowledge; though he should give all his goods to feed the poor; and though he should give his body to be burned.

We know some dearly beloved brothers and sisters, whom we believe have drank deeply of the fountain of living waters, and who have feasted long upon the hidden manna, and yet they cannot see the propriety of Sabbath Schools. We do not believe that even prejudice occupies any place within their breasts. They conscientiously hold their views; and could they be convinced they were wrong, they would yield. Cannot our youth be instructed in the Scriptures, and taught to know their duty, and made to feel the importance of obeying the Gospel, without attending Sabbath School? Must they of necessity roam about on the Sabbath, and seek vicious companions, unless they are sent to Sabbath School? Have not the instruction and example of parents more influence, than that of teachers? Are not the words which proceed from the lips of a pious father, or a pious mother, more potent, than those which proceed from the lips of a pious teacher? Should parents prefer to keep their tender lambs at home, and instruct them themselves, far should it be from us to interfere. We should shrink from taking upon us so weighty a responsibility, that of instructing those whom God has intrusted to their care. Nothing but imperative duty should induce us to undertake it.

We read nothing in the Scriptures concerning Sabbath Schools; but we do read of Timothy who was faithfully taught by his pious mother. Also, parents are commanded to train up their children in the nurture and fear of the Lord.

For the Companion.

A Remonstrance.

To the brethren of the Miami Valley, authors and coadjutors of a certain petition, and supplement, and a caution to all the brethren to be upon their guard.

Whereas your petition was put into my hands some time ago, and another copy accompanied by the supplement was received through the mail recently, and revolving the matter in my mind, I am impressed with the duty of thus addressing you through this medium: that both sides of the subject may be before the mind of the general Brotherhood, and to warn the brethren against committing themselves in any way before seriously considering the matter.

Permit me to say to you that I was not a little surprised and much pained, to see such a movement; not that I am insensible of the fact that attempts have been and are still being made to introduce innovations into the Church, which demand action on the part of those who are zealous for the apostolic practice, and anxious to avert the tendency of the Brotherhood from assimilating with the popular christianity. But I was surprised at the point of attack, as well as the manner in which it was made, and therefore cannot co-operate as you requested in the supplement to said petition; but feel it my duty to use my influence against the whole proceedings. If the Church in some localities has digressed from the ancient order, and needs renovation, why not call upon the Church to assist in the effort? Surely the departure is not so general but that it could be arrested by the body of the church in a united action. I have no doubt but that there is sufficient wisdom and piety in the church to preserve it. They then strike so boldly and so rashly at the organization itself, with the threat of secession provided it (the Annual Meeting) does not succumb to your dictation. It does appear to me that the policy is extremely unwise, and finds a parallel only in the folly of the Southern States seceding from the federal union in 1861. And

I very much fear, in as much as it is expressed in the explanation of said petition, that, 'it came into the hearts of some of the oldest fathers," &c. Unless it be claimed that these old fathers are inspired and above temptation, that the impression thus made was by the agency of a deceptive spirit. And why have I arrived to this conclusion? Because I cannot see any cause for any complaint in the organization of the Annual Meeting, or the manner in which it is conducted. There certainly is no violation of any Gospel principle; and as to the concentration of power it does appear to me that the suspicion is without foundation in truth; for so far as my observation extends the most extensive liberty has been enjoyed for full and free discussion. It is true that it is now, and has been, and always will be the case, that a certain class of persons lead in all deliberative bodies. And why? Because they have talent and energy, as well as boldness and fortitude, and consequently will wield an influence whether they are official or private.

As to the brethren selected to conduct the business of the meeting, of course it is necessary that they should be efficient. They should be chosen from among the Elders—not to say the oldest, for it is not always that the oldest are the most prudent, pious, or wise, nor have they always the most experience. (Job. 32: 9.) Brethren professing these qualifications, will be most efficient, most useful, and most safe, whether younger or older, and ought to be selected for this purpose. How can such be best secured? You say "let those brethren be selected [illegible] but you do not tell us who shall be the instrument through whom this selection shall be made, but I suppose you intend prudent brethren, through whom the Holy Spirit shall operate. Where are these prudent brethren to be found? Do you think only at the place, and in the church where the annual meeting is held? Or may we not find them in the District respectively, and is it not necessary that these prudent brethren should have some acquaintance with those whom they would select, that they might make a prudent selection? and who would be more likely to have a proper acquaintance with them than those in the districts from which they are selected.

Next you suggest: "that a record of the proceedings should be kept by some brother present." This brother of course must be selected by some body, or he must call himself to the discharge of this duty. I suppose you do not object to him being selected by the old brethren. Then on this point the present arrangement is all right; no difficulty here. But you do not want a human Moderator and propose to "submit that matter to the dictation of the Holy Spirit." Very well; if we were all fully under the influence of the Holy Spirit we would need no other Moderator, so far as the observance of order is concerned; but as it is necessary that somebody should act as the instrument, one must be authorized, or all those old brethren must act. If all—and they were to act as they were moved—there would likely be no action at all, for what is everybody's business is no body's, and if they should all act, then here would be disorder itself. And this is not all. Sometimes we see to our sorrow that while all are moved by a spirit—old as well as young—we are driven to the conclusion that the spirit is not altogether holy. So after all it does appear to me that we can do no better than for the prudent brethren of the Districts respectively, to select a man from among them, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, and appoint them over this business and when these chosen brethren come together, for them to look out two men full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom whom they may appoint over this business of bringing the business before the meeting in order, close discussion, and keeping order if need be, and record the proceedings of the meeting &c. This is Apostolical. See Acts 6: 3. And as to exalting the mind we all have great need of watchfulness over ourselves, whether in private or official positions; and I am inclined to think that those old brethren selected full of wisdom, &c., perhaps appreciate the value of their souls as highly and are as capable of withstanding their temptations as other brethren.

Concerning the Annual Meeting sending committees to assist in settling difficulties, &c. This has been the usage of the church ever since my acquaintance with it; and my observation and experience satisfies me that the arrangment is wise and good, and especially the more so as the church increases. For it is necessary that a unity of the faith, and harmony in practice be preserved in the church. And when personal difficulties exist, it is sometimes best that those who assist in adjusting them should know but little about it until the evidence is brought before them. And again it is the case sometimes that parties succeed in prejudicing the minds of those within their reach, so that those who are to settle the matter are outside of that circle. And indeed if I understand the present order, it is that first the Elders in surrounding districts are called, and then if necessary appeal to the yearly meeting in cases of this character.

So dear brethren may I not cherish the hope that you will withdraw your petition, with the threat of withdrawing from the body. Let that be the last thing thought of. Think of the dreadful convulsion it will produce; the demoralizing effect, and ruinous result in paralizing the prosperity of our blessed Christianity.—What! Shall we now after remaining firmly until during the terrible political tornado, which shook to its center our Social System, sever those Christian ties that have so long bound us together and characterized us as a consistent and united body of worshippers?—Never; no never! If innovations have been made upon the doctrines of the church, let us not attack the organization, but let us rally around the standard.—Let us cling to the old ship. Let us unite together, and enter our protest against these innovations. Then we can with propriety call upon the brethren to rally around us and pledge their names, their energies, and their influence in support of these principles. And then upon those who persist in those unauthorized measures will rest the responsibility of secession, and the disruption of the church.

In conclusion let me entreat you to withhold the petition from the present meeting. My reasons, besides what are stated above, are, first because a matter of such awful proportions, involving so much ought not to be precipitated upon the Brethren so suddenly.—Time ought to be given for the serious, second, solemn thought, and calm reflection. And second I would not for any consideration that such excitement should take place in our midst, because the church in Virginia has never taken any part in those new measures. It has just passed through a tremendous ordeal, (The Rebellion,) and is now rising above the prejudice of its opponents, and with fair prospects of accomplishing much good, while other organizations are waning more or less, for want of being united. We would (if it pleased the Lord) that the meeting should be disappointed than for such a thing to take place here.

Your request for the brethren to present your petition to their congregations for their signatures, and your prescribed order, I regard as being extremely out of order, and therefore is one of the last things that I could consent to perpetrate.

I hope my dear brethren, that you will appreciate my motives in this communication. Regard me not as an enemy, though I speak plainly; believe me when I say I love you as brethren, but I love the church more, and sincerely believe that the place of attack is wrong, and your actions premature. That being so, instead of reaching and removing the real grievances, you will bring upon yourselves justly the odium of causing divisions, and be marked as such, and will doubtless injure the prosperity of our holy Religion. May the God of our fathers overrule all of us for good and by the intervention of his Spirit, save the church, is the humble prayer of your anxious brother.

The Graveyard.

Oh, what stillness! Death holds here her empire. Naught is heard but the low, soft breeze rustling among the leaves and grass. The weeping willows bend softly down o'er the tombs, as if holding converse with the sleepers. Tread lightly, stranger, for it is hallowed ground. Oh! speak not loudly, it would sound so harsh among such stillness. It is good to linger here; it weans the mind from earthly things and the conflicting elements of a busy world, and it seems the very portal of heaven. Oh! ye tombs! ye silent graves! what lessons of instruction do ye teach! You declare to man the vanity of earth's transitory things. You confirm the declaration, "dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return" Yes, you teach men equality, too. For here, he, who once swayed the destiny of nations, demolished thrones and temples, laid waste cities and killed the inhabitants, causing rivers of human gore to flow, and the cries of orphans, the moans of widows to mingle with the rolling flood, compelled courtiers to bow the knee in humble submission before his glittering throne, caused the popes that minister about the golden altar to sacrifice the lamb and to burn holy incense to his wondrous deeds; yes, even he, in this chilling yard, sleeps beside this humble poor man that ate his bread moistened by the sweat of his brow. And he, who in purity of heart, in ministration of charity, and in addresses to the throne of grace, appeared almost an angel—unfit for earth, mingles his dust with him who had blackened his heart with deeds of the blackest die, imbued his hands in the blood of his fellow mortal, and besprinkled his dagger with the gore of his cherishing parents! Yes, here all distinctions ceases. The skilled in science, and strong, the rich and the poor, the humble peasant and the haughty prince, mingle their atoms together. Here all broils, all strifes, all contentions and enmity must be brought to an end. Friend and foe, saint and sinner, rest alike in the grave.

But look around you, here lies those of all ages, from infancy up to ripe old age. Yonder sleep a cluster of sweet innocents. Ushered upon the shores of mortality, but scarcely had they looked around upon the hum of the world, when they became displeased with the sight. The soil was uncongenial to plants so pure, so their heavenly Father plucked them up and transplanted them near the waters of the river that makes glad the celestial city.

Here lies those who are cut off in the meridian of life. Stern death breathed o'er their bright joys of life his blighting breath, and they withered ere they had scarcely taste of their sweetness. Their bright sun of existence arose in unclouded splendor, and shed its genial rays upon the heart, making the flowers of hope and lofty anticipations spring forth, but scarcely had they budded and opened their beautiful foliage, and sent up their fragrance, ere the chilling frosts of the monster death fell thick and heavy upon them—the faded, wilted and drooped, and with them fell the noble stalk. But now thou canst

"Sleep on sweet one, no angry storm Shall break thy sweet repose."

And those, too, sleep here, o're whose head had passed the sun of seventy summers. They bared their bosom to the storm of life—battled with its trials and its disappointments until, with furrowed brows, sunken cheeks and sapless limbs, they fell covered with wounds. Yes, their Father had accomplished, His holy purpose with them, and they were "gathered to the generation of their fathers." Now silently they repose in the narrow house where

"No pain, or grief, or anxious fear
Invade thy bounds. No mortal woes
Can reach the peaceful sleeper here,
While angels watch the soft repose."

Man proposes, God disposes.

Is the Commission Carried out?

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets: and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, and for the edifying of the Body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."—"And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations," "to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death," to guide sinners feet into the way of peace.—"And this Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations."

Now these are solemn charges and undoubtedly they are made to somebody; and those to whom the authority is given, or charge committed, cannot stand justified until that duty is fulfilled. The church is Christ's representative on earth; and Paul says, we as ambassadors in Christ's stead. Our Savior sought the sinner: he came to save that which was lost, and not the righteous. Was the extent of the commission filled by the Apostles? No; but to them and their successors until the end, the promise was, to you and your children, and to them that are afar off; and as long as there is one sinner on earth, it is said: Go.

It is God's pleasure to save a ruined world, but it must be saved by the means appointed; and those means are brought into action through his mystical body, the church, who hold the fundamental principles and laws of his government. If that body refuses to render itself subservient to his control in the carrying out of his plan of Redemption, God is not justified and sinners not saved; yea, moreover, their blood will be required at their hands,—hence, we hold, the church that holds God's immutable laws as the ground and pillar of Truth is that body through which the Father will draw all men unto him. Therefore, let us see well to it, lest like king Saul we may feel to justify ourselves that we have fulfilled the command of the Lord. Saul was to utterly destroy man and beast: the Commission says, Teach all; and to the watchmen, Cry aloud: spare not. So there seems to be a great stir to overthrow Satan's kingdom, and to bring light to them that sit in darkness; but our imagination runs away with our judgment: we expect to find this darkness some place where we have never been, or in some foreign clime, and are very careful not to throw any firebrands in the enemy's camp at home. I do hold that there is a grand oversight that I cannot explain, that while there is much ado about the extension of the Gospel, the Church so powerfully evades the preaching of the great salvation in the streets of our great thoroughfares, cities, towns, villages, the very seat of satan, pride, vanity, debauchery and the lowest haunts of vice, and also the seat of Anti-christ, false prophets and teachers, and deluded thousands, all for the want of the Truth. God will work their salvation, but must have the co-operation of the means he has placed in the Church. I fear that those in whose hands is placed the sword of the Spirit to do battle against the mighty are sparing the fattest of Satan's flocks, (probably to offer in sacrifice to the fowls of heaven). How oft have the ambassadors who hold the authority in their hand, passed through those Sodoms, and beheld the abominations and idolatrous worship! Precious souls are passing from time to eternity, without the knowledge of salvation or of the bread of life, while those who have the key to unlock the gates of heaven unto them, stand with it in their hand and refuse to thrust it into the locks that unbolt the massive doors of their prisons, and bring to light the hidden things of "Mystery, Babylon." But I know there is an objection, or rather an excuse, that there is no door open. We do not learn that Jonah had a door opened to him, or the seventy either; & yet the Lord said, Go, and tell them the kingdom of heaven is at hand. I am confident that God, with the proper motive and zeal on the part of his church, can prevail to the pulling down of the strongholds and imaginations, for "greater works than these shall ye do." Or shall we, for fear of feeble man, the spirit's course restrain? or undismayed in deed and word, be a true witness to our Lord? True Paul says, for "the perfecting of the saints." This seems to be the course of those who go from place to place; generally to located churches where the gospel is preached, while those who know it not, are left to remain in ignorance. The unlocking of the coffer and erecting of buildings (or as Paul, hire) will accomplish a great deal, for with a little mammon of this world, we may have many souls for our hire. Beware lest we tithe mint, and anise, and forget these weighty matters, for I cannot feel clear until the church has made an effort to acquit herself in this solemn charge. Then let the church arouse from itsslumbers, redeem the time, because the days are evil, make it her sole object to discharge every duty, qualify and equip ambassadors, send them forth with such a load of blessings and invocations to Almighty God, that they may cry mightily in the streets of our great thoroughfares: The kingdom of Heaven is at hand. "For the Lord shall rise up as in Mount Perazim: he shall be wroth as in the Valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act; for the Lord hath determined a consumption upon the whole earth." "Let Brotherly Love Continue."

Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord: Being deprived of going to church this morning, I do not know a better way to make use of those few golden moments than to write for the Companion. The very subject under consideration has enjoined this duty upon me; knowing that this commandment, if more strictly obeyed, would lead us safely on our way to heaven, where the loving Savior is, who so loved us while we were yet in our sins.

It is to be feared that there are many who profess christianity who do not let brotherly love continue in their hearts, but have been persuaded and enticed by the enemy to throw out such sarcastic insinuations against some of their brethren that they find much difficulty to serve the Lord as they should; while they have flesh and blood to contend with. I have often thought of what the Psalmist says: "Behold how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." But alas, how different is the case with some of us. Many are to-day assembled at the house of God to hear his chosen ministers preach the word of God, and many perhaps will be admonished of their duty in regard to brotherly love. In a family where true love abounds, where quarrels never come; where hatred, anger and malice is a stranger, and where anothers enjoyment is sought for as well as their own, is a good place for the church of Christ to take an example. How different does such a family appear before the world, to a family that is continually in discord. So it is with us, brethren and sisters; the more love we have for one another the better we will let our light shine to the world. A light that is under the bushel might as well be no light at all; but a light set upon a hill cannot be hid, but will shine with such brilliancy that many that are left to grope their way in darkness will be brought to the light of the everlasting gospel. Dear brethren, when we contemplate the responsibility resting upon us, should we not for the sake of the church, and those outside, begin with renewed vigor to serve the Lord who so loved us that he gave his own dear son a ransom for our souls? And let us preserve love, for by so doing we will preserve light, for the spirit of truth testifies in the first epistle of John 2: 10, that "he that loveth his brother abideth in light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him."—"In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil; whosoever doth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother." 3: 10. We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death. 14.

Corruptible Seed.

"Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." "They that plough iniquity and sow wickedness reap the same." "He that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity." "Ye have ploughed wickedness, ye have reaped iniquity, ye have eaten the fruit of lies." "They have sown the wind and they shall reap the whirlwind."—"He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." "Now the works of the flesh are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, laciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like: they that do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God;" but "ye must be born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God."

The works of the flesh are the fruits of the corruptible seed; hence we must be changed from nature to grace. This Adamic nature that is so full of sin and corruption, must be rooted up. The harvest fieled of the devil is full of farmers sowing the seed of corruption and wickedness. And it seems, too, that now in seed-time they have a jolly time; but alas for poor humanity, the harvest is coming, and "what thou sowest that shalt thou also reap."

This seed is very productive. One small seed sown in a neighborhood or church, will sometimes cause a great deal of trouble. Every time an evil seed is sown, evil fruit is produced. It cannot be otherwise. Sometimes I see and hear of its effects among the Brethren, in the way of idle talk, angry words, and unbecoming language. These things ought not so to be.—We should not do anything that would wound our brethren's feelings. We ought to get nearer the cross, and walk in the footsteps of our Master.

Thoughts for the Young.

The things herein suggested are surely for your present and eternal good, if you will only be exercised thereby. They are not confined entirely to the young; but for all whom they may concern.

Before proceeding further, it would be well to state to the earnest reader, that we are not to consider so much who writes, as what is written, that reading is like eating, in one sense of the word. "It is not what we eat that makes us thrive but it is what is digested." So it is not what we read that makes us learned and good but it is what we remember and practice it is what we do that makes us or unmakes us. Our writing as well as our daily walk and conversation, should always be such that the youth may find improvement therein, the women modesty, the aged respect and all men civility. I speak as to wise young men and women. If you would be benefitted by reading, always read with a candid, sincere, open and unprejudiced mind, and if in reading you are "convinced against your will, do not be of the same opinion still"; let your prejudices give away to light and truth and may you be able to exclaim with one of old; "This day do I remember my faults; and then address a throne of grace and say, if nothing more," Oh Lord God, help me to accept the good and reject the evil; give me Lord my faults to see; give me wisdom, discretion grace and understanding; for where withal shall Icleanse my way but by taking heed to thy word; yea thy word is truth."

It is one thing to profess religion and another thing to posess it. It is an easy matter to make a profession of religion and outside show; but it is not so easy to possess and practice the religion of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; and it is the high privilege of every soul to posess it. Then dear reader, what road are you traveling? Whither goest thou? How is it between thee and thy God: how stands that dread account? Are you groping your way in the dark, while the Gospel Sun is shining all around you, in all its beauty, strength and splendor? Oh! if this be so, I would say to you, with all my heart, arise shake thyself and walk like a man. We are never men in the true sense until we are on the Lord's side. There is no necessity of you being in ignorance and darkness, if you will but look and see and be made whole every whit.—"Thou art inexcusable, Oh man whosoever thou art." God says consider well now, before it is too late. The time is coming and Oh who knows but what it may be very near when it will surely be too late; when the clouds will have returned after the rain. The time will come, when the wheel will be broken at the great fountain of life, and you will not be able to draw any more water from the blessed wells of salvation: The time will come when the harvest will be passed; and Oh peradventure, you are not saved.—the time will come, and makes haste, if you will not seek God now, when you will seek and call upon God earnestly to have mercy on you, but unhappy thought, He says then, "I will laugh at your calamity and mock when your fears will come upon you as a mighty whirlwind." The goodness of God should lead you to repentence.—Knowing therefore the goodness as well as the terror of the Lord, we would try to persuade you; for your soul's sake, to forsake sin and be reconciled to God. Oh, then, young man, young woman, (how interesting the name) be wise now. Why procrastinate, why delay and put off for to morrow what had better be done to day? Prepare to meet thy God now, while he is blessing you with health and strength, both of body and mind; while you have place, time, friends, and opportunity; while your mind is clear and free from pain and care; while your body is young and active.—Give God the first fruits of all your life. Set your mortal body and immortal spirit in order now for you must die, and not live here always. We are sure of but one thing here that is, we must die. Seek God with all your heart and affections, and you will find. But if you still put off your return to God, remember as you do so, that, the time draws near when you will be deprived of all these blessings, and you, will go down to a premature, untimely and dishonored grave. The psalmist says, "deceitful men shall not live out half of their days," that their name shall rot and be blotted out and forgotten: but not so with the righteous, for they are blessed in time and eternity. They not only rest from their labors in death, and their works follow them, but, though they are dead, yet they speak. Remember, there are but two roads leading to the port of eternity, and one of these roads you are traveling. Then stop now, and never rest satisfied until you are fully assured that you are on the Lord's side, by walking in all of his commandments as laid down in the New Testament.

The great object for which we are all striving, is happiness. There is no one, who does not desire to be happy here and hereafter. Oh then, why not use the proper and only means, to attain to such an important end? Bear in mind that, true happiness, consists only, in living faithfully in the discharge of every known duty, to God and man: that we, as professors of the Lord Jesus, must use every means in our power, to make all around us happy; that we must live within the limits of our circumstances, and bring our mind down to our condition in life, and say unto our desires, "thus far shall ye go and no further. Men talk of their boasted philosophy, but this is the philosopher's stone, if you will have it so; and poor very poor is that philosopher who has not attained to this end; for a good conscience is the best law and a good life is the best philosophy; because it is to the soul what health is to the body. It preserves a constant ease and serenity of mind, and more than counterballances all calamities and afflictions which can befall us here, and is worth more to us than thousands of worlds like this. The wise man said, "The beginning of wisdom is the fear of the Lord;" consequently the greatest wisdom is, to be as good we we can; for of all parts of wisdom, that of practice is the best It is said of Socrates that he was the wisest man of his day, because he turned his acquired knowledge into practice, and aimed at goodness, more than greatness. Then, dear young reader, let us practice this great philosophy and wisdom which Jesus has laid down, for it is the only religion which will stand at the great test of the Judgment of the last day. It were better for us never to make a profession of Christ and we had a mill stone hanged to our neck and cast into the sea, than for us to have a form of Godliness while we deny the power thereof. Then you who have not sought Christ, by forsaking sin, turn to him now; and those who profess to be his diciples, let us not deceive ourselves for God is not mocked. We may deceive man in our profession, but it will be impossible to practice deception with God, for he sees the heart. Brethren, let us be careful, for there is such a thing as having a name to live, while we are dead in trespasses and sins; let us be alive to God by good works, and then we can go forward with the happy thought, that when done toiling here, the Master will say, It is enough; come up higher. Well done faithful servant, you have been faithful in a few things, now I will make thee ruler over many things. It will be a great consolation to us when going down the declivity of time, when we reach the margin of the grave, to be able say of a truth that our time has been properly spent, that we have striven to keep a conscience void of offenes.—

The sweetest word in our language is the little word love; the greatest word is, God; and the shortest, expressing time, is, now. That is love God now. But how often does the unconverted sinner say, "Go thy for this time: and when I get older, and see a little more of this world's pleasure, I will call for thee and attend to those things."—Dear reader, be not deceived: that convenient season will never come. I would call to you with all my heart, even as I would to one whom I saw rushing into the jaws of temporal death, to stop now while you can and don't go another step; don't put off your return to God another day. It is now God will hear you: tomorrow may never come. Suppose you should live to be older, what will your delay benefit you in your return to God? You will have the more steps to retrace and sins to mourn and confess. We hear of very few old persons giving their affections to the Lord, from the fact of having deferred their salvation too long,—their hearts have become seared, as it were, with a hot iron. God says, Let them alone; I will not always strive with them: I have given them over to reprobacy of mind, that they may believe a lie and be damned. The time was when God wrought powerfully upon their hearts, and kind friends admonished them to give their wanderings over; but satan said to them, Not now; some other time will do as well—"A little more sleep, and a little more folding of the hands to sleep."—Thus they suffered themselves to go to destruction, by thus losing all feeling for religion. Like a man in a little boat on the smooth surface above the Niagara falls, gliding pleasantly along, but the nearer his approach to the falls, the swifter the current becomes; his friends call to him from the shore, that he had better come to land and save himself, for he is in imminent danger. But he laughs at their great anxiety for his safety; he knows what he is about, and says, not now: I will go a little farther. But Oh he finds at last to his great dismay, his friends are right; the current is to strong; his little bark is dashed into destruction.

Just so with the sinner; if he would be entreated while young, he could easily turn his course; but he puts it off from time to time, until he becomes so thoroughly rooted and grounded in his evil habits and practices that his whole life is spent without giving God his heart.—

Think not because you are young that you have many years yet to live. You may as quickly pass away as the beautiful flower, as the morning dew, or as the early cloud. What then will this poor perishing world be to you? What profit? "Today," then, "if you hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

A FEW WORDS TO PARENTS.

Be patient with your children.—Let neither slow understanding, nor their occasional pertness offend you to provoke the sharp reproof of which too many are guilty. Remember the world is new to them, and that they have no slight task to perform in their unripened intellects, & the mass of facts and truths that crowd upon their attention. You (parents) are grown to maturity and strength through years of experience; and it ill becomes you t fret at a child who fails to kee peace with your thoughts. A Baptismal Scene.

Mr———is about to receive some new members into his church. They are to be baptized. And the pastor must ascertain what mode will be the answer of a good conscience for each candidate. To his great discomfort he finds his candidates very nearly and equally divided into three classes. One must be sprinkled, another poured and the other immersed. The pastor must preach a sermon on baptism and in that sermon he declares that sprinkling is the scriptural mode; that pouring is also baptism and he is not positive but that Christ knelt in the water and that John dipped the water and poured it on his head; that immersion is not the scriptural baptism at all. After saying all that he could against immersion; and discovering that he had failed to convince any who believed that immersion was the only mode; that they were wrong, and knowing that they would go to the Baptist church (where all such ought to go,) if he did not immerse them; he said at the close of his sermon, that he could baptize those who persisted in a determination to be immersed, as the original word that is rendered baptize signified in the original language, to sprinkle, to pour and also sometimes to immerse. So he proceeded to sprinkle those who preferred sprinkling in the house. Then he went to the river and some came and knelt in he water and he took his hand and lipped up the water and poured it n them. As one of the candidates omes forward the minister says to im, 'Did I not baptize you at the ouse? He replies: No, sir.'— [e then proceeds to immerse those ho require it; and just as he thinks s work done and is coming out of e water with his last candidate, his surprise, the man he last ured, is coming down into the wa- to meet him, with his coat off to immersed. 'Stop;' says the min- r; what do you mean? I have otized you twice already. 'No you ve not;' says the candidate, for last thing you said in the pulpit this: That the original word signified to sprinkle, to pour and to immerse; and I have only had the two thirds of it and I want the other third; I must know that I am rightly baptized.'—Lockhart in Baptist Tidings.

The Rejected Stone.

I have heard a story—I cannot tell whether it is true or not—out of some of the Jewish rabbis; it is a tale concerning the text: "The stone which the builders refused, the same is become the headstone of the corner." It is said that when Solomon's temple was building, all the stones were brought from the quarry, ready cut and fashioned, and there were marked on all the blocks the places were they were to be put. Amongst the stones was a very curious one; it seemed of no describable shape, it appeared unfit for any portion of the building. They tried it at this wall, but it could not be accommodated; so, vexed and angry, they threw it away.—The temple was so many years building that this stone became covered with moss, and grass grew around it. Every body passing by laughed at the stone; they said Solomon was wise and doubtless all the other stones were right; but as for that block, they might as well send it back to the quarry for it was quite sure it was for nothing. Year after year rolled on, and the poor stone was still despised; the builders constantly refused it. The eventful day came when the temple was to be finished and opened, and the multitude was assembled to the grand sight. The builders said, "where is the topstone?" "Where is the pinnacle?" They little thought where the crowning marble was, until some said, "Perhaps, that stone which the builders refused is meant to be the topstone." They then took it, and hoisted it to the top of the house; and as it reached the summit they found it well adapted to the place. Loud Hosannas made the welkin ring, as the stone which the builders refused, thus became the headstone of the corner. So it is with Christ Jesus. The builders cast him away. He was a plebeian; He was a man of poor extraction; He was a man who was acquainted with sinners, who walked in poverty and meanness: hence the worldly-wise despised him. But when God shall gather together, in one, all things that are in heaven and that are in earth, then Christ shall be the glorious consummation of all things.

"Christ reigns in heaven the topmost stone,
And well deserves the praise.

He shall be exalted; He shall be honored; His name shall endure as long as the sun, and all generations shall be blessed in Him, yea, all generations shall call Him blessed.—Spurgeon.

The Pen of Heaven.

The day grows more solemn. Its solemnity reaches its highest point and culminates in the momentous issue of judgment. It is the day of God's settlement with a world that has a long credit. It is the winding up of this earth's bankrupt estate, and each man's individual interest. It is the closing of an open account that has been running on ever since fall. It is the day when the balance is struck, and our fate is heaven or hell; and by the manner in which we walked in those statues, and kept these judgments, and did them, our destiny is determined.

The most common action of life, in every day, every hour, is invested with a solemn grandeur, when we think how they extend their issues into eternity. Our hands are now sowing the seed for that great harvest. We shall meet again all we are doing and have done. The graves shall give up their dead, and from the tombs of oblivion the past shall give up all that it holds in keeping to be witness for or against. Oh! think of that, and in yonder hall of the Inquisitions, see what its effect on us should be! Within these blood-stained walls, for those atrocious cruelties Rome has yet to answer, one is under examination. He has been assured that nothing he reveals shall be written for the purpose of being used against him. While making frank and ingenious confession, he suddenly stops. He is dumb—a mute. They ply him with questions, flatter him—he answers not a word. Danger makes the senses quick; his ear has caught a sound; he listens; it ties his tongue. An arras hangs beside him, and behind it he hears a pen running along the pages. The truth flashes on him. Behind that screen ascribe sits, committing to the fatal page every word that he says, and he shall meet it again on the day of trial.

Ah! how solemn to think there is such a pen going to heaven, and entering on the books of judgment all that we say or wish, and all we think or do. Would to God we heard it! What a check; and what a stimulus! Are you about to sin, how strong a curb! If slow to duty, how sharp a spur! What a motive to pray for the blood that blots out a guilty past and for such grace as in time to come shall enable us to walk in God's statutes to keep his judgments and do them. "Knowing, therefore, the terror of the Lord, we persuade men.

Personal Influence.

Blessed influence of one true, loving human soul on another! Not calculable by algebra, not deducible by logic, but mysterious, effectual mighty, as the hidden process by which the tiny seed is quickened, and bursts forth into tall stem and broad leaf, and glowing tasseled flower. Ideas are often poor ghosts; our sun-filled eyes cannot discern them; they pass athwart us in thin vapor, and cannot make themselves felt. But sometimes they are made of flesh; they touch us with soft, responsive hands; they look at us with sad, sincere eyes, and speak to us in appealing tones; they are clothed in a living human soul, with all its conflicts, its faith, and its love. Then their presence is a flower, then they shake us like a passion, and we are drawn after them with gentle compulsion, as flame is drawn to flame.—Blackwood.

No cloud can overshadow a christian, but the eye of faith will discern a rainbow in it.

Editor's Table.

As this number goes forth to its destination, we set out for Annual Meeting. And when we again take our seat at our editorial table—if it will please the Lord to permit us to return again—it will likely be to prepare our report of the doings of that body. This report we expect tc be more complete as well as more accurate than any heretofore given. It is the general impression that the meeting pending will be one of more than ordinary importance. Questions that have been agitating the mind of the general Brotherhood for a number of years, will be pressed upon this council for final decision. Some are fearful of the results. We apprehend no danger to the church of God. Of course the fearful will appropriate this to our lack of appreciation. We think we derive it from the promises of Jesus: "Lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," and "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it"—the church. He has means by which he preserves his people. Among these are watchfulness and prayer. The church is composed of church members.—These are men and women.—The Savior speaks of them as being half wise and half foolish. Those who are wise will have oil in their vessels and will therefore go in with the Bridegroom. Those then, who are solicitous for the welfare and prosperity of the church should be engaged in watching themselves that they go not into evil. The chief duty of each one is to watch over himself.—If every one would do this, there would be little left for the annual Council to do. If every church member would watch over one person, examine and correct one person, and that one the very person in whose condition he is most interested, we would have few difficulties to settle in the Church. This all will not do; hence the duty of praying for one another, and to "consider one another, to incite to love and good works."

We have nothing to dictate to the meeting. We trust the Spirit of the Lord will overrule all its deliberations, to his honor and glory, and to the peace and welfare of his people. To this end we believe that each one ought to go up to the Council with a full resignation to the will of the Lord. They ought to free their minds of all tradition and prejudice, and go to meet the Lord and his people with a full assurance that the Word of God is a sufficient guide for all who want to come to a knowledge of the truth.

It is to be hoped that the District Meetings will have relieved the Annual Meeting of much of its labor in the disposition of minor questions. From the Middle District of Penna. which embraces twenty-four congregations, although there were twelve matters laid before the meeting, there will be nothing to detain the Annual Meeting. If the Districts generally have discharged their full duty, there will certainly be a lesser number of queries than formerly. The Council will thus have more time to bestow upon the weightier matters which may be re ferred to it. We confess that we have thought there was too little time bestowed to the business of our council meetings. We think brethren who are sent there ought to be willing to labor, and tug, and toil, until their business has been finished.

Finally, we hope the brethren and sisters who remain at home, will remember us who go to the Council, and daily send up their petitions in our behalf. Let the success of the meeting be made a matter of special interest during the days of its session, and at the morning and evening worship let mention be made before the Lord of the work in which his people are engaged. And may every word, and every thought, and every desire be that the TRUTH may be sustained, and LOVE and UNION preserved, and so shall the Church of God prosper.

We wish to keep it before our readers that 90 cents will pay for the Companion from No. 21 to the end of the present volume, Jan. 1st, 1870, including the Minutes of the Annual Meeting, and our report of its proceedings.

Cancer Cures.

Our readers are aware that for some time an advertisement has appeared over the names of Peter S. Myers and P. P. Brumbaugh, offering to the afflicted a remedy for that terrible malady called Cancer. No case attended by them has ever come under our notice directly, but we have strong written recommendations before us, from those who profess to know of its good effects. One man especially wished us to publish his testimony, for the benefit of those who might be similarly afflicted.—His address is: D. C. Burkholder, Newburg, Cumberland Co., Pa., and he declares himself willing to testify to those who want to know, free of charge. The remedy which these brethren use has been tested for several years, and is said to be among the best. We believe they are honest enough not to undertake a case unless they think they can give relief, or to take money without endeavoring to give an equivalent. We give this notice for the benefit of those who are afflicted, as Cancer is regarded as a most terrible disease, and many practicing physicians do not pretend to cure it. The address of the above brethren is P. S. Myers, McVeytown, Pa., and P. P. Brumbaugh, Coffee Run, Pa. They do not operate west of Alleghany mountains. Those who want a reply should enclose a stamp to pay return postage.

Answers to Correspondents.

SAMUEL LONG. Unity, Iowa. You have 24 cents credit on last year. You send 1.50 in payment of past indebtness. Hence, you are entitled to 8 Nos. of present Vol. We send Nos. 16 and 24 inclusive. 80 cents will pay your subscription to the end of the present year.

Elisha Henricks, Cerro Gorda, Ills. The money you sent pays to the end of this year.

Jacob Zuck, Millersville, Pa. The letter which you say was dated April 2nd has made its appearance through the mail today, 27th. Strange delay! Your letter of inquiry dated 19th was answered, and rightly too, that we knew nothing of the letter referred to. But all is right now.

Postage unpaid.— The postmaster at Defiance, Ohio, notifies us that our paper addressed to John Hoff and John Miller at that office, remains in the office, the postage being unpaid. Why is this?

Michael Forney, Parkersburg, Ills. Your letter was received, but contained no money, according to our looks. The paper has been sent regularly since. We cannot tell why the brother fails to get the paper?

Book Notices.

THE SONG CROWNED KING. Ruebush & Kieffer, Singer's Glen, Va, Publishers 60 cents; per dozen, 6$. To teachers, 50 cents.

The Publishers have our thanks for a copy of this little work. We have sung it through and have found tunes both new and old. Among our old favorites we find "Home again," "Varina" "Complainer," "Salvation," and many others. Among the new pieces that have attracted our notice are 'O" come angel, Band," and the world of light." There are really some beautiful melodies in their pieces. All the music is set in character notes, which are all the notes we can sing, and we think all that any body ought to sing.

THE PRINTER, a sixteen page monthly, devoted to the interests of the "Art Preservative of all Arts," has again made its appearance. John Greason, Publisher, 75 Gold St., New York. $1.50 per annum. It is a fit representative of the craft, and every printer will be pleased with it, and others may be interested and amused.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Holsinger.—A few lines from the Far west may not come amiss to your readers.

In a temporal view we have nothing to complain of. The winter was a fine one. The farmers have their spring wheat sowed, and have a fine prospect of a plentiful season. We have a healthy climate. There is but little sickness with us. Have plenty of good prairie lands and farms surrounding us, which are of good quality, and can be had for from 5 to 25 dollars per acre. And if I can offer any inducement to a ministering brother who is not able to pay for a farm, and will come and preach the gospel in its purity for us, I will offer as a free gift, to such the use and full privilege of 80 acres of good prairie, and 40 acres of timber, for 6 or 8 years, for the improvements put thereon. We, as a branch of the Church, will assist in improving said land; also, assist in cultivating or laboring for the minister when absent from home, preaching the gospel to saint and sinner. Laboring hands are plenty, but preachers of the true gospel are few.

We think it would be wise in us who have of this world's goods and to spare, that we have that charitable feeling about us which would cause us to give 5 or 25 dollars of our thousands, as a gift, to those ministers that can and will travel and preach to many of our own children who have but a little knowledge of the Brethren, and never saw a communion meeting held. What is money in a state of affairs like this?

We trust some good, able preacher will think of our condition, come to us, and organize a church, which will flourish, increase and spread over this western country.

A Request.

We do hope that our present Annual Meeting will do something to bring about a union of sentiment, in regard to our Hymn Books. For here in the Miami Valley Ohio, some of the Elders forbid us using the new Hymn Book, because it is a new thing; and at the same time will buy new buggies and new harness, and very fine at that.

After the A. M. has authorized brother Quinter to publish them, and then accepted them, why is it some are so self-willed as to oppose their use? when really it is the only Hymn Book that has ever been published by the authority of the Church. The book published by Elder Kurtz, and the old edition before that, were never authorized by the Church; but were gotten up by individuals. Now would it not be better to have A. M. stop the publication of any other Hymn Book, except the last, which is now published and should be in the hands of every member in the Brotherhood?

Now dear brethren in Annual Council, we hope you will do something in this direction, or at least give us protection who wish to use them, as we have examined them, and do know the new hymn book to be the best of all, and worthy of adoption: and moreover, as brother Quinter has been at a heavy expense in getting it up, it is no more than right and Christian-like, to sustain him in buying the book. Do something in this direction, Dear brethren.

P. R. WRIGHTSMAN.

Dayton, Ohio.

Brother Jesse Schofield, Hillard, Ohio, gives us the particulars of an imposition praticed upon him by a man calling himself James G. Divine from Highland Co, Ohio, which might have done him much injury had he not been well known in the neighborhood. Divine claimed to be a brother and is very sanctimonious. He is about 5 feet 5 inches high, has blue eyes, grey hair, which he wears very short. He is of good address, and is very inquisitive. Look out for him, and all other imposters. "Beware of false prophets, who come to you in sheeps clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves."

Brother Henry; We have now been living in Harrisburg, Pa, about two months, and are enjoying reasonable health, except our little daughter, who is as she was a year ago. [It is afflicted with Paralysis.—Ed] She does not appear to be getting better or worse. Members living in the vicinity of the city would confer a great favor by calling on us, and making acquaintance, that we may learn where and when the Brethren's meetings are held.—I am employed at John B. Cox's Saw Mill now owned by the Harrisburg Car co.

Our love to all.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Shanon, Carroll Co. Ills., April 2d friend JOHN LUTZ, aged 35 years 6 months and 17 days.

He emigrated from Altoona, Pa last Fall, had poor health all winter, and, like many others, seemingly neglected the one thing needful till the last few weeks of his life, when he made solemn vows, that if the Lord would spare him he would serve him; but died without getting his desire fully accomplished. May it be a warning to others. He leaves a widow and seven children to mourn their loss. Funeral services by the brethren from Job 14: 1—5.

O. LONG.

In Walnut Creek district, Johnson Co., Mo., April 24th, of Consumption, our beloved brother, JOHN C. STONER, aged 34 years, 11 months, and 5 days. He left a wife and 5 small children to mourn their loss. Funeral services by brother A. Hutchison, and the writer, from 1 Peter 1: 24.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements ; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The Lord's Prayer.

If any be distressed, and fain would gather
Some comfort, let him haste unto
Our Father,
For we of hope and help are quite bereaven
Except thou succor us
Who art in Heaven.
Thou showest mercy, therefore for the same
We praise Thee, singing
Hallowed be thy name.
Of all our miseries cast up the sum,
Show us thy joys: and let
Thy kingdom come.
We mortal are, and alter from our birth;
Thou constant art,
Thy will be done on earth.
Thou mak'st the earth, as well as planets seven,
Thy name is blessed here
As 'tis in Heaven.
Nothing we have to use, or debts to pay,
Except Thou give it us;
Give us this day
Wherewith to clothe us, wherewith to be fed,
For without Thee we want
Our daily bread.
We want, but want no faults, for no day passes
But we do sin—
Forgive us our trespasses.
No man from sinning ever free did live,
Forgive us, Lord, our sins
As To forgive
If we repent our faults, thou ne'er disdain'st us;
We pardon them
That trespass against us;
Forgive that is past, a new path tread us;
Direct us always in Thy faith,
And lead us—
We, Thine own people and thy chosen nation,
Into all truth, but
Not into temptation.
Thou that of all good graces art the giver,
Suffer us not to wander,
But deliver
Us from the fierce assaults of world and devil,
And flesh, so shalt Thou free us
From all evil.
To these petitions let both church and laymen,
With one consent of heart and voice, say
Amen.

The Lord respects the Lowly.

"Though the Lord be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly." Psalm 138: 6.

The Holy Scriptures bear repeated testimony to the great fact that the Lord is Creator and Preserver of all created things. "Heaven is my Throne, and the earth is my footstool." So said the Lord by the mouth of the prophet. Is. 66: 1. This expression of the Most High gives our spiritual admiration an idea of his highness.—But our comprehension of his highness is very limited at most. He is our Author; we are his manufacture. He is eternally Divine: we are led captive by "the corruption which is in the world through lust," unless we have been made "partakers of the Divine Nature," and "have purified our souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit." And all who are partaking of this Divine Nature, and are thus purifying their souls, they only can have a proper view of the highness and supremacy of him who rules the Universe; for they obey him, and walk in lowliness of mind before a haughty and gainsaying world. The inspired writer unravelled a mystery for his brethren, fearing they would become wise in their own conceits. Rom. 11: 25. And admonishing his brethren against dissimilarity of mind among themselves, and against esteeming themselves above "men of low estate," he wrote: Be not wise in your own conceits. Conceit uplifts the mind, and causes it to behave itself unseemly. 1 Cor. 13: 5. Self-conceit is an evil which must be banished from abode there. Solomon, the wise man of old, gives his views in plain terms of the man who is wise in his own conceits. Prov. 26: 5, 12, 16. A self-conceited person is neither agreeable nor reasonable. And the very dignity of Jehovah would not permit him to have respect unto such an one; but "though the Lord be high, yet he hath respect unto the lowly."

The Psalmist appreciated the highness of the God of Israel, and no less did he appreciate his Lord's respect for the lowly. He well knew that the Lord is independent of all his creatures, and yet mindful of them: he knew that such is the favor which God bears to the humble, that he never forgets their cry. Ps. 9: 12. Now it is evident that the humble referred to by the Psalm-writer, are not such as are humble because of necessity of temporal circumstances, but humble for other and higher reasons. The humble alluded to are such as believe in God, forsake the way of transgression, obey God's commandments, and feel continually the duty of being humble and lowly in their profession of righteousness. Moreover, they are such as cry or call unto the Lord in the day of trouble.—

Hence, they are acquainted with the best Source of help, and know the place of sure refuge.

"The Lord is high"—man is low. O the distance! But the Lord hath respect unto the lowly. Blessed thought, blessed truth! How "our hearts burn within us!" when we realize the meaning of this precept: "Draw nigh to God and he will draw nigh to you." James 4: 8. David knew where he was when he prayed: "Draw nigh unto my soul." What a pity that it ever became necessary to expel the dresser of the Garden of gardens! But the temptation was presented, the tempted yielded, the law was infracted, and our ancestors expelled from the Divine Presence. But now, thanks be unto God, a Fountain is opened in which we may wash and be clean; a Way is prepared by which we may return and forever enjoy a bliss and beatitude far superior to Eden in all its splendor and glory. I trust that you, my brother, have washed in that Fountain, and that you are striving and studying daily to keep yourself "unspotted," looking forward in full assurance of that blessedness prepared for the holy, as it is written: "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see [illegible], that you are in the Way, and count all but loss for the excellency of the crown of righteousness which is laid up for the faithful, self-denying followers of him who has called us out from among the world unto virtue, and purity, and humility.

The Children of Light.

"Ye are all the Children of Light, and the children of day: we are not of night nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober." 1 Thess 5: 5, 6.

Can we, the professed followers of Christ, claim to be the characters here alluded to? Do we show, in our lives, that we are the children of the day and not of the night.

These are questions which concern our standing in the sight of that Being in whom is no darkness at all. 1 John 1: 5. If we are the children of light, we are the children of God.—The children of light "walk in the light."—But I am very fearful that we are often found walking in darkness. And if we walk in darkness, there may be darkness in us. Among the many sayings uttered by our blessed Savior when here among men, was one which touches this point very appropriately: "If therefore the light that is in thee, be darkness, how great is that darkness!" Oh, how careful we should be to know that the light that is in us, is not darkness! We have abundant evidence given us in the language of the apostles, by which we can know if we are in the light.

Then let us be very careful to see and to know by the strictest and most rigid self-examination according to the rules laid down in the word of unerring Truth, if we are the children of light.

What would be the condition of some who claim to be the children of light, if the great judgment day were suddenly to come upon us? Doubtless many would be taken unawares, not looking for it. May God be gracious and merciful unto us all.

How To Grow Beautiful.

Persons may outgrow disease, and become healthy by proper attention to the laws of their physical constitution. By moderate and daily exercise, men may become active and strong in limb and muscle. But to [illegible] and pales the roses on beauty's cheeks, while crowsfeet, and furrows, and wrinkles, and lost teeth, and gray hair, and bald head, and tottering limbs, and limping, most sadly mar the human form divine. But, dim as the eye is pallid and sunken as may be the face of beauty, and frail and feeble that once strong, erect, and manly body, the immortal soul, just fledging its wings for its home in heaven, may look out through those faded windows as beautiful as the dew-drop of a summer's morning, as melting as the tears that glisten in affection's eye—by growing kindly, cultivating sympathy with all human kind, by cherishing forbearance toward the follies and foibles of our race, and feeding, day by day, in that love to God and man which lifts us from the brute, and makes us akin to angels.

Item.

"A man there was, though some did count him mad,
The more he gave away, the more he had."

Many have learned of the Lord to be kind, and have found by experience that they have gained thereby.—"There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. There is that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing; there is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches." Prov. 11: 24; 13: 7.

He who bestows of his goods upon the poor,
Shall have as much again, and ten times more.

Prayer and Social Meetings.

I suppose that we all love social meetings, or at least should love them; but perhaps do not see alike what would constitute a social meeting. In one sense of the word our meetings should all be social meetings. But the social meeting alluded to, seems to be something a little different. I suppose that prayer-meeting is nearer what is meant, or prayer and speaking meetings.

A very common plea is rendered that it learns brethren and sisters how to pray, so that they can pray in church, around sick-beds, etc. Well this is good to know how to pray at any place, but the next question is, How shall we learn it? The disciples at one time, when our Savior ceased praying, asked him to teach them to pray, as John also taught his disciples. Luke 11: 1. Here he granted their request and became their teacher, and gives them a lesson: "Our Father which art in heaven. Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done," &c

Now in the next place they would want to know where they might recite their lesson. We turn to Matthew 6: 6. Here he says to his disciples, "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet; and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."

Then it appears that the closet is a school-house for the children of God to learn to pray.

Now we will notice the nature of a closet. It is erected in a house. The house is nicely furnished, and furnished with its carpets. The closet is a [illegible] room meanly furnished. The woman of the house, while showing her friends her beautiful house and furniture, she passes by the closet door. She says, "This is nothing but a closet." So passes by; showing the balance of her rooms, not once thinking that it was the room which the Master had selected for his students to recite their prayer lessons. Yet I think any secret place as secret as a closet would answer the purpose. But this does not answer the purpose for social meetings; so I will give my views on that question.

Where brethren are so situated that they can't get to meeting as often as once in a week, it would be a good thing to meet together as convenient as possible. If there are but a few, the Savior said, where there are two or three are met in his name, he will be in their midst; but a good thing may be abused or misused. The next thing then is, how shall this social meeting be conducted? Let some brother or sister who has learned in the closet to pray, read a chapter, and all sing a hymn, and exhort to prayer, if they feel so to do. Also extend the liberty, but keep within the bounds of reason, and in order.—Fast business is not always the safest. Prayer and speaking meeting have a tendency to run fast, but remember the two messengers that ran to carry the news to king David: the one that ran the fastest had no tidings, and therefore lost all his labor; so the slowest gained it.

But says one, where is the danger in prayer-meetings and speaking meetings?

We have said, our Savior taught his disciples to pray in the closet, but amongst some denominations, prayer books are used as lessons.

But, says one, there is no danger of the Brethren doing so. This only remains for the future to decide. A certain amount of spiritual stimulation is very necessary indeed. The christian cannot do without it; but when there is too much the animal life quickens and it becomes like that we read of in the Bible where it was said to a certain people: "You kindle your own fires; you warm by the sparks thereof; this shall you have from my hand: you shall lie down in sorrow."

In order to enjoy a christian life, the head should be kept cool and calm, and the heart warm. Christ's institutions will always do that if strictly lived up to.

—:o:—

IMAGINATION.—One of the ruling, noxious weeds that too often in their far spreading wilderness, absorb the healthy sap of the mind is imagination, a brilliant gift of nature, when controlled and cultivated, but full of deadly poison to the soul if indulged in an untrained course of operation. It spreads or incites, depresses or elevates to that extent, that, like the power of steam applied to machinery, it may accomplish the most beautiful works, or destroy the best arranged expectations. Imagination is mischievous when it creates in the mind a diffidence of ability for success, while another, disdaining such coy modesty, though endued with less intrinsic worth, steps forward and wins with confidence the prize which the other desired, but feared to run for.

A proper quantity of assurance is absolutely necessary to secure success in most of the pursuits of active life; and for want of that animal auxiliary, many minds of first rate intellect have been, and are deterred proceeding in their schemes. How exquisite, therefore, is it to prune the redundant branches of the arbor vitæ, and trained them by discipline, learning and experience, steadily to grow up both useful and ornamental trees in the garden of life.

—:o:—

The Christian life.

Christian life is not only a principle, but a growth, and the young Christian needs to be led along the upward path. If he begins right, he is most likely, by God's grace to keep right. If he is taught to make a complete consecration—to follow principles, and not impulses—he is most likely to be steadfast and immovable. If he is warned now against fashion and worldliness and greed, he is less likely to fall into the snares of the tempter. In a word, now at the start is the time to commence a life which shall grow and abound in all that is necessary for the honor, the usefulness, and the safety of the Christian course; and it may be depended upon that, in most cases, that course will be at the end very much as it is now begun.

—:o:—

Actions are immortal; and our deeds now, and their deserving hereafter must be twin companions that shall walk eternity hand in hand.

Conformity.

Dear brethren and sisters: Perhaps it would not be amiss to say a few words on the subject of Conformity. Perhaps you may wonder what is meant by the word "Conformity." We will try to explain what we understand by it. We understand that the Church has established an order, by which order the brethren and sisters should be known; and not only so, but that they may not be like the world in personal appearance. The Savior says, "Be ye separate from the world." We are aware that there are some brethren that contend that Religion is not in the cut of a coat, &c. We will admit this; but let us look at Church order now.

We understand that this order consists in the old brethren or Bishops giving advice from the best of their judgment, as to the mode of the Brethren's clothing; which advice, by being renewed from time to time, has become an established order.

Now brethren, if this order is not wrong, it is right; and if right, it has received the approbation of God in heaven. The Savior said to Peter, "Whatsoever thou shalt bind on Earth, shall be bound in Heaven." Hence how often have we heard the brethren exhort us to conform to the order of the brethren, to be steadfast in the faith, &c. Then if we do not heed their admonition, are we not disobedient? Why do we expel members from the Body; is it not for disobedience? The Savior does not require any more of one brother, or sister, than he does of another. "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed, by the renewing of your minds, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."

We read of but one way to heaven, and that is a narrow way, "and few there be that find it." In our temporal affairs, we have sometimes more than one way to go to a certain place. But in traveling toward eternal happiness, we all have but the one and narrow way. Then does it not seem strange that so many will have their own way for it, contending that a straight coat is just as good as any other, and that there is no harm in the sisters wearing little hoops, or costly array. We could readily agree with them, if these things were not highly esteemed among men, and hence, "an abomination in the sight of God."

It would appear to us, that as long as we do not conform to the Church order, so long we have not renewed our minds. Hence are not able to prove, "what is that good, that acceptable, and perfect will of God," neither "have we set to our seal that God is true."

In reality, we think that we should all conform to the order of the Gospel, in every respect. Not only in dress, but in our daily walk and conversation, that we may be "as a city set upon a hill, that cannot be hid."

We that have named the name of Christ, have promised to live faithful until death, as much as the Lord would enable us. Then hear the above quotation of Paul, to his Roman brethren. Also,(the 16th verse) "Be of the same mind one toward another. Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate.—Be not wise in your own conceits."

Christ, the Liberator.

"If the Son, therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

There are two kinds of freedom. It is not impossible therefore for people to imagine themselves free, and be quite content with the amount of freedom which they actually possess, while in fact they continue in a kind of bondage. As in the conversation between Christand the Jews, they sharply resented any insinuation that they were not free. They looked with pride and complacency back along the genealogical line to father Abraham, and stoutly insisted upon it that they "were never in bondage to any man," and yet, where was their liberty? Sociably, how much of bigotry and caste fettered them? Personally, what slaves to arrogance, to passion and habit, conceited and ignorant, priding themselves upon certain ideas and forms of freedom. They failed to perceive the bondage in which they actually were. Hence Jesus said to them, "if the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." In other words, he taught them plainly enough that the way to secure the real, the genuine freedom was to accept both his teachings and himself, and this declaration contains the vital truth for all people and centuries.

Let us not forget, then, that freedom is both internal and external. That which may be called external freedom includes what is usually divided into personal, civil, religious. The liberty of the individual to possess himself, to develop his powers according to their inherent laws, to secure for himself the best attainable position in society, to enjoy the exercise of his rights and privileges to the limits of similar rights and privileges belonging to his neighbors—such is this exterior freedom, and it is not to be despised. Its value cannot well be overestimated.—But no matter how desirable this freedom may be in the estimation of mankind, it is only the shell, the husk, the outside of liberty. It stands as the scaffolding which serves in the erection of the edifice itself.

No one supposes that the air-soil and the sunlight exist for themselves. It is understood that they exist for the service and benefit of something higher than they in the scale of creation. Neither do the feet and the hands, the eyes and the mouth of the human body, exist for themselves, but for the use and advantage of the body. And what is the body itself for, but the convenience and necessities of that higher existence, the human soul! So this freedom, this personal, civil, and religious liberty, cannot be considered as the highest and the ultimate. There is something beyond all this; something for which this is but a precursor, as John the Baptist, to prepare the way for the Lord; and this something, which is so much higher and better, is soul liberty. And it is proper, and very necessary indeed, that we should have a more deepened regard for this kind of liberty.

Suppose a prisoner, having his hands and feet bound with chains, is thrust into his cell, and the inmost door is locked; the ward door is bolted and barred; the outer gates are securely fastened. Now let some one undertake to liberate this prisoner, and carry on his endeavor successfully, so far as to force on entry through all gates and doors to the very dungeon itself, and there pause. Stopping at that point leaves the man in bondage. No matter what else may have been done, the unhappy prisoner is chained; and open doors and demolished outside gates cannot give him liberty. When the angel liberated Peter from the prison of Herod, he entered the dungeon and smote the Apostle on the side and raised him up; then "the chains fell off from his hands," and unshackled he followed his shining guide through door and open gate into the street. But such liberation as comes from unlocked doors, and unbarred gates, while the hands and feet are fast in fetters, is the exterior freedom alone. It is scarcely more than the liberty to be free when the real freedom comes.

The proposition will hardly be disputed, I think, that the manifold forms of sin all tend to bondage. Jesus answered the Jews with these words: "Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin:" and in the sixth chapter of Romans this point is quite closely discussed, and where it is argued strongly that Christians have been emancipated from the thralldom of sin, and have become the servants of righteousness. We accept the proposition, then, that all service of sin is slavery, and the very worst kind of slavery. What are we to understand by genuine slavery! True liberty, then, we say, consists in being good and doing right. Or in other words, fearing God and working righteousness. And there is no liberty, for being constituted as we are, aside from this.

But here the question may be asked, what are we to do to work righteousness? This can be explained in few words. We read that Zachariah and Elizabeth were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless. This then we can, with good authority, call working righteousness. So long, then, as we obey this fundamental law of righteousness, we are free; or, as Jesus said to the Jews, "if ye continue in my word, ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." But on the contrary, he who will do wrong, puts himself thereby into bondage. The wrong-doer is always and inevitably a slave in God's universe. Then, too, as a second particular, the evil-doer serves a power, for sin is certainly to be considered a power, that will inevitably damage him. Multitudes practically disbelieve this. They go to iniquity as bees go to flowers for the sweetness they are seeking. But that which may have the flavor of honey to the depraved taste on the tongue, will turn to gall in the throat. It may plant blooming gardens all about its dungeon; may grade and pave the path to its gins and pits; but, nevertheless, it is a power for harm.

Look at what it does. It robs its victims of goodness. Would you know how much this treasure of the soul is worth? Ask the redeemed in glory, or the angels who have kept their first estate, or what is best of all, let him who is Infinite Holiness tell you what its real value is. It takes away the conscience; and what worth having remaind for us when this is once actually gone? And besides all this the very habit of wrong doing is the forging of chains for the soul. Who needs to be told of the power of habit, of its tenacity, its ever increasing strength? Where will you find a taskmaster more exacting and inexorable than habit? Servants have been known to run away from their masters and so end their bondage; but who can run away from his habits? They are a part of himself. Flight is of no avail in such a desperate case as this. The tyrant must be vanquished and destroyed, or he will inevitably continue to tyrannize over his slave. In view of these facts, then, what is to be done? The only thing is contained in these grand words of Jesus to the Jews: "If the Son shall make you free ye shall be free indeed." In other words, there is no attainment of real consummate freedom except in and through Jesus, the Savior of [illegible] will not receive him in his own appointed way, he is the appointed Deliverer to break all fetters. He was sent to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound. What he confers upon those who have taken him upon their living faith, is "the glorious liberty of the children of God." The Gospel of the Son of God has always been, and to-day still is, the trumpet of freedom in the world, and his followers are the grand army of freedom. In every sense Jesus Christ is the door of liberty, and there is no other. It is Christ, and him alone, who emancipates the soul from its slavery to sin. But we must give ourselves into the Liberator's hands, and obey his commands. We must not look for something more mighty and powerful as Naaman did, and turn away in a rage; but just do what he has told you to do, and that all through faith in the Son of God, and your's will be the ripest fruit on the tree of liberty.

But here some may reply, this is too simple. Yes doubtless Christ is "unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called both Jew and Greek, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God." But here is the truth for all: "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." So let us bring every thought and imagination into subjection to the will of him who is the light of life, till we all come "into the glorious liberty of the children of God." And though we see not yet nor comprehend what is the glory of that ultimate state of freedom in Christ, may God lead us onward and upward, as he lifts the Sun through the heavens, till we all shall be with our Savior, our Divine Deliverer from all bondage, in the mid-day fullness of light and life, of everlasting liberty and joy.

The Power of the Gospel.

Who that looks at the sad condition of our world, in its moral relations, as once it existed, but is impressed with the thought that a mighty power must be called into action, in order to accomplish any measure that would tend effectually to elevate our race.

There is in the unconverted world, not only a deep moral pollution; buta determined aversion to that which seeks the overthrow of sin and the salvation of the soul.

In the first promulgation of the Gospel it was laughed at because of its imputed ignorance, by the Greeks, and spurned by the Jews because of its supposed imbecility. But God had placed the interests of our race in the hands of this Gospel; it being the only power to which they might be submitted with any degree of safety. The benevolent designs of God sought the moral rescue of mankind. And this must be effected by an instrument that would reach the heart by an appeal to the judgment.

But alas! how soon the world with its combined power, arrayed itself against the hand that sought its true elevation. In this there was much of pride, selfishness and Satan. The social and national expectations of the Jews were not fulfilled in the person of Christ. The learning and philosophy of Grecia were not received or taught by Him; disregarded and opposed their own salvation. And while the Gospel refused a treaty with any one of the many systems of Grecian philosophy, it never bowed at the shrine of any regal government, asking its assistance; nor did it ask admission into any Roman Pantheon, where it might enshrine its God. No, but it boldly announced itself to be the promulgator of the true, and the only true religion. With a few illiterate fisherman, mainly, as heralds; a poor, weak, hated few as its votaries and supporters, it proclaimed its purpose to conquer the world, and put all things under its feet. Then came the powers of darkness against it. The open contest began.

In the heat of the battle it triumphed, and steadily it prevailed. Ah! it was the power of God unto salvation. The enemies in their turn still maintain their resistance to its progress, but their plans are thwarted, their arms palsied. They are dying. Judah with her throne is cast down. The harp of her majesty and joy is in eternal silence. Her sons and daughters are long since scattered the only landless, cityless, homeless race under the whole heavens.

The laurals of Athens have mingled with the dust; and the immortals of Grecia are no more. Now the voice of their fame is but the faint echo of the long gone by. But the Gospel still lives. From continents, from the islands of the sea, from mountains, valleys, cities and hamlets, the voice of the Gospel speaks, "I live and prosper here." The progress and triumph of the kingdom of Christ, has thus far been witnessed to such an extent that none dare doubt its divine adequacy to the accomplishment of its proposed destiny.

Is not already the sword green? Have not the clouds of the night withdrawn, and the dews of the morning disappeared? Does not now this moral sun shine in the heavens with translured brightness and glory? Shall not the deserts rejoice and the wilderness be glad? Will not God's white robed saints yet wander as far as the foot of sin hath trod? Yes! the Gospel is now in its youth and vigor! Its enemies must submit, or meet their fate in the arms of everlasting death!

To them that are called, both Jew and Greek, the Gospel is the power of God and the wisdom of God.

Emblems of Heaven.

If emblems can assist you then join in your imagination the emblems of heaven. That is the condition of the people? That of crowned kings. What is the enjoyment? That of conquerors triumphant, with palms of victory in their hands. What their haunts? The green pastures beside living waters. What their employment? Losing their spirits in the ecstasies of melody, making music on their harps to God and the Lamb forever. For guidance? The Lamb that is in the midst of them shall lead them by rivers of living water, and wipe away all tears from their eyes. For knowledge? They shall be like unto God; for they shall know even as they are known. For vision and understanding? They shall see face to face, needing do intervention of language or of sign. For ordinances? There is no temple in the city of their habitation; for the Lord God and the Lamb are the temple thereof. There shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign for ever and ever.

The very sense hath its gratifications in the city of God. The building of the wall is of Jasper; the city, of pure gold, like unto clear glass; the foundation of the wall garnished with all manner of precious stones; every one of the twelve gates a pearl.

Oh! what means this wealth of imagery drawn from every storehouse of Nature, if it be not the choicest of all which the eye beholds, or the intellect is ravished with; that all which makes matter beautiful and the spirit happy; that all which wealth values itself on, and beauty delights itself in; with all the scenery which charms the taste, and all the employments which can engage the affections,—every thing, in short,—shall lead itsinfluence toconsummate the felicity of the saints in light?

Oh! what untried form of happy being, what cycles of revolving bliss, await the just! Conception cannot reach it, nor experience present materials for the picture of its similitude; and though thus figured out by the choicest of emblems, they do no more represent it than the name of Shepherd does the guardianship of Christ, or the name of Father the love of Almighty God.

Punctuality.

It is strange how many people there are who neglect punctuality. It is not only a serious vice in itself, but it is in the fruitful parent of numerous other vices, so that he who becomes the victim of it gets involved in toils from which it is almost impossible to escape. It makes the merchant wasteful of time; it saps the business reputation of the lawyer, and it injures the prospect of the mechanic, who might otherwise rise to fortune; in a word, there is not a profession, nor a station in life, which is not liable to the canker of the destructive habit. Many and many a time has the failure of one man to meet his obligations brought on the of others. Thousands remain poor all their lives, who, if they were more faithful in their word, would secure a large run of custom, and so make their fortunes. Be punctual, if you wish to succeed.

None can stay his Hand.

As you stood some stormy day upon a sea cliff, and marked the giant billow rise from the deep to rush on with foaming crest and throw itself thundering on the trembling shore, did you ever fancy that you could stay its course, and hurl it back to the depth of ocean? Did you ever stand beneath the laden, lowering cloud, and mark the lightning's leap, as it shot and flashed, dazzling athwart the gloom, and think that you could grasp the bolt and change its path? Still more foolish and vain his thought who fancies he can arrest or turn aside the purpose of God saying, "What is the Almighty that we should serve him? Let us break his bands asunder, and cast away his cords from us." Break his bands asunder! How he that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh.—Guthrie.

Close Communion.

BY EMMANUEL UMBAUGH.

The members of the Church of Christ are often accused of selfishness because they do not invite members of other denominations to attend with them to the ordinances of the house of the Lord, in partaking of the Lord's Supper, &c.—When they are informed that that which is not of faith is sin, they sometimes say that they have faith in those ordinances. For the benefit of this class of individuals we would say that those who have faith it the rites of Christ's Church and make that faith known by repentance and baptism, in accordance with the order of that revelation which emanated from Heaven, will not be hindered from partaking with the people of God of the Lord's Supper and the holy communion. Saul of Tarsus as soon as his eyes were opened was enabled to see the beauty and virtues of the doctrine of Christ, hence was immediately baptized and entered into fellowship with the brethren. Here we have a glorious example, both for those who make no profession at all, and those who belong to organizations which contend against the ordinances which are observed by the people of the living God, and have been commanded by Christ and his apostles. Come, then, ye who accuse the followers of Christ of selfishness. Come, arise and be baptized in accordance with the mandates of Heaven, and walk in all the ordinances of the Lord, remembering that whosoever keepeth the whole law and yet offendeth in one point is guilty of all. For he that said "This do in remembrance of me," said also, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Now if thou partake of his body and blood, yet if thou art not baptized, thou art become a transgressor of the law (of Christ). We do not design by the above sayings to hold forth the idea that baptism and the holy sacrament are the only essentials to salvation any more than James, that old servant of Christ, meant that to be free from murder and fornication are alone sufficient to save us; but we simply wish to convey to the mind the idea that every portion of the law of Christ is of importance, and a man is no nearer God's approbation when he willingly violates one command than when he violates all. Christ's will was not left in the world for each denomination to select therefrom such portions, by which to be governed, as will suit their own peculiar notions. It will not do for us only to believe that there is one God, "for the devils also believe and tremble." Let no one, therefore, ever think of participating in any christian duty without being willing to obey in all things: for by such conduct tradition is implanted in the minds of the people. We hope we have said enough upon this subject to enable the unprejudiced, at least, to see that this kind of charity on the part of the church would have a tendency to injure the cause of Christ without benefit to any one. May the time soon come when every organization will accept the Bible as the only rule of faith and practice, Christ's kingdom become universal and the will of God be done on earth as it is done in Heaven. What a glorious brotherhood this will be!

Work.

It is in achievement that work throws off all its repulsive features, and assumes the form and functions of an angel. Before her, like a dissolving scene, the forest fades, with its wild beasts and wild men, and under her hand smiling villages rise among the hills and on the plains, and yellow harvests spread the fields with gold. The city with its docks and warehouses, and churches and palaces, springs at her bidding into being. The trackless ocean mirrors her tireless pinions as she ransacks the climes for the food of commerce, or flames with the torches of her steam-sped messengers. She binds states and marts and capitals together with bars of iron, that thunder with the ceaseless rush of life and trade. She pictures all scenes of beauty on canvas, and carves all forms of excellence in marble. Into huge libraries she pours the wealth of countless precious lives. She erects beautiful and convenient homes for men and women to dwell in, and weaves the fibres which nature prepares into fabrics for their covering and comfort. She rears great civilizations that run like mountain-ranges through the level centuries, their summits sleeping among the clouds, or still flaming with the fire that fills them, or looming grandly in the purple haze of history. Nature furnishes material and work fashions it. By the hand of art, work selects, and moulds, and modifies, and recombines that which it finds, and gives utterance and being to those compositions of matter and of thought which build for man a new world, with special adaptation to his desire, tastes and necessities. Man's record upon this wild world is the record of work, and of work alone.

Work explores the secrets of the universe, and brings back those contributions which make up the sum of human knowledge. It counts the ribs of the mountains and feels the pulses of the sea, and traces the footpaths of the stars, and calls the animals of the forest and the birds of the air and the flowers of the field by name. It summons horses of fire and chariots of fire from heaven, and makes them the bearers of its thought. It plunders the tombs of dead nationalities, and weaves living histories from the shreds it finds. It seeks out and sets in order the secrets of the soil, and divides to every plant its food. It builds and binds into unity great philosophies, along which run the life and thought of ages. It embalms the life of nations in literatures, in whose crypts are scatterbed seeds of thought that only need the light to spread into harvests of bread for living generations.

How wonderful a being is man, when viewed in the light of his achievements! It is in the record of these that we find the evidence of his power and the credentials of his glory. Into the results of work each generation pours its life; and as these results grow in excellence, with broader forms and richer tints and nobler meanings, they become the indexes of the world's progress. We estimate the life of a generation by what it does; and the results of its work stand out in advance of its successor, to show it what it can do, and to show it what it must do, to reach a finer consummation.—Thus the results of work become the most powerful stimulus of the worker. They inspire emulation; they instruct in mode and style: they feed perennially the springs of ambition.—Golden Sheaves.

Heaven the Result of the Redemption.

Our highest conceptions of the felicity and glory of heaven and derived from redemption. Collect all the beautiful imagery of Scripture on this subject. Think of the celestial paradise in perennial beauty, freshness and bloom. Think of the crowns and thrones of glory, and of the palms and victory. Think of the city whose walls are jasper, whose gates are pearls, whose streets are gold, and whose lights are the glory of God! Think of the inhabitants of heaven, the cherubim and seraphim; the thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers; the patriarchs, prophets and apostles; the noble army of martyrs; the great multitude which no man can number, who have been saved out of every nation, and kindred and tongue. Think of the music of heaven; the harpers with their harps, and the "millions of blessed voices uttering joy;" in sounds of sweetness and power surpassing all that ear has ever heard.—Yet your deepest impressions of the happiness of that place are derived from the consideration that it is a happiness merited by the blood of Christ, and bestowed upon redeemed spirits. In heaven itself the great object of holy and grateful attraction is the Lord Jesus, who appears in the midst of the throne, as it were a lamb that had been slain. "Sirs, we would see Jesus!" said the Greeks to Philip at one of the Jewish festivals; but with higher hopes than those strangers ever cherished, the believer dies and rises to enjoy through eternity the presence and vision of the glorified Lord.

The Good Old Gospel Ship.

Dear brethren and sisters; Consider well before you leave the well tried gospel ship. We learn through the Companion, and by observation around us, that a good many of our brethren are engaged in finding fault with the old ship, that has stood the storm for upwards of eighteen centuries. You are aware, that the adversary uses his influence in bringing about a separation among brethren. You should examine yourselves and see whether your motives are pure, or whether it is because you can't have your own way in church council, and be at the "head of the table." You will please look at the Jewish nation; those among them, who were not wise in their own conceits, received the Savior when he came. To them gave he power to become the sons of God. They did not secede from their brethren. I feel to say to my brethren who are still satisfied with the old ship, to continue to contend earnestly for the faith, once delivered to the saints, and do not be surprised at those who are about to secede and set up for themselves. We read in the Acts 20: 30. "Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." In conclusion I would say, let us consider our latter end. My love be with you all in Christ Jesus. Amen.

The Character of Jesus.

The world is just beginning to appreciate the character of Jesus. It is wonderful that the four unlettered men who wrote the gospel could in a few brief touches, give us a character such as poetry never attempted and fiction never attained. A few brief incidents have placed before us a life that has been the wonder of the world ever since. Believers and infidels have joined, in its praise. Rousseau could turn from his infidelity to wonder at the character of Jesus. Theodore Parker, while denying the claims of Christ, brought all his wonderful powers of language to the task of weaving a panegyric to his character. There is no parallel to that wonderful life in the whole range of human fiction.

Men will never grow weary of looking at His character. The more they look the more they will love. We hear about religion growing old and out of date. But the character of Jesus will never be out-grown.—The poetry of Homer delights us to day as really as when the blind poet sang his numbers through the cities of Greece; St. Peter's at Rome awes men now as readily as when Michael Angelo first projected its wonderful proportions. The stars above us will be as bright to night as when they sang together at creation's birth. But when the strains of human poetry and music have grown faint on the ear of distant future, when the monuments of genius have crumbled, when the stars of heaven shall have faded from the night—the character of Jesus will shine out brighter than ever. Time will not dim the lustre of his life nor mar the perfections of His character. That life and that character are crowned with Eternal Truth.

Conversion.

O Faith! thou workest miracles
Upon the hearts of men;
Choosing thy home in those strange hearts,
We know not how or when.

To one thy grave, unearthly truths
A heavenly vision seem:
While to another's eye they are
A superstitious dream.

To one the deepest doctrines look
So naturally true,
That when he learns the lesson first,
He hardly thinks it new.

To other hearts the self-same truths
No light or heat can bring;
They are but puzzling phrases strung,
Like beads upon a string.

O gift of gifts! O Grace of Faith!
My God! how can it be
That thou who hast discerning love,
Shouldst give that gift to me?

There was a place, there was a time,
Whether by night or day,
The spirit came and left that gift,
And went upon his way.

How many hearts thou mightst have had
More innocent than mine!
How many souls more worthy far
Of that sweet touch of thine!

Ah Grace! in unlikeliest hearts
It is thy boast to come,
The glory of thy light to find
In darkest spots a home.

How will they die, how will they die,
How bear the cross of grief,
Who have not yet the light of faith,
The courage of belief?

The crowd of cares the weightiest cross,
See trifles less than light;
Earth looks so little and so low,
Where faith shines full and bright.

O! happy, happy that I am;
If thou canst be, O Faith!
The treasure that thou art in life,
What wilt thou be in death.

Coming Home.

O, brother and sister growing old,
Do you remember yet
That home, in the shade of the rustling trees.
Where once our household met?

Do you know how we used to come from school
Through the summer's pleasant heat,
With the yellow fennel's golden dust
On our tired little feet?

And how sometimes in an idle mood
We loitered by the way,
And stopped on the way to gather flowers,
And in the fields to play!

Till warned by the deepening shadow's fall,
That told of the coming night,
We climbed to the top of the last long hill,
And saw our home in sight!

And, brothers and sisters, older now
Than she whose life is o'er,
Do you think of the mother's loving face
That looked from the open door?

Alas! for the changing scenes of time:
That home in the dust is low;
And that loving smile was hid from us,
In the darkness long ago!

And we come to life's last hill,
From which our weary eyes
Can almost look on that home that shines
Eternal in the skies.

So, brothers and sisters, as we go,
Still let us move as one,
Always together keeping step,
Till the march of life is done.

For that mother, who waited for us here,
Wearing a smile so sweet,
Now waits on the hills of paradise
For her children's feet!

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Scriptural Puzzle.

There is a certain natural production, neither animal, vegetable, nor mineral. It neither roots in the earth, swims in water, or floats in the air; but is commonly found from two to six feet above the surface of the earth. It is neither male nor female, but generally exists between the two. It is often heard and felt, yet has neither length, breadth or substance.—It is often presented close to the eye, yet it is but seldom seen, although we are conscious of its approach.—It forms no shadow, nor leaves any visible impression. It can be called into existence on the shortest notice, but expires almost the same moment it is born. It is spoken of in the Old Testament, and strongly recommended in the New, and answers equally the purpose of treachery and fidelity. What is it? Who will answer? MARY J. KINGERY.

Politeness.

We have always considered politeness a cardinal virtue. A pleasant word, a smile, an act of unostentatious yet genuine kindness, often leaves the heart sunnier than the more studied and formal civilities of social intercourse. Affability is always important in determining what is called "success" in life. No man likes a boor. No man voluntarily subjects himself to the ceaseless irritation of harsh words and frowns. It is the polite man in every vocation in life who is the successful man.

Nor is affability less a christian than a social virtue. Politeness is the golden rule in action. We have no faith in any man's religion who is not also a gentleman. Of course we do not refer to that counterfeit "gentility" that so often passes current in the marts of fashionable society. It is rather to that genuine kindness of heart, that cordial sympathy with the feelings and welfare of others that Paul calls "charity," and which he justly esteems as the greatest of the Christian's virtues. A little incident that we find in an eastern exchange very well illustrates the casual advantages that continually present themselves to the man of genuine politeness:

Within a few years a couple of gentlemen, one of whom was a foreigner, visited the various locomotive workshops of Philadelphia.—They called at the most prominent one first, stated their wishes to look through the establishment, and made some inquiries of a more specific character. They were shown through the premises in a very indifferent manner, and no special pains were taken to give them any information beyond what their own inquiries drew forth. The same results followed their visits to the several large establishments. By some means they were induced to call at one of a third or fourth-rate character. The owner was himself a workman of limited means, but on the application of the strangers his natural urbanity of manner prompted him, not only to show all he had, but enter into a detailed explanation of the working of his establishment, and of the very superior manner in which he could conduct his factory if additional facilities of capital were afforded him. The gentleman left him, not only favorably impressed toward him, but with the feeling that he thoroughly understood his business.

Within a year he was surprised with an invitation to visit St. Petersburgh. The result was, his locomotive establishment was removed there bodily. It was the agent of the Czar who had called on him, in company with an American citizen. He has recently returned, having accumulated a princely fortune and still receives from his Russian workshops about a hundred thousand dollars a year. He invests his money in real estate, and has already laid the foundation for the largest fortune of any private individual, and all are the results of civility to a couple of strangers.

Inward Peace.

There is no joy to them that resist God: if there be joy in the world, it is reserved for a pure conscience; the whole earth is full of tribulation and anguish to those who do not possess it.

How different is the peace of God from that of the world! It calms the passion, preserves the purity of the conscience, is inseparable from righteousness, unites us to God, and strengthens us against temptations. The peace of the soul consists in an absolute resignation to the will of God.

Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things; but one thing is needful." (Luke x. 41.) The pain we suffer from so many occurrences, arises from the fact that we are not entirely abandomed to God in every thing that happens.

Let us put all things, then, into his hands and offer them to him in our hearts, as a sacrifice beforehand. From the moment that you cease to desire any thing according to your own judgment: and begin to will every thing just as God wills it, you will be free from your former tormenting reflections and anxieties about your own concerns; you will no longer have anything to conceal or take care of.

Until then, you will be troubled, vacillating in your views and enjoyments, easily dissatisfied with others and but little satisfied with yourself, and full of reserve and distrust.—Your good intentions, until they become truly humble and simple, will only torment you; your piety however sincere, will be the occasion of more internal reproach than of support or consolation. But if you will bandon your whole heart to God, you will be full of peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.

Alas for you, if you still regard man in the work of God! In our choice of a guide, men must be counted as nothing; the slightest respect for their opinion dries up the stream of grace, and increases our indecision. We suffer and we displease God besides.

How can we refuse to bestow all our love upon God, who first loved us with the tender love of a Father, pitying our frailty, and well knowing the mire from which we have been dragged? When a soul is filled with this love, it enjoys peace of conscience, it is content and happy, it requires neither greatness nor reputation, nor pleasure, nor any of the perishing gifts of time; it desires only the will of God, and watches incessantly in the joyful expectations of its Spouse.—Fenelon.

Pluck.

When clouds overcast the sky, do not give up in despair. Every cloud has a silver lining to it. When in darkness and fear the Poet sang:

"Behind a frowning Providence
He hides a shining face."

Reverses come sometimes, but it will not do to sit down and mourn over our lot. We must look up with hope and take hold of time and improve it. Work, work, and never give up—the victory will come at last. Many a man has gone down for want of pluck. There is nothing like a bold front. A distinguished orator once said, "Cast down, but not discouraged." Though he had been in perils often, on the sea, on the land, among his own countrymen, with false brethren, by robbers and by friends, yet amid it all his faith was unshaken, and rose to a degree of sublimity when he exclaimed "I am ready to be offered."

How grand a man appears when resigned to the circumstances which cluster around him. "Forward," was the cry of Moses on the banks of the sea." Try, try again, and feeling confident of victory, do not yield to despair, and victory will soon come.

"Ye soldiers of the cross,
Rise and put your armor on,
March to the gates of endless joy,
Where Jesus thy great Captain's gone."

—Voice of Truth

Mental Apprehension.

The brain is an organized medium through which the mind receives and imparts knowledge, and is the organ of thought and feeling. The particular function of the brain is to generate thought; and as thought is the natural food of the mind, it follows that according to the adequacy or inadequacy of this etherial nutriment furnished the mind for its nourishment, will be its vigor and growth. Thus we can readily understand how an inferior mind can grasp the thoughts of the giant intellect. The thought once elaborated and presented to the inferior mind through the medium of the perceptive organism, is exactly the same as if it had been the product of its own brain, and is readily taken up and devoured by that mind. Thus, men with large organs of perception, but deficient reflection, readily become good scholars.—They get their ideas by perception alone: they do not reason them out, and they never originate anything new, but always follow in the beaten path.—From "Inequalities of Mind," in Phrenological Journal.

The Oldest Trees in the World.

The cypress of Somma in Lombardy, Italy is perhaps the eldest tree on record. It was known to be in existence in the time of Julius Cæsar, 42 years before Christ, and is therefore, more than 1,900 years old. It is 106 feet in circumference at one foot from the ground. Napoleon, when lying down the plan for his great road over the Simplon, a post in one of the Alps, diverged from a straight line to avoid injuring this tree. The honor of superior antiquity, however is claimed by some in behalf of the immense and venerable tree in Calaveras county, California, which is supposed from the concentric circles in the trunk to be 2,665 years old.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT

Selected by Samuel Murray.

Mary, a Praying Servant Girl.

A number of ministers were assembled for the discussion of difficult questions, and among others it was asked how the command to "pray without ceasing," could be complied with. Various suppositions were stated and at length one of the number was appointed to write an essay upon it to read at the next monthly meeting; which being overheard by the female servant, she exclaimed, "What, a whole month wanted to tell the meaning of the text; it is one of the easiest and best texts in the Bible.

Well, well, Mary," said an old minister; "what can you say about it? Let us know how you understand it. Can you pray all the time?"

"O yes sir."

"What, when you have so many things to do!"

"Why sir, the more I have to do, the more I can pray."

"Indeed; well Mary, do let us know how it is, for most people think otherwise."

"Well, sir," said the girl, "when I first open my eyes in the morning, I pray: Lord, open the eye of my understanding; and while I am dressing, I pray that I may be clothed with the robe of righteousness; and when I have washed me, I ask for the washing of regeneration; and as I begin work, I pray that I may have strength equal to the day; when I begin to kindle the fire, I pray that God's work may revive in my soul; and as I sweep out the house, I pray that my heart may be cleansed from all its impurities; and while preparing and partaking of breakfast, I desire to be fed with the hidden manna, and the sincere milk of the word; and as I am busy with the little children, I look up to God, as my Father, and pray for the Spirit of adoption, that I may be his child;—and so on all day. Every thing I do furnishes me with a thought for prayer."

"Enough, enough," cried the old minister; "these things are revealed to babes, and often hid from the wise and prudent. Go on Mary," said he, "pray without ceasing, and as for us, my brethren, let us bless the Lord for this exposition, and remember that he has said, "the meek will I guide in judgment."

The little Lame Boy.

Poor little Charlie, how sad it made every one feel to hear the sound of his crutch, and to see his pale face so full of patience and trust. He had not always been lame, but when only four years old had received a fall from which he had to lie in bed a long, long time, and when he did at last get better and able to get up, it was found that he could not run about again as he had done before, and joining the sports of his little brothers and sisters, but must hobble along upon a crutch. It was a sore trial to his poor parents, and to all about him, but Charlie himself was so patient and tried to bear it very manfully. This made him beloved by every one, and if a pretty toy was brought home, or a book, or a pet, it was always given to Charlie.

After a while when he grew stronger, he thought he would like to go to school with the other children, for he had learned to read and became very fond of his book. The school was not very far off but still he would sometimes grow weary of walking, and then his older brother Philip would take him upon his back and carry him the rest of the way to school. Here he was a favorite with all his little companions, and they always treated him so gently.

In some of their plays he could sometimes join them. He liked to play marbles, and spin tops, and sometimes he would go with his sisters and the other little girls, into a grove near by, to help them hunt flowers, or to make whistles for them of the young chestnut branches.

When evening came there were always some of the older boys ready to help Philip carry him home.—"Come Charlie," they would say, "here's your horse ready for you." And how grateful the little fellow felt as he mounted and moved off along with his playfellows. Sometimes a tear would steal into his eye when he thought how different he was from them, but it was soon wiped away again and replaced by a smile. The passers by always looked upon him with pitying hearts, and wondered how he could be so cheerful and happy. But it was much the best way, was it not, dear children? You know it would make it no better for him to pine and lament, and would only have brought sorrow into the home of which he was ever the sunshine and joy.—Children's Friend.

A Good Resolve.

"Mamma, when I am a man, I will begin to love Jesus."

These words fell from the lips of a fine little fellow scarcely six years old.

His mamma had endeavored time after time, to impress on his youthful mind the necessity of early piety; but hitherto, all her persuasions seemed in vain.

When he uttered these words, she said, "But, my dear, suppose you do not live to be a man!"

He remained silent for some minutes, with his eyes fixed on the ceiling as if in deep thought; and then with a resolute countenance added, "Then mamma, I had better begin at once."

Now my dear young readers, will you follow Eddie's example, and begin at once? There is no time like the present for serving the Lord. If you put it off a little longer, you will perhaps, find that you have put it off a little too long. You have been frequently reminded in those pages, and perhaps by incidents occurring around you, that the youngest is not too young to die. But neither are you too young to give your heart to Jesus. If you go to Him now, you will not regret it when you become men and women; but on the contrary, will find God's care and protection to be over you at all times, and that He fulfills His promises in ways that you cannot fully understand.—Early Days.

Quoting the Scriptures.

We have frequently felt desirous of offering some suggestions on this subject; for not unfrequently do we receive articles for publication containing quotations from the sacred Book which we must either strike out entirely, or take our Bible, find the passage intended, and quote it as it there stands. This is always laborious. It is perplexing too; and especially so, when the space is nearly all occupied with the handwriting of the writer. In this case, we are often necessitated to transcribe the article for the printers, so that they will not be liable to overlook any part of it.

Now to those who do not make it a rule with themselves to use the very words of the Scripture in quoting therefrom, we would suggest that when you do quote, refer to the passage and transcribe it word for word and letter for letter. Also, at the commencement of the quotation, fix the proper marks (“), and also at the conclusion (”). And at the same time, it will be but little trouble to the writer to intersperse, also, the punctuation marks as they occur in the Scripture quoted.

To illustrate the above we will quote 1 Cor. 13: 13, without any marks: And now abideth faith hope charity these three but the greatest of these is charity.

We will now quote the passage as we think it should be quoted, thus:—“And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.” And so it stands recorded in the New Testament.

The necessity of quoting the whole Scripture, and nothing more nor less than the Scripture, is made fully apparent when we review this age of many religions. Designing men will “wrest the Scriptures” in order to defend their inventions. But so it cannot be among us, for the BRETHREN take the simple, unadulterated text of the word of God for their material in building upon the “sure foundation.” Hence the necessity of quoting the exact language of the Sacred Oracles. If this is done, the critic cannot criticise, unless he criticises the words of inspiration.

We would suggest when a long quotation is to be made from the Scriptures, that the writer refer the reader to the book, chapter, and verses in the Bible, without quoting it in the article. This will secure brevity, or give the writer space to express original thought, unless the passage is so important as to require quotation.—Also, when quotations are made from other writers, be sure to place the quotations (“ ”) at their proper places, and use the precise words of the writer quoted.

Those who will receive these suggestions, and will make practical use of them, will save much of the editorial labor.—E.

If our calculations do not fail us, our readers will have a part of the Report of the proceedings of Annual Meeting, in next number. The next number may be divided into two parts—two half sheets—and if so divided our subscribers should be careful to get both. This will be for our own convenience.

We wish to keep it before our readers that 90 cents will pay for the Companion from No. 21 to the end of the present volume, Jan. 1st, 1870, including the Minutes of the Annual Meeting, and our report of its proceedings.

Answers to Correspondents.

Jacob Cristner, Davistown, Pa.—The money has come to hand. You are quite excusable for the delay. We think you should receive the paper now, having had to send money a second time. But as yet we know of but this one receipt. When letters are not registered they should be put up very carefully.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Holsinger; I started on the 23rd of April in company with brother Dillman and brother Kinsey; on a mission to the western part of this county (Campaign); arrived on the 24th at friend Johnson's, after a hard days ride through mud and water. Soon learned that my letter had not come to hand. Thus we felt discouraged, being among strangers, and no appointment for preaching. But our host assured us that all would be right. Sunday morning we went to the Campbellite meeting. The members of said church held a little council and agreed I should preach. We tried to do so from Hebrew 11: 25, 26. After meeting we gave an invitation to unite with us in the service of Christ. There was an old man came and made application to be received by baptism. We made the arrangements, and I baptized the old father in the Sangamon River. When we went from the water I made some inquiry about his age; according to the family record he was one hundred years old last March. He told me he was sprinkled when a babe, but he was afraid to launch out into the dark future without some better evidence than that.

There seems to be a deep interest manifested there for the truth, and I would not be surprised to see many more follow the example of the old man, if the brethren could visit them often. Brethren, pray for us.—Amen and Amen.

Brother Jonas DeHaven, Abilene, Kansas, sends an order for books, and money to pay for Companion to a friend in Michigan; also, renews his subscription for remainder of the year and an extra copy for distribution. His example is commendable. We glean a few lines from his letter:

“This one copy is for myself and family, and the other new volume I want to deal out weekly to those (outsiders) who don't come to our meetings to hear preaching. Perhaps we may do a little good in that way.”

Editorial Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, D. C. }
May 12, 1869. }

Brother G. W. Brumbaugh and I arrived at this place yesterday at 12–40, noon. We were met at the station by our esteemed friend, D. C. YINGLING, (son-in-law of elder Graybill Myers) who took us to his home and has entertained us in such a way that we find no words to express our gratitude. We hope heaven will reward him and his excellent lady for their hospitality.

We have now seen some of the sights of the National Capitol. Yesterday we visited the President's House, the grounds, &c., and saw much to interest us. We also had an outside view of the Treasury Building, which is one of the most magnificent edifices in the world. The enormous pillars of Granite were the greatest wonder to us. How they were ever elevated is more than we can imagine. Wiser heads than ours must have planned the work.

To-day we visited the Capitol. O, what a building it is. We could not but look with amazement. We are not to say "green," in the matter of buildings, having seen of the finest in other cities. Our readers will have some idea of it when we tell them that it covers over three and a half acres, and is over 250 feet high, and is all stone, iron, and glass. The stone work is all of marble, which is of all shades and colors.

Of course everybody that visits the Capitol expects to ascend the dome and overlook the city. We started up also. On the way we met brother J. F. Oller and several sisters, and brother John Wise. We got along to the base of the dome, when the "poor editor" found it necessary to "give in" and be left behind, which was very mortifying to our ambition, especially as we saw a lady going on to the top. However, in our own defence we must say that on account of ill health we are not half ourself at this time.

We also visited the public gardens and green houses. We wish we could impart a view of the sights of the beauties of Nature that met our eyes at this spot. Thence we went to the Smithsonian Institute. Here may be seen specimens of birds, beasts, fishes, reptiles, and insects, innumerable, (at least in so short a time.) "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty," was a quotation made by my brother before we were half through.

But we cannot dwell—we dare not particularize. Thence we visited the Medical Museum, the building in which President Lincoln was assassinated. Here we also saw much.—Thence to the Patent Office. Here we passed hurriedly through, and saw just enough to regret that we could not bestow some time in examining the many curious works of Art, and specimens of machinery on exhibition. Here we also met President GRANT, who entered his signature only a few names below ours. He looks just like other men of his stature and countenance, and from all indications feels much so, unless he should be under the generality in self-conceit.

But we must close. We remain with friend Yingling until morning, and then expect proceed on our way.

I have engaged a short-hand reporter and our readers may expect a full report of the doings of the Annual Meeting.

H. R. HOLSINGER.

PHILADELPHIA, }
May 5th, 1869. }

Brother Holsinger: Perhaps you and your readers would have no objections to hear from the city of "Brotherly Love" through an occasional correspondent. If so this may be a commencement.

Some time ago there were meetings appointed for Sunday afternoons at the Crown Street meeting house; for social exercises, such as singing, prayer and exhortation. A peculiar feature of these meetings was that at the close of the exercises a subject was proposed for examination on the next succeeding Sunday, upon which all present were invited to give their views. This would very likely have created no trouble, if none but our members had attended; but we have in this city a few people, who were baptized by Thurman, after he had been expelled from the Brotherhood. These profess the "soul sleeping" and "annihilation" doctrines of the Adventists; and, it is said, were invited to attend our meetings by some of our members who are in sympathy with them. Some five or six of them consequently generally attended our social meetings, and they scarcely ever failed to touch upon their heresies, often denouncing those who do not believe them; but they seldom or never came to our meetings or preaching it is supposed, because the brethren advocate the immortality of the soul.

"Life" was the subject adopted for consideration on Sunday afternoon, April 18th, and continued on the following Sunday. Previous to that the subject had been "Light;" but whatever the point examined might be the Adventists would run their remarks into but one and the same channel.

Your correspondent foreseeing that this course would inevitably prostitute our social meetings into a controversial debate not at all edifying, hinted that it was his opinion they ought to refrain from speaking on the points in which they do not agree with the brethren. The answer was that they would not attend any meetings at which they were not permitted to advocate their doctrines. The fact is they came with their texts marked, seemingly, with the intention to convert us all to their faith. In answer they were referred to the "Rich man and Lazarus," to the instance in which St. Paul says he would prefer "to be absent from the body and present with the Lord," &c. After all that could be said their chief speaker declared that "there is no such thing as an immortal soul; that the doctrine is mere assertion, and not founded upon the scriptures." The writer remonstrated against making our social prayer-meetings the occasion, and our meeting-house the arena of debate, and, taking the responsibility, reminded the Adventists that the brethren believed in the immortality of the soul, considering the reverse doctrine a "damnable heresy" which it was presumptuous to come among us to advocate and told them, some of us at least, could no longer patiently tolerate it. They were left to infer the rest, and one by one they went out. It is conjectured we will not be troubled by them soon again.

I have been trying to study why o many of the Adventists believe in his "soul sleeping" heresy, and have ome to the conclusion that they, in his case, "wrest" the Scriptures to e consistent in the doctrine of the Millennium. They seem to place as nuch importance upon the "thousand ears," as if they believed that period o be the extent of the duration of the appiness of the just. They even at-ach more importance to it than did Christ himself, for he never once in ll his teaching mentioned the thous-nd years." I have asked the adven-ists this question, If the soul of the ighteous at its dissolution from its ody enters upon an eternity of hap-iness in heaven, of which the great-st period of time is no part, why at-ach so much importance to an earth-y paradise of but a thousand years ontinuance? The answer given vas, There is no such thing as an mmortal soul.

Not less unscriptural and revolting s the annihilation doctrine. Could nything be more derogatory to the ustice, mercy or love of our Heaven-y Father, who "wills not the death f the sinner," than to suppose it is is purpose to call from their graves ne sleeping, countless millions, who, ccording to the "no soul" theory of he Adventists, are already to all ntents and purposes annihilated, to -annihilate them? Thus two meta-hors of the Revelations, are, by mis-nstruction, made the basis of the ost radical, deplorable and mon-rous error.

I have been told that some of these eople even believe children who die fore they arrive at the age of accoun-ability, and, who consequently have ot believed in Christ, will never rise om the dead; thus denying that t "the dead both small and great" ill stand in the final judgment.—v. 20: 12. From such deplorable usions may the Lord protect his ople!

SILAS THOMAS.

Brother Henry:—I have been re-ving the Companion regularly ever e I sent for it and I certainly do to read it; and while reading I ed that you requested brethren rite for the Companion, even if could not write so well as others, would take the trouble and pains lp us where we lack in making ot sentences, &c. I feel like writing a little for the Companion, although I must confess I feel a deli-cacy in writing for the public as this is the first attempt I have made.

In reading the Companion we find a great deal of comfort. O how I love to learn the minds of others, when I can think there is no spirit of contention among us. We certainly can find food for the soul when we read a piece that is based upon the sayings of the Master; it helps us on to heaven. But, brethren, let us avoid the spirit of contention. I sometimes think there is too much of this among the brethren in writing for the Companion. The Apostle says, "we have no such custom, neith-in the churches of God." Let us take the Bible for our guide, and when we read it let us use judgment and econo-my. "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me," says Christ.

Then I believe we will not have so much strife and contention among us. I fear, by having so much contention, we may be led to "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel;" then the Lord will complain of us as the apostle Paul complained of the Corinthians when he told them of the heresies and divisions which was among them.—What a pity it would be if this should be the case with us, and then the aw-ful sentence: "Depart from me ye that work iniquity."

Now, dear reader, as we profess to take the Bible for our guide, let us be very careful that we stray neither to the right or left. It is our duty to do all the good we can; but let us do it in a way that will please God. By so doing we can be as "a city that is set upon a hill which cannot be hid." We must let our light so shine that sinners may see our good works, which will cause them to consider, and turn to the service of the Lord. May the good Lord help us to forget the things which are but vanity and vexation of spirit, and give us grace sufficient to overcome all the tempta-tions the devil may present, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

"The Laborers are Few."

To the brethren whom it may concern: I see through the Compan-ion that there is much preaching in many places, while we in this part of God's earth we have not the privilege of hearing preaching often,—we have not had any preaching for six months, and have, in this immediate neigh-borhood, about twenty-five members and no speaker, while in many places there are enough and to spare. Now brethren, the commission was given to the apostles, and to his ministers: Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. Mark 16: 15. "So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven and sat on the right hand of God, and they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them and confirming the Word with signs following.—Mark 16: 19, 20. Brethren, I write this so that if there should be any one who has a desire to emigrate or come to a new country, this is the place you are needed, as there is a large field for good to be done, and laborers scarce. I believe if half the preaching or labor was spent here that is in many places, it would do much more good in the way of bring-ing souls into the fold of Christ; for the people here seem to have a great desire to hear the gospel preached in its simplicity and purity.

As respects the society of people, we have as good and peaceable neigh-bors as can be found. Climate is mild, and land cheap.

Brethren, make this one of your stopping-places, for we always feel to rejoice when we can go to meeting, and see souls returning to their Fath-er's House, as the prodigal did.

May God bless us all and give us grace and strength to live true and faithful unto our Lord and Master.

Gleanings.

Brother J H Roberts, Trenton, Mo., says: "I cannot see how any brother can do without the Compan-ion or Visitor, who has the welfare of primitive Christianity at heart."

Brother John M. Vanhorn, after requesting the change of his address to Erie, Neoshio Co., Kansas, says: "I have moved south into a new country where there are no Brethren, but people are fast settling here. I do still hope that the Brethren will try to spread the Good News in this part of Kansas. We have a good country here. Plenty of timber, stone coal and Limestone.

I heartily invite the Brethren to come, and especially those who labor in the Word to preach to the people here, as many say they never heard the Brethren preach."

Brother Gabriel Kitterman, Montpelier, Ind., under recent date, says: "We are a little body of brethren and sisters, called the Prairie Creek branch. We are under the care of Elder J. W. Studabaker. We have been left almost without a speaker since brother N. C. Rice left us. I think, if we could have meetings more frequently, a great deal of good might be done here.

We had three additions by baptism last Fall at our Communion Meeting, and several since. Brother S. Stump has been holding meetings among us since last Fall, and so the ark moves forward slowly.

When I read of the calls for help from other places, I feel for them, for we feel the need of gospel help and of encouragement. Through each other's aid we feel more able to bear the cross."

Brother John H. Miller, Forest City, Mo., says:

"I have been a diligent peruser of the Companion for sixteen months or more, and through its columns I have gained a great deal of good information, urging the christian to his duties towards his Heavenly Father. I feel well with brother Smith's remarks in No. 13, which treats on the spread of the gospel. May each and every one of us take it to heart and say, I will do all I can towards the spread of the great and glorious gospel of our Lord and Savior. We can all do some thing toward turning the penitent sinner from the error of his way. I noticed some time ago a call made for the wealthier brethren to assist those that are poor in this world's goods to pay for the Companion. I as for my part amnot wealthy, but I am willing to throw in a little.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Prayer and Resignation.

Oh blessed Savior fill my heart with love,
Then take me to the realms of bliss above.
Forever may I taste thy richest grace,
Forever may I view thy smiling face.
Thou art my hope; on thee I do rely;
Oh grant me this request before I die:
Thy grace impart, (to me be ever near;)
Thy love which casts out all tormenting fear.
Then gladly will I go when called away,
To dwell with thee in everlasting day.

For the Companion.

To a Cross-Bearing Sister—a Minister's Wife.

Grace be with thee. Blessed art thou among women.

You need not be told that grace, in copious measure, is especially required for one in your circumstances. That you are blessed among women on account of the very position that renders abundant grace necessary, may not be so clear to your mind. The sentiment of these two citations is often found together in the Scriptures. When grace is needed, sin and its consequences must exist; and where grace is to abound, sin in some phase must present peculiar contingencies. Grace has given to the world the greatest gift in the bestowment of the world's Sovereign, and in this Gift of gifts is included every other. The Grace that sent the Gift also selected the proper time, and the circumstances best suited to the end to be attained. That you should be a minister's wife, bearing the cares and responsibilities of so solemn and momentous a relation, may seem to you very strange, and often harass your mind even to fretfulness; but "if thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee," occupy this position, fill this post, drink this cup, bear this cross, you would glory in your very trials; and, like the model saint of Your own sex, would say, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word."—That mysterious maternity that gave us a world's Redeemer, while it contained untold elements of joy, also had in it those hours of anguish, and those scenes of unutterable horror, which were fitly foreshadowed by the saintly Simeon in these words: "a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also." To women belongs the honor of clothing God in flesh, and whatever sorrows, and bitter woes, were involved in the wondrous relationship of Mary to God, her words, which she uttered in moments of ecstasy, have been gloriously fulfilled: "from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed." This was but an echo of Gabriel's salutation, and she no more knew all it meant than that sad note in Simeon's dying song which not only pictured her son on a cross, but a sword in her own soul. That cross has come down to us, and so has that sword, and while your husband preaches the one, you will often feel the other. Your hindrances are many, your cares are pressing, and you often wonder why the Church has added to your burdens. Were not the ministry a Divine institution, were not souls at stake, were not the Church the Body of Christ, vitalized by His Spirit and actuated by His love, no light accusation would you bring against them in the augmented cares and vexations involved in your relation to an ambassador of Christ. But if you have faith in God, if you believe that Christ is the Head of the Church, if you are confident that He is All-wise and All-merciful, and that all things work together for good to them that love him, you will have as much to sustain you in your manifold home duties, as your husband has in the more public discharge of his functions. Any path in life that a christian mother can tread has thorns on both sides, with roses interspersed, and if the cares are more and the crosses heavier with those who to ordinary duties have superadded this of bearing an important part of ministerial labor, they have the comfort, if they will take it, that the compassionate Savior never sent a cross on which He did not offer Himself as the solace and strength and peace of the soul on whom it was laid. Submission to His will, humble, uncomplaining acquiescence in His appointments, whether it be the removal of a dear one by death, or the decline of your health, or the loss of property, or the advancement of your husband to the work of preaching the Gospel, will open up avenues in your soul for the inflowing of Divine love and sympathy, which will more than compensate for the want of all you would have gained could you have arranged every thing according to your wishes. That you are left so much alone, to bear the anxiety and responsibility of family discipline, and keep the fire burning on the family altar, is a matter in which you have my warmest sympathy, and of the saints in general; and it should be a special object with the Church, in secret and family worship, to beseech the sympathy and presence of the Elder Brother on the Throne in behalf of the ministers' wives. But while you are at home with heavy heart attending to your duties it may be, or with tear-blinded eyes groping your way along the path of duty, do not forget that your husband is out on high errands for the King of kings, standing in the front rank fighting the battles of the Lord, laboring with all his strength, and sometimes above his strength, to "pluck brands from the burning," to win sinners from the path of destruction to the shelter of the Gospel. If there are those in the Church who are culpably remiss in their duty to the wives of our ministers, there is One who bears you on His heart evermore, noting all your perplexities, ministering to all your wants, gathering up all your tears, attentive to all your prayers, and girding you with His Everlasting Arm for such service as your position imposes. When cares come rolling like a turbulent deluge, and your husband is not here to help you buffet them, think of the souls that are to be his crown of rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus, and of the blessedness that will flood your own soul in the eternal world, as the reward of your fidelity as the wife of one of Christ's evangelists. That inconceivable glory and honor await the preachers of the Gospel, is matter of revelation. Dan 12: 3. And that their faithful companions, to whom they owe so much for the success of their ministry, and to whom the kingdom of Christ on earth has in all ages been so deeply indebted, shall in no wise lose their reward. If your physical powers will not allow you to do much, give your counsel as God bestows wisdom, and beseige the mercyseat for patience and Christian endurance, and you will be astonished how ready Jesus is to repeat the old miracle of making a little sufficient to feed a multitude. Some are perpetually murmuring, as though they had more faith in that to minister comfort than in a resolute, trusting acceptance of the will of God, assured that though His providences may lead into dreadful gulfs and glooms, a ray of light shines through all, which conducts into the joys of faith here, and into the full fruition of Heaven, hereafter.—Some excuse their indifference to the charge Heaven has assigned them, by referring to their husband's unfitness for the holy office, which in some cases may be true, and others regard their own unfitness for such a relation as a reason why they should be exonerated from all obligation growing out of the ministerial office.—But God requires no impossibilities. If we have but one talent, He will not require two until by diligent use we have doubled it.—What is below a talent is blank idiocy, involving no responsibility. A little worm could so vex the prophet Jonah, that his ire rose to a most shameful pitch, venting itself in language that was not only highly discreditable to himself, but insulting to God. A little provocation in the family, a biting word from the wife when the husband was about leaving home to wait on God's call, has occasioned many a cold sermon, and snatched the bread of life from many a hungry soul. The man whose heart does not melt, and whose eyes are not dimmed with tears, when he contemplates the many trials and burdens of a minister's wife, is not fit to preach the Gospel. Such a heart has not motive enough from the right source to give his sermons soul-saving unction. And the wife who sees her husband leave home with a heart burdened by her pouting and scolding, thus sending blasting and mildew along his path, and tincturing the water of life with wormwood when it is to flow through him, is filling for herself a cup with very bitterness itself.

Is it not better, dear sister, that your husband should go forth on the glorious mission of preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ, spend and be spent in the blessed work of spreading the light of salvation, than that he should abandon his calling to make your home more comfortable as pertaining to time and sense? If you must weep more in your present condition, will not the consciousness of an ever-near Jesus bring into your solitude a bliss which is never felt as an element in fellowship with even the most affectionate husband? Oh that you, and all your sisters in similar circumstances, could but feel that every sacrifice and trial growing out of your husband's calling, is as necessary a part of God's plan for saving the world, as is preaching itself. It would put such dignity on what generally wears such an insignificant aspect, that you would have a high and worthy sense of holy ministry in all you do. If you do or endure what would not be necessary if your husband were not a minister, conceive of such labor and suffering as an appendage to the ministry of your consort for the salvation of souls.—If he could not follow the beck of his Master in the promulgation of the Gospel without your co-operation, the unfading Paradise above will have "joys unspeakable and full of glory" to compensate you for all your toils. When Christ was "lifted up," as a centre of attraction to the world, it was amid darkness, and agony, tears and blood, and you must not think it strange if "fiery trials" be your lot in aiding your husband to preach "Christ Jesus and Him crucified." When the ambassador receives his reward, the faithful wife's crown will also shine with the reflected lustre of the souls saved by the husband's ministry. Your interest in his efforts to preach Jesus, your sympathy with his soul-struggles and bodily exposures, your willingness to bear the cross at home while he contends for the faith abroad, inspires him with energy and boldness in making known the riches of Divine grace, and clothes his language and looks with a tenderness that sinks into the soul like a message from Heaven. He can present the cross with greater power and effect, sustained and warmed with the affecting thought that at home there is one who is a sweet, meek living illustration of the sermons, in her ready sacrifice of so much comfort for the advancement of Christ's kingdom. If your husband must go forth in camel's hair and a leathern girdle, and you must subsist at home on locusts and wild honey, what of it? Others have done the same who now "shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars forever and ever." The blood-washed robe, the Beatific vision, the society of angels and glorified saints, the unbroken bliss of the Heavenly Home, these, surely, may well reconcile us to every trial and sorrow incident to our earthly pilgrimage.

Reigning Sin.

All persons are inclined to sin from their youth. Different persons, however are more or less inclined or disposed to different kinds of sin. Some are inclined so much to one sin or another that they are continually tempted to transgress in one particular direction. One is inclined to pride. He is proud of everything that he has. His clothes, his person, his house, land, horses, or whatsoever he happens to possess.—Another is inclined to lying, so that he will continually indulge in telling falsehoods, with no other apparent motive, perhaps, than that he loves to tell lies. Everything that he speaks about exaggerates itself into a great thing when it really is hardly anything. Another has an uncontrolable propensity for stealing, for defrauding and deceiving his fellow men, and thus particular kinds of sins manifest themselves in different persons, and they seem to be so continually and so strongly inclined towards them that they are ruling passions, reigning sins, to them.

Now if one thus inclined makes an effort to overcome and forsake these reigning sins within him, a great strife ensues, and a continual effort is required; nor is it enough that these natural dispositions of the carnal mind are once or twice overcome by those so inclined; they must again and again be beaten back. Neither can he who desires to overcome and forsake his reigning sins expect to do so through his own power and strength. He must implore divine help.—He must be strengthened from on high. He must be helped by him who was strong enough to overcome all sin, and to triumph even over death and the grave.

If any of us then have such reigning sins to contend with, let us not despair. Let us be strong, trusting in God, ask him to help us to overcome them, for he that overcometh shall obtain the crown of life.

I suppose it is also a fact that all christians have, during their whole lives, to contend against the weakness of the flesh and the sins that still prevail within them. They meet with trials and temptations, they often become weak in the faith and discouraged, and then Satan, the enemy of souls tries to discomfit them, and if possible bring them to fall down and worship him. But christian traveler, behold thy Savior in temtation. Be strong as he was. Resist the tempter and he will flee from thee. Oh! do not cast thyself down at his feet! Do not enslave thyself under his cruel yoke; but call on the name of the Lord in the hour of trouble and temptation, for thy God is to thee, and to all that call upon his name, a very present help. "The name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous fleeth into it and is safe."

Therefore beloved, stand firm amidst temtpation. Trust in the Savior. Yield not when the tempter comes. Try day by day to gather strength, and to grow in grace and through the help and grace of our heavenly Father, we shall be able to stand even in the day of his coming.—Herald of Truth.

For the Companion.

A few thoughts.

The salvation of relatives should be earnestly sought. A Christian's deportment is one powerful method of bringing this to pass.

The most excellent and enduring ornaments of a woman are not those which are external but those which are internal—purity of heart, meekness, contentment, and delight in doing good.

Daily family prayer is one of the most powerful means of grace; and husbands and wives should so live that their unity in it will be delightful.

So great is human wickedness that men are often called to suffer for doing right; but instead of being discouraged, they should, with greater steadfastness and fidelity, go forward in duty, trusting God to enable them so to live as never to be called to suffer in any other cause.

The time when Christ, by his Divine Spirit, "went and preached unto the spirits in prison." (Peter 2: 19.) I think, was not, as some say, after his crucifixion, and between his death and resurrection; but as Peter says: „In the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing,"—when those spirits where embodied on earth in a state of probation. And the doctrine that this passage teaches such a state as purgatory, or that any other passage in the Bible teaches it, is false.

Faith and obedience have even been essential to salvation, in those who know the will of God; and both his providence and ordinance have been suited to impress this upon our minds.

ELIZA BRANDT.

Not of the World.

THERE is no just mode of life, no true holiness, or fruit of holy living, if we do not carry the conviction, by our self-denial, our sobriety in the matter of show and our withholding from all that indicates being under the world, that we are in a life separated to God. Therefore his great call is, "Come out from among them and be ye separated and touch not the unclean thing, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty;" and there is a most profound philosophy in this. If we are to impress the world, we must be separate from sinners, even as Christ our Master was, or at least according to our human degree as being in his spirit. The great difficulty is that we think to impress the world, standing on the world's own level and seeking its approbation. We conform too easily and with too much appetite. We are all the while touching the unclean thing, bowing down to it. God therefore, calls us away. Oh that we could take our lesson here, and plan our life, order our pursuits, choose our relaxations, prepare our families so as to be truly with Christ, and so in fact that we ourselves can say, each for himself, "the prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me." And this, exactly, is our communion with Jesus; we propose to be one with him in it. In it we connect with a power transcendant, the Son of Man in glory, whose image we aspire to, and whose mission, as the crucified on earth, was the revelation of the Father's love and holiness.

We ask to be separated with him and set apart to the same great life. Our communion is not of the level of our common humanity, but we rise in it; we scale the heavens where he sitteth at the right hand of God; we send our longings up and ask to have attachments knit to him; to be set in deepest, holiest and most practical affinity with him; and so to live a life that is hid with Christ in God. In such a life, we become partakers also of his power.—Bushwell.

The religion of Jesus.

The religion of Jesus is that of love, of unity, of concord. Offences among brethren destroy the harmony and love of their fellowship, and if these be not restored, but too sure proof is given that the love of God never had its residence in their midst. The mind and temper, and spirit of a man, as they appear in his actings with fellow-men, are but a transcript of what that mind, and temper, and spirit will be in eternity. Are there offences in heaven? Is unforgiveness known or indulged in in heaven? No, but it is known in hell—that is the region of discord; there rage, and enmity, and war of mind, reign paramount; there are dark passions from a cup unmingled.

———:o:———

The dead have no beauty—neither is there any spiritual loveliness in the unregenerate. True it is, some of them have sweet natural qualities, and moral excellencies, which are engaging; but these are so many flowers, decking and adorning a dead corpse.

Little by Little

The Earth is made up by little grains of sand, piled one upon another. The Ocean contains little drops of water, blended together in one mighty volume of ever living, rolling, restless life. Our life is full of little acts, not one of which is unimportant or trivial, or to be lightly esteemed—when considered in the light of its influence upon ourselves or those around us. The habits of early life will go with us and cling to us, despite our efforts to shake them off, sometimes causing the blush of shame to mantle our cheek, and sometimes to give us pleasure that we were in early life trained to habits of courtesy and sobriety. The young lad, happy in the thought, he is soon to be a man, and his heart full of noble aspirations, with visions of what he is to be, constantly looming up before him, does not dream that the occasional glass he takes, just with a friend, will, ere he reaches the meridian of life, cause him to fill a drunkard's grave. He feels strong and confident, that although others have become drunkards, he never will become one. He feels perhaps too strong in his own mind, little dreaming that his very confidence is the enemy which lurks unseen and unnoticed, until he has gone beyond the reach of recovery. The appetite is not to be trifled with, nor will it bear to be cultivated with the expectation of controlling it. For instance, Tobacco is very repulsive to the taste at first, but take a little of it, every day and instead of loathing it you will love it, yea crave it. So with strong drink. No one really likes the first taste; but, continue to taste it and soon you will have an uncontrollable desire for it. Ah, it will be almost impossible for you to let it alone. Imagine a hungry man, in sight of food, can he resist the impulse of his appetite and refuse to eat? Can he say to his stomach, be thou satisfied, with looking on? The only safety lies in total abstinence from all that can intoxicate. Little by little, the man forms the appetite which leads him on to ruin and woe. Little by little he gives way to his passions until he finally yields himself up to be the willing victim rum. Beware then of strong drink, it causes all men to err that drink it. Remember it is little by little.—Voice of Truth.

Spotted Christians.

Alas, how numerous. If some shepherd less wise than Jacob should come along, and choose the spotted ones, I fear that he would get a large proportion of the flock. A Christian wholly unspotted from the world would be truly a sight worth seeing. Do spots trouble Christians of the present day? Do they perceive them?

Does that brother know that his levity and trifling in his common conversation are dark spots on his Christian character? Does he know that they destroy his religious influence with the worldly? How they dishonor the Savior! Does that mother, know who is so much cumbered with her household affairs that she cannot go to a female prayer meeting, nor find time to pray with her own children, nor give them religious instruction—who talks more of her work than of her Savior—does she see what spots are on her religious character?

That young female, who is so forward and mirthful in the company of youthful associates, who is fond of showing her smartness and wit—who indulges her passions for dress and ornament—who neglects these prayer meetings and goes to the dancing party—does she think herself a Christian in truth?

That novel reader, whose nights are half spent poring over the pages of the sickly and corrupting romance—whose Bible lies neglected—whose heart is hardened—whose mind is polluted with the latent, or open and brazen licentiousness which abounds in those fictions—is that a professing Christian? Alas! what does profession mean? Who might not have the name of disciple, if persons so spotted can bear it and go unrebuked?

And there is one who is so covetous, so close in a bargain—so hard upon the poor, so stinted and grudging in all that he does for the support of religious institutions—so full of the idolatry of riches that he can think of nothing else. And he has even dared to call himself a disciple of Jesus Christ. What shall we not have next? Shall we be much surprised if we hear of rumseller, stavern haunters who profess religion? And will not boasting slaveholders and Satan come also?

How cheaply can the name of Christian be obtained at the present day! How little is known or illustrated of the solemn injunction, "and keep himself unspotted from the world." How few seem to remember that "Christ loves the Church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that He might present it to Himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." And how few heed the exhortation, "Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent, that it may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless."

It is melancholy to think how many and how great are the spots that are in the character of professing Christians. O my soul, how is it with thee? "Does no dark spot in word or life appear?" While thou art speaking of others, are thine own garments unspotted? Dost thou daily wash in that fountain that has been opened for sin and uncleanness! Be faithful, O my soul, to reprove sin wherever it is seen, but be most faithful with thyself.—Jenkins.

Man is one in whom both worlds do meet; his body participates of the lower, his soul of the upper world, hence it is that he finds such tugging and pulling this way and that way, upward and downward; both worlds as it were contending for this invaluable prize, the precious soul.

Let us Follow our Redeemer.

"I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." John 14: 6.

Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord: Are we not in the last days? And are there not too many disputings and contentions among us? Are we following our Redeemer? Are we following him who said to his disciples, "What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way?" Mark 9: 33. Brethren, are we not disputing by the way, through our Church papers, on points and practices? I fear the time is approaching, spoken of by the apostle Paul, (1 Tim. 4: 1,) "that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines," &c. See also Matth. 24: 10—13.

Has not some been offended? Has there no false prophets arisen? Has not the love of some waxed cold? But who will endure to the end? Verily, I do think they are the souls that do strictly follow our dear Redeemer. Then let us consider how he did go through this world. We never find him hasty, but always meek and mild. We never find him jesting, but always calm and serene. O let us try to be like him; then we will surely be right. Let us bind ourselves together with the strong cords of Christian charity, for it is "the bond of perfectness." Let us also speak to one another in tones and words of Christian love. If in this manner we follow our Redeemer, it will be well-pleasing in the sight of him whose "eyes are over the righteous." In the language of the apostle I would say, Let no corrupt communication proceed out of our mouths, neither from our pens, but let it be that which is good to the use of edifying that it may minister grace unto the hearers and readers. Read Eph. 4: 29—32.

A kind word will often turn away wrath, and is better than many strifes. And if false prophets do arise, let us not follow after them, but follow our Redeemer, "in whom there is no variableness neither shadow of turning." Please read 1 Tim. 4: 3, 4, 5, and follow after Jesus in whom there is no guile. Let us follow him in precept and in example, and in our actions, and in our conversations: follow him in love, and in patience, and in meekness, and temperance.

"Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses." And if we lack for knowledge, look to our Redeemer: he is our Elder Brother; he will teach us right.

Reply to Brother Joseph Weaver's Query.

In No. 16 of present volume, brother Weaver requested an explanation of 1st Cor. 3: 15, which reads as follows: "If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire."

Not being otherwise employed to-day, I thought I would spend some of the time in writing; and in my meditation for something to write upon, my mind settled on the above. I do not expect to take the time or space, neither do I consider myself capable, to do the subject justice; but I will try to give a few hints.

In order to get a proper understanding of the subject it will be necessary to refer to the context, part of which reads as follows: "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Now if any man build upon this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire."

In the first place it is indispensably necessary that we get upon the right foundation; and then the apostle says, "we shall take heed how we build thereupon."

We find six different kinds of material specified in the text; three of which are incombustible, which will stand the test though they be tried by fire; but the other three, —wood, hay, and stubble,—every observing mind knows are combustible material; consequently it would be unsafe to use such material in our superstructure; and if we do, we will undoubtedly have to suffer loss.

The question might arise: What loss will he suffer? forasmuch as the apostle says "he himself shall be saved." He will lose the thousand years reign with Christ: he will lose the promise given in Revelations,—"Blessed and holy are they that have part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

We draw the inference from the foregoing passage that the second death will have power over all them that have no part in the first resurrection to a greater or less extent.

I believe that there will be three classes when Christ makes his first appearance, and at the final judgment day, after the thousand years are expired. When he comes there will be those that will resist him, or fight against him, which will almost all be destroyed; and another class who will not resist him, but accept him as the true Messiah; amongst which will be the Jews, God's chosen people, and will be permitted to dwell on the earth in their natural bodies; and another class that have built with incombustible material, who shall be resurrected and changed, or immortalized, and shall reign with their blessed Master a thousand years. After the thousand years, we read, the Devil will be loosed a little season, and go out on the breadth of the earth to deceive the nations, and gather them together against the saints, and will be destroyed by fire from heaven: then comes the general resurrection and judgment, and there we hear the judge say to those on the right hand, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungered and ye gave me meat," &c; and when they wanted to know when they saw him in want and ministered unto him, he said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto me."—Now inasmuch as this language was addressed to those on his right hand, who are termed righteous, we conclude that these his brethren were some where else; and we believe they are sitting with Christ in judgment, because we read, "If we judge ourselves we shall not be judged," and again, "Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world?" Consequently we come to the conclusion that amongst those on the right are the foolish virgins, who went to procure oil and were too late for the marriage supper of the Lamb; or those who had built with combustible material, such as wood, hay, and stubble; and who knows what fiery trials, or punishments, they had to endure, during the thousand years that the wise virgins were enjoying the full fruition of the marriage feast.

I have now given my views in as brief a manner as I could, although I have taken more space than I expected to: and now may the Lord help us all to build upon the "foundation of the Apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the Chief Corner Stone," and of material that will stand the test; so that when our blessed Savior comes, "we may rejoice and lift up our heads, knowing that our „redemption draweth nigh," is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

D. E. PRICE.

Mt. Morris, Ills.

———:o:———

He is a Christian.

He is a Christian. Then he is a man of truth. Upon his word you may implicitly rely. His promises are faithfully fulfilled. His representations he believes to be scrupulously exact. He would not hazard his veracity upon a contingency. "He that speaketh truth showeth forth righteousness."

He is a Christian! Then he is an honest man. He had rather wrong himself, than wrong his neighbor. In whatever business he may engage, you may be sure that his dealings will be honorable and upright. "Provide things honest in the sight of all men." "The way of the just is uprighteousness."

He is a Christian! Then he is a humble man. He thinks of his own infirmities, acknowledges his dependence on God, and regards the wealthiest and the poorest of his brethren as men, and worthy of his redeemer's love, and worthy of his attention and interest. "God giveth grace to the humble." "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

He is a Christian! Then he is a kind man. He feels interested for his neighbors, and has ever a pleasant word for those he meets. He strives to promote the welfare and happiness of those with whom he is associated. His generous heart delights in diffusing enjoyment. "The law of kindness is in his tongue." "To godliness add brotherly kindness."

He is a Christian! Then he is charitable. He is prompt to attribute right motives to others rather than wrong, wherever it is possible. Knowing his own liability to err, he will regard with a charitable heart the failures of others, and will be more ready to reclaim and restore, than to censure them. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ." "Charity suffereth long, and is kind."

He is a Christian! Then he is forgiving. Wrong does not rankle in his heart seeking for revenge. The forgiving word is ready upon his lip for his most implacable enemy. "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive your trespasses." "Even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."

He is a Christian! Then he is benevolent. He feeds the hungry, and clothes the naked, and ministers to the sick. Human distresses touch his heart and open his hand. The spiritual maladies of mankind excite his commiseration, and to relieve and remove them his influence and property will be freely and cheerfully contributed. "Freely ye have received, freely give." "Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him."

Good-Nature at Home.—No trait of character is more valuable in a wife than the possession of a sweet temper. Home can never be made happy without it.—It is like the flowers that spring up in our pathway, reviving and cheering us. Let a man go home at night, wearied and worn out by the toils of the day, and how soothing is a word dictated by a sweet disposition! It is sunshine falling on his heart. He is happy, and the cares of life are forgotten. A sweet temper has a soothing influence over the mind of the whole family. When it is found in the wife and mother, you observe kindness and love predominating over the natural feelings of a bad heart. Smiles, kind words and looks characterize the children, and peace and love have their dwelling there. Study then to acquire and retain a sweet temper. It is more valuable than gold! it captivates more than beauty, and to the close of life retains all its freshness and power.

Every day Piety.

There is too often a difference between our Sabbath and our week-day piety, the influence of the latter sadly counteracting that of the former. The world takes a keener notice of the religion we practice in our daily life than of our church profession of Sabbath observance. The irreligious rightly judge that a piety that does not control a man in his business relations, that does not enter into his daily walk and conversation, that is not manifest in his bargains as well as in his prayers, is but a mockery, an insult to God, and an imposture among men. This is correct judgement, and they can not escape it. It meets them at every turn, it follows them in their business, it enters into their homes, and measures them in their social intercourse; and the sad fact is, that few can stand the test thus applied.

———:o:———

Sins of Ignorance.

It is in vain for persons to pretend that those are signs of ignorance, which they have often and clearly heard testified against from the Word of God. It will be found to be a vain thing for persons who have lived under the light of the gospel, and where all manner of iniquity is testified against, if they live in immoral and vicious practices, to pretend that they are sins of ignorance, unless the case be very peculiar and extraordinary. It is in vain for you to pretend that those are sins of ignorance, of which you would not dare to proceed in the practice, if you knew that your soul was to be required of you this night. Persons do many things for which they plead, and pretend they think there is no evil in them, yet would as soon eat fire as to do the same, if they knew they were to stand before the judgment-seat of Christ within four and twenty hours.—This shows that people do but prevaricate when they pretend that their sins are sins of ignorance.—Edward.

The Path of The Just.

His glory is from within. It is a radiation. Put him where you will, he still shines, and can not but shine. God made him to shine. For instance: imprison Joseph, and he will shine out on all Egypt, cloudless as the sky where therain never falls. Imprison Daniel, and the dazzled lions will retire to their lairs and the king come forth to worship at his rising, and all Babylon bless the beauty of the brighter and better day. Imprison Peter, and with an angel for a harbinger star, he will swell his aurora from the fountains of Jordan to the wells of Beersheba, and break like the morning over mountain and sea. Imprison John, and the isles of Ægean and all the coast round will kindle with sunset visions too gorgeous to be described, but never to be forgotten; a boundless panorama of prophecy gliding from sky to sky, and enchanting the nations with openings of heaven, transits of saints and angels, and the ultimate glory of the city and kingdom of God. Not only so; for modern times have similar examples—examples in the church, and in the state. For instance, bury Luther in the depths of the Black Forest, and "the angel that dwelt in the bush" will honor him there; the trees around him will turn like shafts of ruby, and his glowing orbs loom up again, round and clear as the light of all Europe.

Thrust Bunyan into the gloom of Bedford jail, and as he leans his head upon his hand, the murky horizon of Britain will flame with fiery symbols, "delectable mountains," and celestial mansions, with holy pilgrims grouped on the golden hills, and bands of bliss from the gates of pearl hastening to welcome them home.

———:o:———

Is it Ours?

Have we hope spiritual—life eternal? Has God pardoned and renewed us? Has he adopted us into his family, and made us to bear his moral likeness?—Amidst the changes and convulsions of the present life is our prospect for heaven bright and hopeful? Are we soldiers of the cross, enlisted for the war, and willing to make every sacrifice for the honor and glory of King Emmanuel? Are we sincerely toiling to promote the interests of righteousness, and, thereby, the true interests of the world? These are questions which it is well for us to ask ourselves. Time will soon pass away, and eternity will come and encircle us in its mysterious embrace. As we have lived in time, so will our destiny be. There is no earthly loss for which there is not, in some degree, a compensation, but there is none for the loss of the immortal soul. Its ruin is beyond the reach of equivalent or recovery. Its fall is forever, and a perpetual and unanswered "miserere" is its only cry. But to-day we are living. The voice of mercy sounds in our ears. It bids us hearken and believe, and yield ourselves to God.—Will we comply, and inherit the palm and the crown? or turn a deaf ear to the voice of God, and grow hard in sin, and draw upon the soul, a night, a long dreary night of darkness, hopelessness and unutterable sorrow?

———:o:———

Love of the World.—This moral and spiritual disease manifests diverse symptoms. It is not only the reveler, the profane, the dishonest, the filthy, the corrupt, the abandoned, the infamous, nor the law-breaker, who may be said to be the lovers of the world. This fearful passion has crept into the Christian Church. Money is worshipped by thousands, who occupy the best pews in the house of God. Dress is up to the highest pitch of fashion here. Social position is hunted, with as eager steps as any other bauble. Coteries, gathered on the scale of property, equipage, business, or style, are tenaciously cemented and guarded, lest any other step should invade the enchanted circle of caste. Where the Love of the World is, there the Love of the Father is not.

———:o:———

Power of Prayer.

The root that produces the beautiful and flourishiug tree, with all its spreading branches verdant leaves and refreshing fruit—that which gains for it sap, life, vigor, and fruitfulness—is all unseen; and the further and the deeper the root spreads beneath, the more the tree expands above. Christians, if you wish to prosper, if you long to bring forth all the fruits of the Spirit, strike your roots deep and wide in private prayer. That faith and support, that strength and grace which you seek of God in secret, that it may be exercised in the hour of need, God will in that hour give it you before men.

———:o:———

The most common error of men and women is that of looking for happiness somewhere outside of useful work. It has never yet been found and never will be while the world stands. Of all the miserable human beings it has been our fortune to know, they were the most wretched who had retired from useful employments, in order to enjoy themselves.

The best are the cheapest.

On Matt. 3: 11.

John is telling them here what he is doing, and what Christ will do. "I indeed baptize you with water, but he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." He "turned the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; made ready a people prepared for the Lord." Luke 1: 17. And in doing this he baptized such as repented and confessed their sins. The meaning of repentance is, strictly, nothing more or less than a "change of mind." Whatever else may be said of it, (and much may be said) is no part of it, but the result, according to my mind. I repeat, the penitents he baptized. This baptism was from heaven. Matt. 21: 25. It was for the remission of sins. Mark 1: 5.

But now arises the question what was this baptism? What is baptism? To show this, I will limit my remarks to the verse referred to at the head of this article; and then show what John meant to teach his hearers by these words.

Plain it is that John "baptized with water;" and this was all that he could do. It remained for Christ to " baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire."

It is argued by our pedo-baptist friends that because it says "with water," it requires simply a small portion—a sprinkling. To which I answer, that no preposition, (and "with" is a preposition) expresses quantity, but shows the "relation of different things or thoughts to each other."

I have fertilized my field with lime. How can we know by the preposition "with" how much was applied? With teaches us neither that a cup of water is sufficient, nor that an ocean is required. I will, however, for argument's sake, allow that "with" is favorable to sprinkling; and then I argue that whatever it shows in regard to water-baptism, it shows in regard to Spirit-baptism. If "with" is favorable to sprinkling water, it is likewise favorable to sprinkling Spirit. Even so with baptize, or any other argument that may be used as favorable to sprinkling. Whatever it means in respect to water-baptism, it means in respect to spirit-baptism.

Again—because the Holy Spirit was poured out, therefore water must be poured too. It is immaterial (to what baptism is) how the Spirit came from heaven. The coming of the Spirit, (or pouring if you chose,) was not the baptism of the Spirit. The "filling of the house where they were sitting," (Acts 2: 3.) and the "filling of them," (4th verse) constituted the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

I now argue, that because they were immersed in the Spirit, (in being baptised with it) therefore, baptism of water requires an immersion too. Whatever baptism is with Spirit it is with water, and vice versa.

Now to show yet what John meant by these words. He was showing his inferiority to Christ, and Christ's superiority over him. "He must increase, but I must decrease." He was pointing them to "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." "He that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear." John had no power but to baptize "with water;" Christ had greater power: He baptized "with the Holy Ghost and with fire."

Deceivers.

In no instruction to his people is Christ more urgent and explicit, than in enjoining upon them to beware of false Christs, false prophets and deceivers.—Nothing favors the prophetic ken and guardian care of the "Good Shepherd" more conclusively, than the history of the Church in this matter. From the days of the apostles until now, the Lord's people have been made to monrn the destruction which these Wolves have made among the flock.

The danger to the Church from deceivers is great and momentous, and the effect of their deceptions often deplorable in the extreme, which proves the wisdom and love of our dear Savior in warning his people not to give ear to them. We find that those who permit themselves to be led, through seductive "fables," to adopt the errors of deceivers are seldom or never reclaimed; but are given over to "strong delusions."—Some of the very people, who were deluded by Miller more than twenty years ago, are among those that were deceived by Thurman, upon the same subject, last year; and although time has conclusively proven that the assertions of the latter, that he knew the time of the second advent of Christ, as a consequence, as he insinuated in his work that on subject, of being the "angel" who opened the "sealed" book of the prophet Daniel, were impious assumptions; yet these people still adhere to him, and believe, because he tells them so, that he only made a small mistake in his calculations. "Strong" indeed, must be their "delusion."

I feel impelled to write a few words, giving my impressions upon this subject to our dear Brethren, especially to the young among them, who stand in defence of the Truth ; hoping they will not regard it as presumptuons.

The apostle John says' "I have written unto you young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one." The truth at this very time needs vigorous, bold and persistent defenders ; for the reason that many deceivers have gone forth, and will deceive, if it were possible, the very elect. Remember, there is error as well as truth ; that there are "seducing spirits" and "doctrines of devils" as well as the Holy Spirit and doctrines of Christ ; that all truth pertains to the latter ; and all error to the former doctrines ; and, that hence there can be no compromise between the two, which our Heavenly Father will approve. Remember too, that a small difference in the practice of an ordinance, forborne in love, is as nothing in comparison with a compromise with erroneous fundamental doctrines.

From the character of the enemies of truth, their instigator being the arch fiend, you may infer their antagonism against her is fierce : and their persecution of her defenders implacable and relentless. If you stand up boldly in her defence, you may perhaps be overborne, for the time being, by the onslaughts of the deceived ; united with the opposition of those who ought to stand by you, but who, being tainted with error, because they have compromised with it, "cry peace ! peace" when there is no peace. Should this be the case and you arise again, and resolutely renew the defence at every opportunity, you will eventually see error subdued and truth victorious, if not in this world of infatuation and strife ; most certainly in that world of bliss which deceivers can never enter. You will there receive the conqueror's reward—a crown of glory.

If there should be any passage in the Acts of the Apostles ! in the epistles, or in the Revelations ; upon the construction of which, there may be a difference of opinion, of which difference deceivers often take advantage to mislead and divide God's people, and should your own mind not be clear upon the subject, if you will prayerfully compare the point in doubt with the personal teaching of the Savior, (if he said any thing upon it)all conjecture will be removed by the comparison, and the true construction be made unmistakably apparent ; but if the matter in doubt does not enter at all into the teaching of the Redeemer you may dismiss it from your thoughts, as a subject not vital to the salvation of the soul ; and may safely represent it in that point of view to your hearers.

Christ promised to pray the Father to send the Comforter to his people, who would lead them into all truth, and bring to their minds all that he had taught. Now it may justly be inferred, that if the saints go to the words of the blessed Jesus only for instruction in spiritual truth and knowledge, praying for the enlightening influence of the Holy spirit, his promise will be verified to them. They will be enabled to discern "seducing Spirits" and deceivers, and to detect error ; and the Truth in all its peerless beauty and brighness will be manifested to them.

Passing Away.

When we look around us we behold the beauties of nature ; the earth dressed in its green garment ; the trees of the forest covered with beautiful green leaves; the orchard teeming with snowy-white blossoms ; the songs of birds heard from every bush. Everything seems to lay hold on new life, and all nature seems to rejoice in the beauties of May. It would seem to thoughtless man that these things are durable and lasting. But on all these, and even brighter things than these, it is written in glowiug characters,—"Pasing away." Everything that we see must cease to exist. The bright sky above us ; the Sun—that great luminary of the day ; the Silvery Moon that rolls nightly through the blue sky,spreading her soft, mellow light over hiil and dale ; these together with all the glittering array of stars, must cease to exist,

All this does but teach us that we too must pass away. This we have already learned, not by experience, but by observation. When we take a glimpse into the past few years, how many do we remember that then associated with us, are with us no more !— They have passeb from earth away. We miss them in the family ; they are lost to society ; their seat is vacant in the house of worship ; and in the pulic places they are found no more. True it is that "all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flowers of grass;" for as the grass of the field withers and perishes so does all flesh. Then if all visible things must perish, and "heaven and earth pass away," is there anything that will not pass away ? We answer, there is. The Soul—the vital and immortal part of man—shall never die. It must live through all eternity ; either in the enjoyment of happiness, or in a state of misery and wo. We are aware that some men contend that the soul will perish ; but we have no evidence in God's word that there was ever a soul created. It was only given. It is the breadthof God in man, & it must live and run parallel with Deity throughout all the ceaseless ages of eternity.

Christ says, "my words shall not pass away," And He has promised us mansions in heaven that will no pass away. How encouraging it is that when we ar done with earth and perishable things, that we have home in those mansions which are durable.

Paul says, "For we know that if our earfhly house o this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building o God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Then should we not rather suffer affliction wit the people of God, for a little season, and afterward obtain a crown of life that fadeth not away, then to enjoy the pleasures of sin and be deprived of entering into those mansions of rest?

Dear reader, if you have no hope of heaven and eternal happiness, it is high time that you should begin. Come out from among the world, and cast your lot with the people of God, for the world with all the lust thereof will pass away. "Lay up your treasures in heaven, where moth doth not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal." Then brethren and sisters let us all prove faithful. So live that we may all meet in these beautiful mansions above, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more.

"Friends, friends, oh shall we meet,
Where the spoiler finds no prey,
Where lovely things and sweet
Pass not away."

Pleasure Rules the Hour.

In church and state, in city and country, at home and abroad, in domestic and social life, everywhere, men are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.—1 Tim. 3 : 4.

Was there ever such a pleasure-loving age as this? We fully believe there never was. This is one of the prominent signs and characteristics of the last days.—"In the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof." 2 Tim. 3 : 1—5.

This seems to imply that at the time spoken of the last days, this wonderful love of carnal pleasure should predominate. The fulfillment of this prophecy is very apparent at this time, and who is so blind that he cannot see it?

We may not have reached the culmination, or, in plainer words, the most elevated position of this pleasure-loving spirit in the professed church; but that it is now to an extent never before known, cannot be denied by any intelligent, careful observer who is properly posted in the history of the past. And this spirit is steadily on the increase from day to day, and from year to year. Such passages of scripture as the following are to an alarming extent practically ignored. "The end of all things is at hand—Be ye therefore sober and watch unto prayer—The grace of God which bringeth salvation hath appeared unto all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts we should live soberly, righteously and Godly, in this present world—Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation—Be sober, be vigilant, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear—Wherefore come out from among them and be separate, saith the Lord."

Therefore let us watch unto prayer; yea, let us watch and be sober, for the Lord calleth. Amen.

"A Home without a Mother."

How lonely and desolate is a home without a mother! How many of us have experienced the sad trial of losing a beloved mother? I can sympathize with all the young who are left motherless in this world.

We should not despise our mother when she is old.—Age may waste a mother's beauty, strength, limbs, senses and estate, but her relation as a mother is as the sun when it goeth fortht in its brightness—for it is always in the meridian and knoweth no evening.—She may be grey-headed, but her motherly relation is the same.

Alas! how little do we appreciate a mother's tenderness while living! How heedless are we of her anxieties and kindnesses! But when she is dead, and in the cold dark mansions of the tomb; yea, when the cares and coldness of the world come withering the tender feelings of our bereaved hearts; then it is we think of the mother we have lost. Yes how often when alone do we hear the sweet voice of our mothers! But alas! when we come to ourselves, it is only imagination. And oft when lying down to sleep we are disturbed by our minds wandering back to childhood's happy hours, when our loving mother was with us.—

What is a home without a mother? What are all the joys we meet, when her loving smiles no longer greet us? The days are long, the nights are drear, and time moves slowly on. O how few childhood's pleasures when mother's gentle form is gone! Things we prize are first to vanish. We miss her kind and willing hand. What is a home without a mother?

Death.

There is but a breath of air and a beat of the heart betwixt this world and the next. And in the brief interval of painful and awful suspense, while we feel that death is present with us, that we are powerless, and the faint pulsation here is but the prelude of endless life hereafter, we feel in the midst of the stunning calamity about to befall us, the earth has no compensating good to mitigate the severity of our loss. But there is no grief without some benificent provision to soften its intenseness. When the good and lovely die, the memory of their good deeds, like moonbeams on the stormy sea, lights up our darkened heart and lends to the surrounding gloom a beauty so sad, so sweet, that we would not, if we could, dispel the darkness that environs it.

The Savior's Invitation.

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest; take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." Matthew 11: 28, 29, 30.

These are words spoken by our Savior when he was here upon this earth of sorrow. They are words which extend an invitation to all who are weary and worn down with the load of sin and folly; for he says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden; and I will give you rest."

Now sinner let me call on you for a moment: you who oftentimes labor under your load of sin. Your enjoyment in the world is vain. The faithful Christian has many consoling promises in the Word of God to strengthen him, and to build him up on his journey toward the heavenly canaan; and, at the end of his time, has the promise of hearing the welcome plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." But O sinner, where are your promises in the word of God? God's word promises to you, if you die in your sins, that where God and Christ are, there you can not come. Then hear the Savior. Come and forsake all, and turn to Christ, and he will give rest to your soul. "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand: I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than dwell in the tents of wickedness. "So said David and Moses esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt. Be persuaded, then, to commence the work of the salvation of your soul, and come to him who this long while has been saying, "Come unto me."

An Answer.

"Is there any difference between a holy kiss, and a kiss of charity?"

The above query is not without its difficulties. At first sight we would conclude that there is no difference; but when we enter into a more close examination, there appears a gleaming of some variance.

When anything is immaculate, or free from sin, it is holy. How then can a kiss be holy when the participants are sinful? Impossible. No kiss then from sinners can be holy. Paul's words "Salute oneanother with a holy kiss and a kiss of charity was spoken to believers and evidently applies to them; but the question is, will the Gospel allow us to extend it to others outside of the church. We have plainly shown, that the holy kiss cannot be extended to those out of the church, for that would destroy its holiness at once. Then comes in the kiss of charity. Charity according to Worcester is, good affection; love; tenderness; kindness; good will, &c. So we discover a wide difference between holiness and charity: so if we feel that good affection; love &c. toward our fellow men in or out of the church, I think the Gospel will not forbid saluting them with a kiss, (as an external sign), if it would be accepted by them.

I have not written for popularity but to call forth more light on the subject. And to do this I will propound another question. Since we are all one in Christ Jesus, how is it that brother and sister do not salute each other with a kiss, when we are told to salute one another?

JAMES A. SELL.

Enjoyment or Sorrow.

What one enjoys may be another's sorrow. This statement is fully illustrated by the experiences of the lovers of Christ on the one hand and the despisers of the Savior on the other, as anywhere else. While the true Christian sits at the feet of the Great Teacher, like Mary, to catch the words of wisdom and grace that may fall from his lips, and feels, welling up from his soul the tenderest and most precious emotions of love and joy, the skeptic and the worldling, in the prejudice and blindness of their unbelief, scorn to hear those from the Son of God, beholding no beauty in Him that they should desire Him. So likewise when the cause of Christ is winning to itself new friends, the people of the Lord are filled with unutterable gladness, and their lips break forth in joy. But the enemies of Jesus curl the lips in derision and hasten to inaugurate new methods of opposition, or to revive old ones. Satan attempts the revival of his work when the work of the Lord prospers. Wicked men are sometimes angry, even when the truth as it is in Jesus is converting souls. How widely do the experiences of these two classes of persons differ! And how radical must be the difference in their characters in the sight of God! What the one enjoys the other hates; what fills the one with the sweetest delights presses the cup of bitterness to the lips of the other. But what is so bad to contemplate is the appalling truth that such differences will continue to exist in the future state. Between the two classes the great gulf will forever remain impassable! How important! Sinful mortals reflect, repent and seek a preparation to dwell with the pure and the blest in heaven.

Answer to Query.

Will some Brother or Sister give an explanation of 1st Corinthians 3: 15. The passage reads as follows: "If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire,"

JOSEPH WEAVER.

Answer. Let it be understood that the fire referred to is a fire of trial and not of purification, as is evident from the 13th verse. Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it; because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is.

The design of the fire referred to here, being to try men's works and not to purify them from impurity; neither the fire of purgatory, nor any other fire designed to purify can be referred to. The gold, silver, and precious stones being of an incombustible nature will not burn and these probably represent the doings of believers which are altogether right—right in their motives, and also right in the manner in which their motives were carried out; while wood, hay, and stubble are combustible, and these may represent the doings of believers who will not be accepted by the Lord when their works are tried. There may be persons who have been converted, and who have really built on Christ as a foundation, and yet some of their works will not be accepted by the Lord. A minister may sometimes preach, not from the holy motive which should ever actuate him, but from other motives. Now such preaching will be burned, or will not be accepted by the Lord as a truly good work.

So with prayers: and so with many things which believers may do. They may not be so sincere in doing them as to make them acceptable to the Lord, yet the general tenor of their lives may be good, although there may be many imperfections in them. So upon the whole they will be recognized as Christians, though much that they will not be accepted by the Lord, but be burned. They will be saved as by fire; that is, they will see their errors and imperfections when they come to die, and will then repent of their failings and seek the favor of Lord. They will hasten to become better prepared to meet the Lord, and will just have time to do so before death overtakes them, and they will thus be saved with difficulty as people save property out of the house when the house is on fire. They shall be saved; "yet so as by fire."

Reflections.

Spring has appeared again. And as we look out over the fields, we see the beautiful green grass, and the fruit trees which are blossoming for fruit. The flowers of the garden are bursting forth in all their loveliness and beauty. All these are the blessings of God strewn around us. We cannot thank him enough for his goodness which he has bestowed upon us.

We are yet on the land and amongst the living, enjoying the blessings which he places before us while we are upon the earth; and O should we not prepare ourselves for the eternal world, that we may enjoy the things which God has prepared for us in heaven; for we know that the time will soon come when we will have to leave this world. Then how necessary that we prepare for death! For to-day we may live, and to-morrow be laid under the cold clods of the valley. To-day let us hear the voice which calls us to enter and labor in the Vineyard of the Lord. And O how thankful we ought to be for the goodness of God in this that he "gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life."

I hope to meet you all in heaven.

Living to Christ.

Brethren, let us aim, as St. Paul did, to live to Christ. How bright the halo which surrounds the memory of those who have done so! Trace them in thought throughout past ages; the early Christians, amid constant persecution from Jew and Gentile; the saints of the middle ages—those lights shining in darkness, of whom the world was not worthy; the great Reformers who were not afraid to lift up their testimony against prevailing errors and corruptions, and boldly to come forth from the great apostasy; Christian philanthropists of later times, whose love to Christ has caused them to devote themselves to his service in various ways who have been the means of reviving the work of true religion at home, and who have gone forth to proclaim the gospel abroad, and sought to undo the heavy burdens which still existed in lands enjoying Christian light and liberty. How dear to us is the memory of men like these! how sacred are their names! how bright the example which they have left us! And why? They lived to Christ; they loved, and honored, and served him, and counted all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of his name.

———:o:———

We turn to the history of the past and see men becoming converts to Christianity even while gazing upon the burning stake and the more terrible tortures of martyred Christians, with the probability, yea, certainty that such profession would subject them to the same cruel fate, and then we ask, what must be the condemnation of sinners of this favored age who neglect the gospel though assured that its acceptance would cost them neither suffering nor loss?

A Sad Case.

Some time ago we received a letter from a sister requesting us to cease sending her the Companion, as her husband is so much opposed to it that he takes the papers out of the office before she can get them. She then says, "It is depriving me of a great comfort. I can now neither go to meeting nor read of the Brethren. How shall my soul be fed when shut out from all light? Remember me in your prayers."

This is a pitiable case, and one that should be prayed for. Being deprived of meeting with the brethren and sisters in the public assembly, this sister sought a few crumbs of the "Bread of Life" through the Companion. This is denied her by an authority which she has vowed to respect. The husband no doubt has his reasons for the course he is pursuing. Perhaps he fears the Companion will bring heresies into his house. Well, he is not so much to be blamed for that. Some of our brethren are not much less scrupulous. At all events, the sister is under obligations to her husband, which may require her to bear much. The best she can do is to bear all patiently, and give double diligence to the Scriptures. Search them, for in them is your life. Let your Christian life and conduct be in strict conformity with your profession, and your profession according to the word of God. Always return good for evil, and thus show that you really love God, and ere long you will have the pleasure of seeing your husband endeavoring to relieve himself of the coals of fire that have been heaped upon his head through the kindness of a Christian wife.

In our next we expect to give a full explanation for the peculiar "make up" of this paper. In the meantime we wish our readers to notice that the two sheets make up the one paper; and see to it that they get them both and preserve them.

Editorial Correspondence.

SALEM, VA., May 18, '69.

D. B. M.: Dear Brother: The Standing Committee has decided that we dare not publish any Report of the proceedings of the Annual Meeting. Mark you: NOT ANY. You will therefore proceed to finish the paper with such matter as you have.

We are much aggrieved by this decision, but must submit. Our Reporter was on the ground, ready for action, but was not allowed to proceed. The expenses—which are all lost money now—will be about $40. Our readers will therefore know the reasons for the absence of the Report. No more.

H. R. HOLSINGER.

From Brother Loehr.

Dear brethren and sisters: In visiting you last winter I gave a promise to say something through the Companion about my visit; but since our coming home on the 5th of April, I was prevented from writing anything else but letters to individuals. I would, therefore, in the first place, give my heartfelt thanks to all the brethren and sisters for kindness shown to me and my companion; and and also feel thankful to God for the zeal and love that I found existing universally among the Brethren, which revived my spirit very much; but I noticed here and there, causes working against "the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace." And the brethren will not be offended, if I here, in all kindness, touch upon those causes, and try to prescribe a remedy.

First, then, I will mention the grand evil of mixing with the children of this world's kingdom; whereas, the members of the Body of Christ should be separated, and keep themselves uncontaminated.

Some brethren, since the war has ended, have fallen back to the custom of voting at political elections, and thereby cause grief, not remembering what Paul said about grieving or offending our brother. Now stop this and the offense will cease; and neither you, nor anybody else, will lose anything. But much will be gained in harmony and love.

There is in the second place perhaps too much tenacity shown by ministering brethren for what is termed the ancient order of the Church whereas, times and circumstances have changed very much, and we are brought under the necessity of changing in a certain degree with them. For instance—where one sermon every two weeks, was sufficient to produce a good effect, say forty or fifty years ago, it is of no or very little avail in these our times of redoubled energy by the adversary. I know the time when one plowing the new soil, (if ever so shallow,) produced a copious crop; but now since the lands have become older, repeated and deeper plowing are positively necessary to insure a good crop. The thinking may know the cause, and apply them to the Gospel field, and then become more liberal and the effect will become visible everywhere.

There is another cause working against the Church, or rather effects the good will and free flow of love among the members of the Body of Christ, and that is, the inequality that is felt everywhere in regard to free-will donations for Church and charitable purposes. It is said every where that in most instances the wealthiest give comparatively the least. Now this ought not to be so, and if properly considered would not be so. For all Christians must know that all they are and have is the Lord's; and if they do not devote the same to his honor and glory, they will and must come out lacking in the time of reckoning. Awful indeed must be the situation, in that great day of accounts, of him whom God had blessed in this life with abundance of spiritual and natural food, if he has withheld of his abundance from those who were in want. And as it is our duty as watch men on the walls of Zion to warn every one of the danger that he or she may be in, and to show a way of escape, I would therefore, propose a plan by which every one might know what his or her part would be according to arithmetical figures, which plan is in practice in some churches which I visited, and it is said, works admirably well.

Let brethren be appointed to go from brother to brother, say at the time of yearly visit, and take down the valuation of every brother's property as made by himself in justice.—Then let each pay monthly, or quarterly, a percentage as may have been agreed upon. If this valuation is made justly, upon true principles, then every one pays as God has prospered him, and every bad feeling between the rich and the poor will be removed, and love can flow freely from member to member on the score of equality.

A fourth cause of disunion may be mentioned in this, that the promise made before baptism to take the gospel steps as found in Matthew 18th, is too much neglected. Let this also be attended to in strict accordance with the word, and the good effects will be appreciated by all.

Now, in conclusion, I would say to all my brethren and sisters in the Lord. Don' tbe discouraged. Don't be dismayed if adversities and trials come in your way. Don't give up the ship—look to the helmsman—cast your anchor on a firm foundation, and all will be safe in the end. Paul said all must remain in the ship else there is no safety.

Your brother in the gospel.

An Inquiry.

Brother Holsinger:—I wish to inquire through the Companion whether there are any brethren living in Nebraska; and if so, in what counties do they live. I live in Dixon Co.—There are no Brethren living in this part of the country. We are very lonesome. We would like to know where the nearest church is?

JOHN W. FISHER.

Ionia, Dixon Co., Nebraska.

NOTE:—We have brethren living at Fontanelle, Dodge Co. Neb., and by addressing brother S. A. Honberger at that place you can get satisfactory information. We have subscribers also in Richardson and Sarpy counties.—E.

Answers to Correspondents.

SIMON B. STUCKEY, Paris, Ohio. The money you send is sufficient.

JACOB BUTTERBAUGH, North Manchester, Ind. The books cost you only $4.25. What is to be done with the remaining 75 cents?

JOHN CLINGINGSMITH, Barry, Ills. We supply the CHRISTIAN HARP at publisher's prices, $3.00 per dozen. See advertisement on this page.

John U. Slingluff, Fairviewville, Pa. At what Post Office does Charles Smith get his paper?

Jacob Zuck, Jr., Millersville, Pa. We cannot tell why the Companion fails to reach you. If the other subscribers at your place get their papers, yours certainly is at your P. O.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

The Broken Pane.

During the pleasant month of May, as I was quietly sitting by the wonted window in my room, engaged in my accustomed avocation, a little incident occurred which called up in my mind thoughts too impressive to pass by. It was a fine warm day, the sky lightly overcast with a thin hazy mist, the gentle breath of heaven stirring the buds and blossoms, making all nature effulgent with life, and as I sat there musing over the passing scenes, listening to the delightful melody of the warbling birds, a sound more startling, broke in on my ear and aroused me from the spell of revery into whioh I had unconsciously fallen; it was the sharp sound of a pane of glass in the window before me, as there was a fissure opened across the entire pane. "There," thought I, "what can this mean? Can the building in all its massive architecture with a living throng of youthful beings of almost every name and grade in society, in its upper story be about to fall and crush them out of existence? Oh, no! it is comparatively new yet; so this is a mistaken idea. Can it only be settling more solid upon its foundation, and thus fasten the sash and cause it to break? I tried the sash with my hand. It was loose. Then this could not be the cause. Then what can it be? There it has been in its place serving the purpose intended for years. The frosts of winter have gathered on it and disappeared again, and left it without a mar; the scorching heat of summer has been there, the sun has poured against it his noontide ray, yet firm amid all this, it has yielded strikingly on this genial spring day, when there was no visible sign of pressure to destroy or deface its smooth surface. So, thought I, it is with man; often in the pleasant, happy hours of life, when the sky of his understanding seems to be a little hazy and the mist of the world is gathering between him and the object that of all others ought to engage his attention, yet he has no clear view of it, or does not wish to have, for life with him is just in its blushing bloom, and he thinks that he has seen the stern winter of adversity, and the hot scorching sun of some malignant fever, and it did not stop the living tide or snap in sunder the vibrating chain, and certainly there can be no danger now in this calm time. Just then the thought came over; as snapped the glass and startled me in my revery, so snaps the precarious thread of our existence and startles us, when we find ourselves standing at the executive bar of Jehovah, with a very scanty preparation to make reply to what will be brought to our remembrance then. Yet we are apt to think that this tabernacle in which the soul abides is yet young. It is united by strong sinews which are gaining strength every day as we settle down in life into manhood or womanhood; as life advances to middle age the body is better qualified to stand the storm and pressure of life, and it can't fall now to crush all the brilliant prospects; the young renown; the hopes which spring forth exultant from the animated breast to cheer us in the path of life; nor yet crush in its fall those bright ambitious anticipations which leap forth from the mind equipped for the mazy battle of life in all its intricacy, as was the fabled Minerva as she came forth from the head of Jupiter released by one stroke of Vulcan's axe, fully panoplied for the war of the gods.

Dear reader, young or old, noble or ignoble, professor of religion or nonprofessor; did you ever think of this? If not, think of it now for once, and ask the soul that is within you, that leaps at the thought of immortality, how is it with thee, oh my soul? Are you prepared when stern destiny lays this form quite low into the dust, whether that be in the spring of life, in strong development of middle age, or in declining life when the sun is well nigh down the western horizon, to enter upon the realities of eternity and say all is well? If you can't answer this affirmatively think of yourself and your yet worse condition, for it may be with you as with the glass, in a pleasant peaceful day when you think all is well, all peace and happiness, then will sudden destruction come and send thy disembodied spirit to meet thy God. And happy for you if at peace with him.

J. P. HETRIC.

Our Annual Meeting.

Perhaps no body of brethren has ever congregated together of a more interesting and important character than that which met here on the 18th of May. The political status of the two great sections of our Republic, for nearly half a century, rendered it somewhat hazardous for a body of neutrals like our Brotherhood, to meet in any considerable numbers on Southern territory, with such large representations from the Northen States. The known antagonism of the Church to the institution of human bondage, rendered even us of the South obnoxious to the local governments; how much more those of the North who were suspected of complicity in every anti-slavery movement.

But the great question that agitated our country so long, affecting our prosperity as a nation so seriously, and retarding the progress of the principles of the Church, is happily and finally decided, and we in our Council just past, enjoyed some of the fruits resulting therefrom. Large numbers of our members from distant States, met us, for the first time, in our own country. They came over the heretofore ominous Mason's and Dixon's line, assured that no minion of slavery was ready and willing to watch their movements, and disturb their peace by useless and provoking surveilance.

They came also with happy hearts and joyful faces to greet their brethren of the South with the christian salutation at their homes, to worship with them at their altars, and to break bread with them at their tables. And they came with a conscience void of offence.

When the Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Episcopalians and Catholics of the North, were slaughtering their Southern brethren on the battle-field by thousands, and those of the South were slaughtering those of the North, the Brethren were in their closets praying our Heavenly Father that we might continue steadfast in the holy faith of the gospel; and we, sustained by the great Head of the Church and our brethren's prayers, preserved our integrity and maintained our testimony against the wickedness of war. With this record in our favor they had nothing to fear in meeting us, nor we in meeting them. Our sons and brothers had not slain theirs. Their sons and brothers had not slain ours, nor desolated our homes.

We had no long catalogue of offences against each other to cancel by the old, time-worn entreaty "let us bury the past." In reference to miseries inflicted in war, we had nothing to bury. We let self-constituted christendom fight her battles alone, and we let her repent and entreat forgiveness alone. We have no part nor lot in her crimes; we will not partake in her fornications. Our brethren could look with unblanched faces into the dismal graveyards of the poor Southern soldiers, and say in triumph, "shake not thy gory locks at us, thou canst not say we did it; and we could take them by the hand and truthfully say we are not murderers of your neighbors, the author of your widows and orphans.

The Spirit that was manifested by the brethren in council was all that the most devout could wish, and in strict accord and with the character of the primitive Christians. Love, forbearance, patience, meekness, brotherly-kindness (with all the good fruits of a converted heart)seemed to characterize the entire proceedings, which, fairly considered, cannot fail to impress strongly and favorably the minds and hearts of those who witnessed them, but who are not of us. It is cheering in these times of party strife, contention, enmity, wrath,&c., to see so respectable a body impregnated with the principles of the New Testament, and working together so harmoniously, so alike the brethren of the Lord Jesus. Truly his prayer to his Father for the unity of his people was answered in our behalf. It was said bythose who had attended many councils of the brethren that they never witnessed such unanimity. What impression the proceedings of the meeting and the character and appearance of the assembly made on the spectators we are not authorized to say. The business that occupied that body was of a different nature from that that is done in other bodies. Ours partakes more of the character of a judicial body, after the pattern of that which met in Jerusalem in the days of the Apostles. Our attention is principally occupied in preserving union and harmony in the church on such questions, such texts of scripture, that are not regulated and confirmed by a "thus saith the Lord." We have no vast systems of missions to support, and no proud and haughty priesthood to mantain in luxury and ease. Our humble heralds of the gospel devote much of their time to the duties of their calling, and still provide for themselves and those with them, as did the Apostle. We think we have in the wilderness (spiritual)of the United States, ample and abundant harvests for the service of Christs messengers.

Concerning the character of the assembly, as it appeared to those without we assuredly presented an uncouth spectacle. In one of the most aristocratic counties of the State, our appearance could not commend us to their favor and affection. They may have pronounced us a plain, unassuming people, but would more naturally have attributed it to a want of taste or stupidity, than to meekness and humility. Thus men unconsciously call evil, good, and good, evil. We are willing however to be called an uncouth people, by the world. It is a good testimony. It sounds melodious to our ears. It testifies that we are not of them. It assures us that we are related to Christ.

Yet so large an assemblage of the faithful, and so much apostolic preaching as we were blessed with, cannot fail to produce some fruit to the glory of God. I am encouraged to hope that many of the lowly ones in the world will be persuaded that we have the words of eternal life, and embark in our humble but strong ship for the port of Paradise. Our beloved heralds labored arduously for our spiritual interests, and we can just mark this as an era in our lives. Such a great feast of love we never enjoyed, and it is not the lot of mortals to enjoy often. (I refer, in my own case, to the seasons of meetings before the assembling of the council.) In these we had a foretaste of that joy unspeakable," erved for the faithful in the world of glory which shall ever end ; and encouraged by the bright visions of ne future we could say in raptures, "one day in thy ourts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a oor-keeper in the house of the Lord than dwell in the ents of wickedness."

The dark and gloomy cloud of disruption that hang threatningly over us, is to the great joy of us all assed away, and we think that the sun of peace and nion shines brighter because of it. It will doubtless ffect good results. In the first place it will discourge the spirit of "progress and improvement" that tend- to agitate and confuse us heretofore. This spirit as accomplished much in the affairs of this world, but s touching the duties relative to our Master's kingdom, is extremely dangerous. Whenever we attempt to ake improvements on the workmanship of Jehovah we ofully deface it. Our faintest touch defiles it. Zeal s commendable but let it be according to knowledge. nd our knowledge received, not from the world, or from so called christendom, but from the holy scripures, the soul and essence of true wisdom.

Secondly; it will counteract the natural and powerul tendency to cherish the traditions of the fathers.— We have something to fear from that source. It is ery difficult to resist the temtations to cherish with rvor, time-honored and long-loved customs. They beome imperceptably almost as dear to us as the scripures themselves, and it requires an effort strong nough to dismember our natural body, to disentangle urselves from it. We hope therefore that the supposed danger was only a blessing in disguised ; that

Behind a frowning Providence,
God hid a smiling face.

Our meeting is now past, and we must return to the lern conflicts of this life. When we are assembled toether, encouraged by the presence and conversation of r brethren, we have a respite, partially, from the temtions of the devil. Our minds and hearts are so uch and so devotedly engaged in spiritual excercises, at there is little encouragement for our enemy to apoach us with his wiles and witcheries. These are the sting places, the inns, that John Bunyan the famous reamer made his "Pilgrim" to enjoy in his "Progress" the Heavenly City.

But when our seasons of joy are over, as all must be oner or later, and we return to our secular duties, we y expect him to return with us, and to ply his trade industriously as ever he is want to do. He is en ged in perpetual warfare with us, and he only leaves return with redoubled fury, if we are not on our rd. The natural desire for the perishable things of e poor world will lead us over many a pitfal of adversary, if we rest our eyes on his pretty baubles, suffer our hearts to covet them. Our lives are not unshine. Interspersed along our pathway are seasof gloom and rejoicing, of doubt and of faith, of warmness and of ferver, of weakness and of strength, faintness and of boldness. We have to fight the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye, and the pride of life. The world, the flesh, and the devil, are our life long and implacable enemies, and, remember brother, remember sister, they only that overcome are accounted worthy. We may be victorious in many a conflict, and enjoy many a happy season of love, such as that we have just enjoyed, yet, they only are saved who endure unto the end. We may enjoy the society of the faithful, and be numbered with them here on earth, yet, without the soul-saving oil in our lamps, we cannot go into the guest chamber when the bridegroom cometh.

Disappointments overtake us and we are tempted to murmer. Murmer not. In patience possess ye your souls. Misfortunes and disasters assail us and we are cast down. Paul was cast down, but his comfort was, he was not destroyed, and that is our comfort, and we can rejoice with him in God who giveth us the victory through His Son. These things are blessings in disguise. They are the Christian's richest treasures because they show him the vanity of this poor world, and unite him closer to the great Protector. They enable him to know more of the purity of his love, for every adverse providence is accompanied with grace in exact proportion thereto. If every desire of our hearts was gratified we would too soon forget our dependence on Him. Our hearts would become surfeited with the things of this life, and our fate, a most miserable destruction.

Before closing our reflections on the subject of this article, we desire to express our regret that some of our fellow pilgrims are yet entrammeled with the habiliments of this world. Ah! comrade and heir of Heaven, what is there so enticing, so captivating, in this wicked world that you should count its unholy admiration? Why should we covet the favor and praise of the ungodly, and put to shame the meek and humble Savior? Why should we try to avoid the jeer and scoff of the disbelievers by encouraging and patronizing the vain and frivolous, ever-changing fashions that delight and intoxicate a crooked and perverse world? Is the praise of the unrighteous more dear and acceptable than the praise of the Church? Will we ever convert the world from its soul-destroying extravagance and intemperance, by patronizing these frivolities?

Another more serious consideration is; shall we be responsible for the guilt of leading our brethren and sisters from the pathway of humility into these excesses? Shall it be said in the future that the vain fashions of the world were first introduced intothe church by me? Brother, answer this question. Sister answer this question. Try to comprehend its terrible meaning. Try to estimate its dreadful consequences. We have always been accounted a plain and humble people. It is a precious reputation.— It is the glory of the church. Shall we now barter our pure and spotless robes of humility, the garments that Jesus wore, for the filthy rags of wickedness and folly? Shall we clasp hands with the proud and wicked over the grave of humility, the Christian's diadem, and exterminate from the church the very elements that constitute a church? Beloved, a reformation is indispensable. Many of us are fashioned more after the likeness of the world, than the glorious body of Christ, the Church. We are not the servants of our Lord when our hearts are with the world. God grant us grace to reform.

The Praying Mother.

Can we pray too much? No, we cannot. God likes to hear us pray; he is never tired of listening to us when we pray aright. Is he not kind? Men are soon tired of hearing beggars ask for money, but men are not like God. When Jesus, the son of God, was in this world, he cured a great many people who were sick; he just spoke, and they were made well. Sometimes he wished to be alone, for Jesus was man as well as God, and he had need of food and sleep. One day he went into a house, and he did not want any body to know where he was gone. But people soon asked each other where he was, and they found out the place.

There was one poor woman who longed very much to see him. I do not think she had ever seen him, but she had heard of him. She had been brought up to worship idols; she did not belong to the people of Israel, who worshipped the true God. No, she was a poor heathen; but Jesus cares for the poor heathen, and you will see how kind he was at last to this woman. She had a little girl very ill at home. A wicked spirit, called a devil, tormented her. The mother knew that Jesus could make her little daughter well, so she went to the house where he was. I do not know whether Jesus was still in the house. I think he had come out of it, and was walking. His friends were with him.

There were twelve men who went about with Jesus from place to place, and he called them his friends and disciples. When the poor woman saw Jesus, she cried out, "Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David; my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil." Why did she call Jesus the son of David? David was a great king, who had long been dead, and Jesus was one of his children's children. Jesus liked to hear people call him the son of David. What did he say to this poor woman when she seemed so unhappy? He said nothing at all; so she went on crying out for mercy. The disciples did not like to hear the poor woman crying out, "Have mercy on me!" As they walked along with Jesus, the poor woman followed them with her cries, so the disciples went to Jesus, and said, "Send her away, for she crieth after us." How unkind this was. How selfish the disciples were. Instead of begging their Master to have mercy on the poor mother, they wanted him t tell her to go away. They knew she was a poo heathen, so they despised her.

But Jesus did not despise her; he loved he very much indeed. Yet at first he seemed un kind, for he said, "I am not sent but unto th lost sheep of the house of Israel." This poo woman was not an Israelite. Did she go awa when she heard Jesus speak in this way? No she did not; she came nearer than before; sh fell at his feet and worshipped him, saying "Lord help me." What a short prayer—onl three words! But it came from the heart; it wa such a prayer as God likes to hear; yet Jesu still seemed unkind, for he said, "It is not mee to take the children's bread, and cast it to dogs." Did he mean this poor woman was a dog, an that the people of Israel were his children? O no, he did not really think this woman was dog; he only spoke so that she might go o praying. But she said, "The dogs under th table eat of the children's crumbs." Was no that a meek answer, and a wise answer? Sh did not say she was not a dog; she meant to sa "If I am a dog, may I not have crumbs? Thoug you love the people of Israel best, yet you wil have pity on a poor heathen like me." This is what she meant to say. Jesus left her waitin no longer. He said to her, "O, woman, great i thy faith; go thy way; the devil is gone out o thy daughter." So the woman went home, an found her daughter lying on the bed. The dev had left the girl at the very moment when Jesu spoke. Then the girl grew quiet and easy; bu it seems she was weak and tired, and want rest.

Could the mother ever forget what Jesus h said? "O, woman, great is thy faith." Jesus h praised her. Why was he so much pleased wi her? Because she believed that he was ki and merciful. Jesus likes to have us belie that he is kind. Whatever happens, we oug always to think "Jesus is kind." Did he not for us on the cross? Does he wish to hurt u Are you in great pain? Still remember Je is kind; he will hear you if you pray to him.

You may read the history of the pray mother in Matthew 15: 21—28; Mark 7: 2 30.

Idle words.

By E. Umbaugh.

Idle words! Do we ever think about them as we should? Do we ever put forth an effort to keep quiet when we have nothing of importance to talk about? Perhaps we too often let that unruly member have full play, without even attempting to bridle it, before we see the influence and evil effect it has upon those around us. How often do we hear, even ministers of the Gospel indulging in vain and idle words, jesting, &c. When we hear such things from those who should be a light to the world, we are almost persuaded to believe that they are only professors of religion, and try to act upon life's stage the part of a christian in order to gain worldly honor. O brother, be careful! If you are in the habit of jesting, or indulging in any other variety of light-minded conversation, abandon it immediately and discountenance it in your fellow man. Do not fear that you become less popular by so doing. You will lose nothing in the estimation of the wise and good, and if you should fail to find quite as many friends among those who have determined to continue in their wicked ways, remember that your blessed Savior was despised before you were. What an exemplary life was that of the Savior! Ah yes, the christian must forsake his passions and desires when they conflict with a holy life. We must never attempt to gain friends by sacrificing true Christian principle. Many, perhaps those whom we dearly love, will look upon us as wanting sociability if we abandon those carnal propensities which are so pleasing; but how shallow must be the contemplation, of such persons, upon the principles of Christianity. Let us not forsake holinessbecause of these things, but let us rather unravel before the eyes of the world the beauty and propriety of suffering our thoughts, words and actions to harmonize with those of our dear Savior. By so doing we will be more Christ-like, and those who think deeply and solemnly will have more confidence in us, seeing that we are acting as though we really believe that there will be a day of Judgment. No one who will read Ephesians v:4, will fail to respect the holy conversation of the christian. Let us frequently read Paul's letter to the Ephesians, and contemplate upon it, and see whether we will not be made to feel that all our conversation should be holy. We need not be afraid of ever being condemned, by the great Judge on account of having adhered too closely to divine revelation. May love and union be a peculiarity to mark Christ's holy people, upon earth, in order that they may be finally transmitted to the Christian's Elysium above. Remember, dear friend, the glorious prospect of the holy. To them

"It is not death to fling
Aside this sinful dust,
And rise on strong exulting wing
To live among the just."

Premature Interments.

As a medical man, I feel it my duty to advise the readers of the Companion, and all others, not to bury their dead, as a general thing, sooner than from 36 to 48 hours after death; as there are a number of cases on record revealing the fact of life reviving after interment. And on subsequent occasions when the remains were taken up for re-interment, it was discovered that some had turned in their coffin; some had torn their shrouds, and others pulled out their own hair. We would here relate some instances, but they are too appalling. In case decomposition has commenced, whether it be soon or late, there is then no danger of a renewal of life this side of the great Resurrection. But as long as the corpse be warm and limber, it should not be interred, lest the moisture and gasses of the earth resuscitate the living powers. But if Cholera, Yellow Fever, or Small Pox, be the cause of death, a retrograde of the Tissues will very soon commence. Moreover, they being highly contagious, early interment will be necessary.

Yours in brotherly love.

The Holy Mountains.

While I was reading in the Companion, about Damascus, my thoughts ran back to times long, long ago, when the Lord placed the sons of Jacob in the land of Canaan and told them that this land was his, but that he would give it to them, and it should not be sold forever. But if they got in debt they might sell it for the space of 49 years; but dare not sell it forever because it was the Lord's, showing that at any of the 49 years it could be redeemed. And we are inclined to think that it will be redeemed according to the redemption law, when he will redeem both Israel and his land, which in the Scriptures is sometimes called Holy Land; and sometimes Palestine or promised land.

There is not a country in the known world that so well rewards the trouble of a careful study as does the Holy land, especially Jerusalem and its surrounding cities and mountains. Jerusalem was built on three hills called Mount Moriah, Mount Zion, and Mount Akra. Mount Moriah is the place David offered up sacrifice to stay the plague, which was caused by his numbering the people. It was on Mount Moriah that Abraham offered up Isaac. There Isaac was slayed in heart. This mount was afterwards crowned with the house of the Lord; and on this mount was the palace of the high priest, where our blessed Lord received the sentence of death, of whom Isaac was a figure.

On Mount Zion David built him a house, which formerly belonged to the inhabitants of Jebus. But David took the castle of Zion and it was called the City of David. It was in this battle that David thirsted for the waters of Bethlehem, the place of his birth. But for the transgression of his people, it has been plowed as a field, and Jerusalem became heaps. But it is promised that he will yet comfort Zion. He will comfort all her waste places, and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord. "Awake, put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garment, O

Jerusalem, the Holy City; for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised."

Much might be said of Zion, the place where Christ will be seated on his father David's throne, but we will pass on.

Next is Mount Olivet, a place memorable for many instances. This Mount seems to have been a place to which our Savior often resorted: it was at the Mount Olivet where he sent two disciples to bring him the colt that was tied, and they brought him to Jesus, and they cast their garments upon the colt and sat Jesus thereon. And as he was coming nigh at the descent of the Mount Olivet, the whole multitude began to rejoice, saying, "Hosanna in the highest: blessed be the coming kingdom of our father David, for they thought that Christ was now going to take the kingdom, sit on the throne of his father David, and judge the world. And as the Savior drew near, He beheld the city and wept over it. I believe he wept for three reasons; one was because of the destruction of that city which he gladly would have gathered together as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, but they would not. And another was on account of the disappointment of his disciples when he should be taken from them, who were now so greatly rejoicing over his triumphant ride into Jerusalem. And thirdly for the sin of the whole world, for which he was now soon to die. And to this Mount the Savior went, that dark and doleful night in which he was betrayed.—It was on that Mount he blessed his disciples, was last seen on earth, and from there he ascended up to heaven in a cloud. And upon that Mount we expect him to descend again, for it is written: his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mt. of Olives, which is before Jerusalem and the Mt. of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof.

Again; this Mt. is memorable for the thrilling record of the sweet singer of Israel, who crossed the brook Kedron and ascended up Mt. Olivet bare-footed and weeping as he went on his flight toward the Jordan, from his rebellious son Absalom.

Next is Mount Calvary, a place designed from all eternity to make manifest God's love for fallen man; it was to Mount Calvary the mournful procession advanced. And while the women were bewailing and lamenting him, Jesus turning unto them said: "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me; but weep for yourselves and for your children. He sought for no pity; if he had an angelic host would have wept over his agony; or had he prayed, as he said he could, a legion of angels would have been given him, which soon would have scattered his insulting foes. But no; his eye was fixed on the joy set before him, for which he endured the cross, despised the shame, and is now seated at the right hand of the Father. Knowing as he said that after a little while, the crown of thorns which was now placed on his brow would be exchanged for a diadem of glory, and the robe of mockery which now covered him would soon give place to a vesture on which is written: King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. It was Mt. Calvary that bore on its sides the salvation, the life, the light, and the hope of the whole world. It was there the Son of God poured forth his precious blood, that in his blood countless millions might wash their robes and make them white. He was there lifted up on the cross, to whom we are to look and be healed, at which sight the sun veiled itself in darkness and all nature wore a mourning garb; the solid rocks were rent in pieces, the veil also at the temple was rent from top to bottom; showing that the earthly high priest need now no more conceal himself behind it, to make atonement for sin; for now was made the great atonement for the whole world, of which their sacrifices were a shadow. Now the substance has come.

On the Fall of Man.

"And the Lord God said, Behold the man has become as one of us, to know good and evil. And now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever." Gen. 3: 22.

Now this seems evident, to confirm the belief that God had designed man should suffer from the beginning. For he says, Behold or look, the man is like us; he knows good from evil. Now, if he should eat of the tree of life, he would live forever; therefore he put him out of the place, and put a flaming sword there, so that man could not get at it. Now for proof of this assertion, let the following suffice.

Did he not place the trees in the garden? And he put the man there also, and told him: Of all the trees you may freely eat, but there is one of which if you eat you will die. He did not say to him, that there was one tree of which if he would eat, he would live forever. No, it seems this was not to be; but as soon as frail man began to know good from evil, God banishes him from the garden for fear he would get hold of that immortal tree of life.

Well, then things went on, men began to increase, both in wickedness and numbers, until God repented that he had made man. Gen. 6: 6, 7.

And there was only one man that found favor in the eyes of the Lord, and that was Noah. So he told this man to build an ark, and go into it; and that he was going to destroy the world. And it came to pass that the day arrived, when the world was to be destroyed. And the Bible tells me that every creeping thing was destroyed. Now if God had designed that wickedness and sin should cease, why did he not destroy them with the world? These are queries worth considering. Now Noah was righteous, and no doubt so were the rest of his family. But God be praised, he knoweth and doeth all things well. In the beginning of creation, God placed that tree of life out of our reach. But ever blessed be that name, "tree of life." He came to us, found us undone, without hope. He came, and if we eat of his fruit, we may yet live forever.

Then fellow-men, let us hasten to eat of its fruits while there is yet time; so that when the Lord God arrives in the garden, he will find us like good old Noah, righteous in our day and generation.

But sinner, if you are not thus prepared, when He cometh, I am afraid he will say in the language of the text: "Behold the man is become as one of us to know good and evil. Now for fear he comes into our kingdom and destroys it, with sin, let us shut him out and put him unto the place where he chooseth to remain; for we have offered, time and again, precious moments, & counsels for him to turn unto us and live; but he refused every invitation, at every warning, and now we will say to him, (Matt. 25: 41.) "Depart from me ye accursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." O friend! Please remember this. Go now and eat freely of the tree of life and live forever.

Thought.

In number 20 of Vol 5, appears a scriptural puzzle, and while some one will furnish an answer to it, I will make a few comments on "thought."

I most sincerely believe thought to be indispensably necessary to all Christians. It is impossible for a sinner to become a true Christian, unless he, like the prodigal, "comes to himself," thinks upon his ways, and upon his lost condition; but while the sinner must become a thoughtful person, the true child of God can be no otherwise; but his thought must be pure and holy. God must be "in all his thoughts." He will never feel satisfied in having his thoughts employed about the things of this world, neither will he feel willing to have them employed about his fellow's business. If we all would think more and speak less, we would be more apt to have our "house" filled, forbidding, therefore, the old "evil spirit" to return with the company of seven other ones more wicked than himself, which is so apt to be the case if we are not very thoughtful how we live. Thought is very strongly recommended in the OldTestament by the example of the faithful, and forcibly commanded by Jesus and the Apostles in the new. Who will always call into existence pure, holy, and heavenly thoughts? May we all become more thoughtful.

N. LONGANECKER.

Punishing Children.

In multitudes of cases parents make hasty and furious and utterly groundless charge against a child, which has so taken it aback that it could make no reply, and this has been taken as a tacit confession of guilt, and the next question proposed in fury is, "what did you do it for?" And the child being thus confused and more alarmed, cannot assume presence of mind and composure enough to make a denial, and as the only alternative, bursts into a kind of hysterical crying. Many parents are of such temperament that when a child cannot be induced to utter a word under scolding, they become more enraged, and utter threats which are a disgrace to civilization; we have heard them ourselves, from affectionate, indulgent and Christian parents, "I'll knock you down with a log of wood," "I'll break every bone in your body," "I'll beat you within an inch of your life," and other similar bestialities of expression from educated, civilized minds; at least they passed as such in the great world.

There is one safe rule applicable in the reproof of children; speak so low to them that no third person ten feet away could hear what was said. Angry feeling is intensified by a loud utterance. Another good rule is, to not reprove a child in the presence of a third person, or if so, let it be in a soft, low, affectionate tone. A third precaution, and it is not a minor one, either, is, do not reprove on the instant; wait a few hours, if not until the next day, or better still in many cases, defer it until the occasion is about to occur when the fault might likely be repeated. Any intelligent and observant housekeeper knows that if a steak is put on this morning and burnt to a crisp, bouncing up from the table, running into a kitchen, and blazing away at the cook is neither ladylike, nor wise, nor polite. But next morning, just before the steak is about to be cooked, be in the kitchen, and ask that it be not overdone as yesterday, with some word of encouragement; whatever servant is not managed in this way had better be dismissed. Now children are as ignorant as servants; the minds of both are weak and may be easily made perverse alike. Be assured, reader, that if you make it an inflexible rule never to scold above a whisper, you will never outrage your child's feelings, nor fracture its skull by a blow dealt in ungovernable fury.—Hall's Journal of Health.

For the Companion.

A Gem from the Path of Experience.

The intrinsic condition of the human heart is strangely wrapped up in the folds of obscuration; but its workings are manifest. Out of the heart are the issues of life. The fountain of life is internal, and flows outwardly as naturally as water flows from the springs of the Earth. As in the natural, even so in the Divine. If the fountain be pure, the stream will be pure. And if our hearts be right, our lives will be.—D. B. Mentzer.

An Approval and a Question.

In ReadingNo. 19 of the Companion I find an article on the subject of "words." The Sister Reasons well, and speaks very mildly, which is an item that many of us lack, both in writing and conversing : and in closing, she brings to mind, the important command, that Parents should bring up their children in the way they should go.

I will make one quotation from the Sisters well composed lines, and then ask a question.

"We know some dearly beloved brothers and sisters, who we believe have drank deeply of the fountain of living waters, and who have feasted long upon the hidden manna, and yet they cannot see the propriety of Sabbath Schools. We do not believe that even prejudice occupies any place within their breasts.—They conscienously hold their views; and could they be convinced they would yield."

The question is this : If we worship God according to the dictates of our conscience ; is it all that is required of us ? Will Sister M. A. Lear, or some one else, explain through the Companion.

R. YOUNG.

Silent Influences.

It is not the water-spout, but the nightly dew which freshens vegetation. It is not the flashes of lightning which matures our harvests, but the golden sunbeams and the quiet electricity which thrills in atoms, and which flashes in every ripening ear. Niagara, in all its thunderings, yields no fertility ; but the Nile, coming without observation, with noiseless fastness, overflows, and from under the retiring flood Egypt looks up again, a garner of golden corn. The world may be better of its moral cataracts and its spiritual thunderbolts, but the influences which do the world's great work, which freshen and fertilize it, and which are maturing its harvests for the garner of glory, are not the proud and potent spirits, but the patient and the persevering ; they are not noisy and startling phenomena, but the steady and silent operators. They are the Sunday schools, which line upon line, repeat the gospel lesson, and keep alive in the hearts of youthful millions some fear of God. They are the good and loving mothers, who begin with cradle hymns, and who try to make the sweet story of Jesus as dear and as memorable as their own voices. They are the indefatigable laborers in the cause of Temperance and other Christian reforms, who, day after day and year after year, are toiling to restore suffering humanity and crown it with the benedictions of God.

Religion Practical.

It is the office of religion not only to show the path of duty, but also to beget a disposition to pursue it.—It teaches truth by divine authority and excites a love for it in the human heart. The religion of Christ is not a dry, formal statement of doctrine, but a living inspiration imparted to all those who receive the truth in the love of it. The common distinction, therefore, which is drawn between doctrinal and practical religion, finds no support in the Bible itself. For that does not contain a solitary statement, whether historical, doctrinal, or prophetic, which is not intended to bear upon the actual life, and control the conduct as well as the opinions of men. All scripture is given by inspiration, that the man of God may be furnished and completed for every good word and work.

Some persons consider Christianity as scarcely anything more than an external institution, with visible rites and ceremonies, to be respected for their antiquity and supported for the sake of custom. To them the appointments of the sanctuary, the splendor of the service, and the rhetoric of the preacher are of the first and greatest importance.

Others treat the religion of Christ as though it were purely a philosophy , to be studied with no higher purpose than one would peruse the writings of a Plato or an Aristotle. For such persons, religion in all its forms, whether true or false, is attractive only in so far as it affords matter of speculation.

There are those who feel and confess the divine authority of the sacred Scriptures ; who delight in their study, and frequently become skilful in their interpretation ; but who treat the doctrines as a mathematician treats his problems or a draft player his men. They use them for intellectual gratification or wordy controversies, and seldom regard them with that personal reverence and devout affection which are due to the word of life. Again, there are others who seem to estimate Christianity as nothing more than a prohibition of certain conventional evils, or of certain personal vices. Such persons by maintaining a negative propriety of conduct, and thus securing the approbation and respect of the world, flatter themselves that they are filling up the measure of that duty which they owe to Christ.

All these different classes, we feel free in saying, have shockingly meagre and inadequate views of the nature and requirements of the gospel. Their little notions bear no more correspondence to the divine idea of Christ, than a grain of sand does to a mountain, or a piece of tinsel to the glory of a meridian sun.

The object and end of Christianity is to make man God-like—to put him in possession of all those traits or attributes of character which were exemplified in the person of Christ. Religion in its complete and highest sense ends in making men good that they may do good. It first begins within them a love of truth, of justice, of holiness, and then having thus qualified them for usefulness, it bids them do good and communicate, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased.

THE PROMISES.—The promises of the Old Testament are waves which urge each other on, to rise and fall in many a deliverance, until at length they break on the great shore of all safety, the salvation which is in Christ.

The Heavenly Land.

"A Better Country, that is, an heavenly."—Epistle to the Hebrews 11: 16.

I love to think of the heavenly land,
Where white-robed Angels are;
Where many a friend is gathered safe,
From fear, and toil, and care.

Chorus. There'll be no parting,
There'll be no parting,
There'll be no parting,
There'll be no parting there.

I love to think of the heavenly land,
Where my Redeemer reigns;
Where rapturous hymns of triumphs rise,
In endless, joyous strains.

I love to think of the heavenly land,
The Saints' eternal home;
Where palms, and robes, and crowns ne'er fade,
And all our joys are one.

I love to think of the heavenly land,
The greetings there we'll meet:
The harps—the songs forever ours;—
The walks—the golden streets.

I love to think of the heavenly land,
That promised land so fair.
O how my raptured spirit longs,
To be forever there!

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT

A few Thoughts to the Young.

"Remember now thy Creator, in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh when thou shall say, I have no pleasure in them. Eccl. 12, 1.

Soloman the wise man gave more instruction to the young than any other of the ancient writers. He gave them advice to obey their parents, and be subject to them. "Honor thy father and thy mother," which is the first commandment with promise, that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on the earth.

My dear young readers of the Companion: Let me give you a word of advice. You are under lasting obligation to your parents for the care and the trouble they had in bringing you up, keeping you out of bad company, always giving you good instructions and rules to go by, and teaching you to love God and keep his commandments.

"Son, give me thy heart," is the voice of inspiration. "Seek the Lord while he may be found; and call upon him while he is near." While you are young and your hearts are tender, then is the time to commence to serve the Lord; then you are near to God.

It is a fact that the longer you put off serving the Lord, the harder it will be for you to repent; and the farther you travel away from your Father's house, the farther you will have to come back again. For a good lesson on that point, read of the prodigal son, in the 15th chapter of the Gospel by Luke.

If you have come to the years of accountability, the Lord has called you. You cannot say you have never been invited to Christ. The Spirit says, Come; and the Bride says, Come; and whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely. Rev. 22: 17.

The Lord calls in many ways. Sometimes he takes a little brother by death, or a sister. Sometimes a dear father or mother. When he calls in this way, then it is a very loud and serious call.

To my young unconverted friends, let me, as a lover of your souls, give you a word of warning. Oh, "flee from the wrath to come," and lay hold on eternal life. "Procrastination is the thief of time." "To-day, if you hear his voice, harden not your hearts." The Lord's voice says To-day. But the Devil says, To-morrow: he tries to put you off like he did a Felix when Paul reasoned with him of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come. Felix trembled, and answered: "Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee." We have no record of that time ever coming. Many are the excuses of the children of men; and how trifling they are in comparison with the glory that is held in reservation for the people of God. You whose cheeks are in the bloom of health, how soon death may come and lay your visage low. Then your bodies must become food for worms. The windows of your bodies—those bright eyes—through which you behold the vanities of the world, worms will pass through. Solemn thought indeed.

Will you now take the friendly warning, and prepare for that great change, which sooner or later awaits us all. "It is appointed unto men once to die." There is no alternative; the decree is gone forth. Now let us be wise unto salvation. Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: "Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man."

JOHN W. MOATS.

Mt Morris, Ills.

A Manly Boy.

Though an old man I am very fond of nice children; but am often annoyed by the rudeness of naughty ones. For instance, it is quite annoying to be waylaid by unmannerly boys, catching hold of a man's carriage, and holding on without liberty. We have so many such unceremonious boys in our country, as to occasion no little apprehension for the future of society. But the boy whom I would now commend is of another style. His name I did not learn; but you will probably hear his name some day associated with some noble enterprise.

I had overtaken several nice looking boys on their way from school, when one of them very respectfully asked, "Sir, may I swing to your buggy?" His whole manner seemed so respectful, and so unlike the rank and file of his contemporaries, as to interest me at once. Reining my horse, I looked down into his face, all radiant with smiles, and said to him, "My little friend, you are so manly that you may get up and sit beside me." Upon which the little fellow responded, with the utmost pleasantry, "Oh, sir, here are two boys who have much farther to go than I have, please take them." Here was true magnanimity, combined with great pleasantry and politeness. My admiration was complete. He evidently had a generous heart under his little vest, and I hope that God has him in the formation state for something truly noble. Such are the boys from whom we look for great and good men.

And now, my little readers, I would have you understand that this was not one of Mr. Beecher's "impossible boys"—mere creatures of fancy. No, he was a genuine character. A generous and magnanimous boy is still to be found occasionally, however rare. Do but imitate this generous lad, boys, and admiring men will take you up to ride by their sides. More still, God will cause you to "ride upon the high places of the earth." And so soon as we can have enough of such boys, the millennium may be expected to dawn in their manhood.—U. Presbyterian.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Newspaper Extracts.

The following is from THE CRITIC, (Washington D. C.) of May 15, 1869. The Critic has for its motto: "Justice to all, partiality to none." In the notice below we think it has strictly adhered to its adopted principles.

A large delegation composed of members of the religious denomination commonly known as "Dunkers," arrived in this city yesterday, and are stopping at the Empire House. They are en route to salem Roanoake county, Virginia, to attend the Annual Conference of their association. It is supposed there will be nearly a thousand delegates in attendance from various parts of the Union. Those with whom we have conversed are principally from the States of Ohio, Illinois, and Pennsylvania. The term "Dunker" they consider one of derision, and among themselves are simply known as "Brethren." Simple in costume, accustomed to practice self-denial; peaceful, industrious, and economical in their habits—strongly devoted to agricultural pursuits and opposed to hostilities, they bear a striking rssemblance to the orthodox branch of the society of "Friends" generally called "Quakers." They have extensive socities in active co-operation with them in the Southern part of Virginia, and in North Carolina, and since the close of the war we learn that they have received large accessions to their ranks. During the rebellion, on account of their peculiar taste, they were sudmitted to considerable inconvenience and persecution. They rigidly adheared to their doctrines in favor of peace although some were compelled to yield to the necessities of the hour. The "Dunkers" have large settlements in certain portions of Pennsylvania. They believe in immersion, the washing of feet, and the lovefeast belongs to their customs. They are devoted te their religion, men of intelligence and learning; in their intercourse with each other exhibit a cordiality, an amity and gentleness of manner that seem to render them especially deserving of the title of "Brethren." The assemblage of so large a concourse at the Annual conference in Virginia cannot fail to be productive of good results, and may tend to attract the emigration that is so much needed in that region. Communities such as these can do much to develop the resources of the Southern States.—Religious associations working together for the common weal can accomplish wonders, and the industrious and frugal habits of the "Brethren," in a land where vast domains lie spread before them, and can be converted into comfortable homes at a trifling expense, would set an example that would reflect the best results upon the surrounding neighborhood.

The following is from the Star a small daily, published at Philadelphia. Perhaps the committee of arrangements will go to the trouble of correcting the errors it contains.

The Dunkard's Convention.

A CURIOUS CAMP MEETING.

BOTETOURT COUNTY, VA., May 24.—The meeting of Dunkards now in progress in this county is a seven years' convention, in which all parts of the United States are represented. The preparation for it on the part of the native members of the society in Botetourt and Roanoke were upon a scale that would surprise any who are not familiar with the proceedings of these people on such occasions.

The number of Dunkards expected as delegates and visitors from other parts of the country was by some set down as ten thousand and by others as fifteen thousand. It is certain that the road leading up the Valley has passed a large number, some of whom were from Maryland and Pennsylvania, and that the railroads have delivered a great multitude.

Besides the accommodations provided for the members of their peculiar sect, the hospitality of the Dunkards takes into account the wants of their fellow citizens of other denominations who may visit them during the progress of their meeting. A gentleman informed me that a friend of his was pressed to go home with one who had already about fifteen vehicles, with their loads, moving to his house.

The camp ground of the meeting displays a vast array of tents, and the immense tables are provided with a number of deacons, who have been chosen to serve them. The store of provisions collected beforehand may be judged from one or two items. In the article of beef cattle fattened the number was seventy to eighty, and a visitor who saw them before the slaughter had begun declared that he never saw a fatter and finer herd. As to coffee, the quantity prepared is said to have been so large that great out door ovens were made to roast it over huge log fires, and a grain mill was hired for the purpose of grinding it.

LET HIM THAT NAMETH THE NAME OF CHRIST DEPART FROM INIQUITY.

Delay is Dangerous.

"I once," said a minister, "knew a youth of sixteen the son and hope of pious parents, and the favorite of a large circle of acquaintances. He was my friend. We went together to the school room, to the playground, to our chamber. I have seen him while listening to the pleadings of parental faithfulness, urging him to immediate repentance, and warning him by a brother's recent grave, of the danger of delay. He listened in silence and respectful attention, but the alluring pleasures of youth dazzled him, and he resolved to leave religion for a future day.

"One evening he met a circle of youthful acquaintances. It was a gay circle and a thoughtless one.—In the midst of their mirth his eye fell upon a hymn book. He opened it and read:

'And must this body die,
This mortal frame decay;
And must these active limbs of mine
Lie mould'ring in the clay?'

He laid down the book and forgot its warning voice. Late that evening he came to my chamber breathing like one who had been walking fast, and lay down by my side. After some time he turned to me & said, "Will you get up and give me a glass of water, I feel unwell ? I arose and called the family. He was manfestly ill but not apparently in immediate danger. The next morning he was worse. A physician was called, but did not understand his case.—Search was at length made, and it was found that, by mistake, he had taken a dose of deadly poison. The hand of death was then upon him.—For three hours his body was writhing in agony, but that was forgotten in the more excruciating agony of the soul. I heard his minister tell him of a merciful Savior. I heard his father, kneeling by his bedside, pour out to God the most agonizing prayer that language could express. I heard his mother exclaim, 'O, my son, my son !' till she swooned and sank upon the floor. I heard him as he tossed from side to side, cry out, 'O Lord, have mercy upon my soul ! O my God, have mercy upon me, mercy, mercy !' and then, reaching out his hands to his father, he exclaimed, 'I am lost ! I am lost ! am I not, father ?'

"His breath grew shorter, and his voice fainter, until, raising his hands as if he would cry 'mercy' once more, he expired. Fifteen years have rolled away since I heard those cries of dying agony, but they ring in my ears now as if it were but an hour ago. That look of fierce despair is now in my ears echo with the cry, 'I am lost ! I am lost ! am I not, father !' How can I forget them ?—They camefrom the death bed of my friend, and that friend my own beloved brother."

Reader, by my brother's dying groans, by the tears which fall upon this paper while I think upon him, and by the amazing sacrifice on Calvary, I beseech you remember and lay to heart the truth you are here taught, "Now is the accepted time. Now is the day of salvation."

"Return, O wanderer, to thy home,
'Tis madness to delay ;
There are no pardons in the tomb,
And brief is mercy's day."

The Soul Alone.

Though God formed us to be social beings, and though we are surrounded on earth with an innumerable company having like faculties, wants, and passions, yet each stands in its own identity; as solitary, in one sense in all his great relations to God, as though there were no other human being on the earth. For good or for evil we may help to make others like ourselves, but we can never put off our own characters, or assume to standin another's stead. The web of human influence is most curiously tangled and intertwined, but God searches it out and assigns responsibility where it belongs, and we shall be accountable, at last, for what we individually are.

The soul is alone in its joys—whether we speak of common earthly joys, the hopes, the pleasures, the anticipations of our human state, or those higher and purer joys which come from hidden communion with God, and a heart consciously and thoroughly conformed to his blessed will. Others may have similar joys, but they are not ours. From generation to generation, in long processions, come those who share the same general lot in life with our own. But theirs are not to be confounded with ours. They can not all be melted down into a common mass, & taken as a whole ; they belong, and must forever belong, to the experience of individual hearts.

The soul is alone in its sorrows. "Every heart knoweth its own bitterness, and a stranger intermeddleth not therewith." The sorrows that come from the discipline of an earthly life, the losses, calamities, bereavements of our human state, or those deeper, more subtle sorrows, the anguish of the spirit for sin, the fears and apprehensions which haunt it ; all these are, in their very nature, individual, and can never be transferred.

In the great exigencies of our future being, the soul must be alone. When we come to pass through the valley of the shadow of death, though our friends may all be gathered around us, they can not attend us beyond the confines of this world. Wherever that mysterious journey may be, we must enter upon it as solitary as though there were no multitude of beings like us, either on this, or on the other side of the grave.

And when, in the great day, we shall stand before the Omniscient Judge, it will be impossible for us to lose ourselves in the crowd. Much as we are fond of laying blame upon others here for our conduct, we shall find then that we have a character of our own for which we are responsible ; that all things will be sorted out aright, and we shall have our own exact measure of accountability. We shall stand there as individual souls, to be tried for the things done here in the body.

Religious Condition of the World

From Schem's Almanac for 1869 we gather the following statistics of the religious condition of the world : Total population 1,375,000,000 ; increase on last year's reckoning, 24 800,000. Roman Catholics, 195, 434,000 ; increase on last year, 434, 000. Protestants, 100,835,000 ; increase on last year, 3,935,000.—Eastern churches, 81, 478,000. Total nominal Christians, 377,747,000; increase on last year, 8,347,000, or about 2.3 per cent. Total heathen population, 997,253,000 ; increase over last year, 16,453,000, or less than 1.7 per cent. Increase of Protestants nearly four per cent., of Romanists less than ¼ of one per cent. These are but estimates and approximations, but we think they truly present the drift of things. In the United States, the Roman Catholics are reckoned by Schem at 5,000,000 ; a gain on his statement of last year of half a million, or eleven per cent.—The Protestants count 27,000,000 a gain of 2,000, 000 or exactly eight per cent. He leaves 2,560,000 out side of either of these great religious divisions, among which are to be included Indians, Jews, unbelievers, Spiritualists, Mormons, &c., though he attempts no such classification. Last year he reckoned 1,929,891 of these amorphous elements, an increase of 630,0 00, or one-third. Ten thousand white inhabitants belong to the Greek Church.

Editor's Table.

We have been to the Annual Meeting for 1869, held at the Brethren's meeting-house, four miles from Salem, Roanoak Co., Virginia, and have again returned safely, to resume the editorial chair. Of part of our way thither our readers have already been informed, and we shall not now be very prolix in our notes of the remainder of the journey.

We left Washington on Thursday morning, 13th, and arrived at Bonsacks in the evening at about 9. As we cannot say anything in favor of the country through which we passed, we cannot say much about it.—But if we are allowed to tell the truth, we must say that that part of country lying between Alexandria and Lynchburg, is the most desolate and uninviting portion of the "moral heritage" that we have ever been compelled to look upon. We have never been so much disappointed in any country. We had heard much, and read much of "Old Virginia," and our imagination had pictured for us a view of what once was a great and prosperous, and fertile country.

Those parts of Bottetourt and Roanoak counties that we had the pleasure of seeing, are not to be compared with the territory above described.—In fact as soon as we came within the precincts of the Brethren, the country gave better evidence of prosperity. Either they will not inhabit poor lands, or by their industry and perseverence they soon improve it; in both cases they would be right.—We do not believe that men are obliged to drudge out their lives in the barren deserts and wastes of the earth, while millions of acres of fertile lands lie unoccupied. We do, therefore, not regard it as an insult when men say that the "Dunkards know where the good lands are." As we expect to cultivate the land, we ought to know its qualities.

We have seen no better crops this year than we saw in the valley from Bonsacks to place of meeting. The wheat crop is very promising. The indications for fruit are also hopeful.

Upon our arrival at Bonsacks we were met by brother B. F. Moomaw, and, with a number of others conveyed to his house, where we lodged for the night. Next morning, although we had a desire to remain a while longer at brother M's., we thought it prudent to accompany brother Peter Nininger, who had come five or six miles with his carriage for preachers to fill an appointment in the meeting-house near his place. At brother Nininger's we met brother D. P. Sayler, and several delegations of members from Rockingham Co. Here we enjoyed a fine season of vocal music with some young friends, whom we shall long remember.

Saturday, 15th. Meeting in the forenoon at a school-house near Cave Spring. Dined with brother ——— Graybill. The old sister living on the place is a widow. She enjoys the blessing of having sons and daughters around her, who are her brothers and sisters as well as her children.

In the afternoon there was meeting in a union meeting-house in the neighborhood. At this meeting brother D. C. Moomaw met us with his carriage to take us to his home, but the Lord willed it otherwise, for an old sister Showalter constrained us to go with her. We made several attempts at excuses but without success. So we lodged with her.

Sunday, 16th. Started for meeting near brother Nininger's. On the way met brother Sayler, who thought one of us ought to fill an empty seat in their carriage and accompany him, and assist in holding a meeting at ———. So I went. Dined at brother Daniel Brugh's. Thence conveyed by brother Gish to brother D. C. Moomaw's, where we lodged.

Monday, 17th. Brother M. conveyed us to place of meeting, 8 to 10 miles, whence we arrived at about noon, and found already quite a number of brethren and sisters assembled. The entire day was spent in talking. Some of the talk that we overheard was to the effect that the day might have been more profitably spent by having public meeting in the vicinity.

There was public preaching announced for the evening, at different places in the vicinity. We attended at the "Chapel," and lodged at brother Garst's, and though we were two nights at his house, we did not make his acquaintance.

Tuesday, 18th. This is the morning for the assembly of the council, and organization of the meeting. The morning giving indications for a fine day, the seats were conveyed to the grove in close proximity to the meeting-house. At 9 o'clock the meeting convened, when it was announced that the delegates, and those appointed to the Standing Committee should convene at the meeting-house. During their absence the congregation was employed in singing.

After a lapse of some time brother H. D. Davy took the stand and opened the meeting. The following is all that our reporter was allowed to take:

HYMN.—"Indulgent God of Love and Power,
Be with us at this place and hour."

EXHORTATION BY THE MODERATOR.

Brethren and Sisters in the Lord:

We, this morning, under the smiles of Heaven, have great reason to pour out our thanks to God, that he has blessed and protected us, has been as a God and a wall upon our either side, while we have been traveling to this place. So far as heard from, though thousands of miles have been traveled over, we have learned of no accident. We feel no doubt at all, as though we have been borne along in the angels' hands, whom the Lord has given charge concerning us.

We have met in the name of Jesus, to labor in the house of God. This day's work, or the work of this meeting, is not for to-day, not for to-morrow, nor next week, nor for a life, but for eternity. The results of our labor there we expect to enjoy the blessings that may attend them if we live up to our Christian profession.

Now when we think of the labor and the responsibility, no doubt at all, my brethren feel, with myself, that we are a kind of creature that lacks sufficient wisdom to accomplish the objects that we have under consideration; to labor for the glory and honor of God, for the benefit of souls, for the promotion of his cause and the building up of Zion in this world. Then our thanks should flow to God, and our petitions go on high united, as a sweet smelling savor to the Lord, that, in the name of Jesus, he might bestow upon us that wisdom which is heavenly in its nature, or that wisdom which cometh from above, as we are told in the language of the Apostle, "The wisdom that is from above is first pure."

Then, considering the object for which we have assembled, with God before us as the object of our worship, oh, let us come before Him with due solemnity, with becoming reverence, and acknowledge our dependence upon Him, and plead that He may come with the powers of the Holy Spirit from on high, and influence this Assembly. And thus, while we are convened together at this conference meeting, that all we may do may be done under the influence of the Holy Spirit. Let us yield ourselves to the control of Heaven. Let us consider we are only instruments in God's hand to accomplish that which we understand God has designed to accomplish through His children. Now let us approach the Lord in prayer.

After another lapse of some time we were invited to appear before the Standing Committee, and were told that they had learned that we had employed a reporter to take down the proceedings of the meeting, with the view of publishing it. To which we plead guilty with the modification that we should publish so much as we thought prudent or edifying. It was, however, altogether objected to. The first and principal objection was that it was something new. The second, that it would have a tendency to cause some to be timid in giving expression to their views, when they knew that every word they say would be taken down; and vice versa, it might elevate others. Thirdly; it was assumed that the discussions at the meeting were only necessary in order to obtain the decisions, and that being obtained they were no more wanted. They were a "necessary evil," and should cease as soon as they had accomplished their end.

The first objection we acknowledged we could not meet. It was something new. Whether that alone would justify them in their course is still a question with us.

To the second we replied that it would perhaps be good if some would feel a little more responsibility upon themselves when they speak upon such important occasions: and that if a brother knew he was speaking the truth before God, he ought not to fear man.

To the third, we think we fully replied by saying, that, if the discussions are necessary in obtaining a proper decision upon a question, then they are also necessary to enable our constituents to see the correctness of such decision. This we thought a very clear point. Our brethren and sisters want to know what was done and why it was done so. And it is necessary that we give them the arguments that drew forth a decision entirely contrary to their views. Unless we would assume to be "lords over God's heritage."

We gave it as our opinion that the publication of a full and correct report of the doings and deliberations of the meeting would not only meet with a hearty welcome by our readers, but would be a real benefit to the Church, as it would enable those who cannot attend the meetings to know what was being done, without the heavy outlay of money in going there. It would thus bring us more upon an equality, as the poor would then have the same opportunity for gaining such information as the rich. We also stated that our reporter was on the ground, and that we were under obligations to pay him, for which we should have no equivalent if we were not allowed to take the report. Also that our arrangements at home were such, that would cause our business to suffer from such restriction. But all was of no avail; further argument was cut off, and we were told to publish no report of the meeting. We submitted without bringing it before the meeting, which was the only action on our part that we regret.

The above are the reasons for the absence of our promised report of the proceedings of the Annual Meeting. We shall not at this time enter into an investigation of the probable motives and causes that lead the Committee to enforce such a rigid discipline upon us. We will leave that for another editorial, when matters may have more fully developed themselves. This much was necessary to be said by way of explanation. We have already received a number of subscribers by virtue of the promised report, and expect to receive a number more before it can be recalled, and is in justice due us that all shall know the cause of their disappointment.

The exhortation by brother Davy we have given simply as a sample, showing the efficiency of our clerk, knowing that it can work no evil. As for the meeting, we can say that it passed harmoniously, with less controversy than most of the meetings of the kind that we have attended. We do not endorse all its decisions, but have less objections than usual. When the Minutes appear we may have more to say. We will furnish a copy of the Minutes to each subscriber, as soon as they are published, which will likely be some time in June.

The brethren had made ample preparation for the accommodation of the meeting. The attendance was perhaps the smallest of any meeting of the kind that we have attended.

Brother Moses Brubaker entertained us on Wednesday night until two o'clock and then took us to Salem, and at five on Thursday morning we took the train, and on Saturday morning arrived at home much fatigued, but quite thankful for the protection afforded us by the Giver of every good and perfect gift, and for the attention received from kind friends.

The Minutes of Annual Meeting may be ordered from us at ten cents each, or one dollar per dozen, post paid.

Indiana, Pa.

Indiana, Pa., May 16th, 1869.

Brother Holsinger:—I will try to pen a few items of Church News from our branch,—Manor.

The Ark seems to be moving along, though encountering great opposition in various form.

During the last year we received seven or eight by baptism, and some ten or twelve by letter, which was an increase over any such period of time for some years. Our territory is large and the ministerial labor hard, though five of us are set apart for the work, and sometimes we all meet at the big meeting-house for consultation and worship. Then we have several other places of worship: one at Fyock's, where we erected a new meeting-house last Fall; at other places, in school-houses and private dwellings.

We thought it necessary and good to hold a choice to-day, for two deacons. Assisted by Elder A. Stutzman and William Byers of the Conemaugh branch, the brethren and sisters attended to that duty to-day; and the result was calling three brethren to that important post, two having received a tie voice. The names of those are George W. Burkhart, Daniel H. Buffner and Hiram Shaffer.

Yours,
JOSEPH HOLSOPPLE.

Report of District Meeting.

Dear Brother Henry, and all whom this epistle may concern:—By request I shall write out a short report of the District Meeting held on the 16th day of April last, for the states of Kansas and Missouri. The following churches were represented by letter and person:

Rock River church, Kansas, Christian Koller and David Petty.

Church near Lawrencetown, Kansas, (name forgotten) John Studebaker.

Southern part of Kansas represented by brother Isaac Hersey.

Spring Valley church, Missouri: Daniel Hendricks.

Whitesville church, Missouri: Joseph Bashoar and Daniel Glick.

Church in Johnson Co., Mo.:—(name forgotten) Joseph Wampler and others.

Log Creek church,: John S. Hays and C. C. Root.

Hamilton church: George Witwer and Wm. B. Sell.

Smith Fork church: Daniel D. Sell and Daniel Gibson.

Bush Creek church: by letter.

Kickapoo church: by letter.

The meeting was organized on the morning of the 16th. Brother Christian Holler, of Kansas, Moderator.—Brother Isaac Hersey, Clerk.

There were a number of queries presented before the meeting for consideration, and discussed pleasantly, and to the satisfaction of all the delegates and members present, which made it one of the most pleasant meetings we ever attended in the West. We were made to feel glad to hold conversation with brethren from far and near, and hear their warm exhortations, and their earnest contention for the faith once delivered to the saints. Whilst sitting under the sound of their loving voices we thought we stood where Moses stood viewing the promised land.—But our parting time came at last; and we realized keenly that we are still pilgrims and strangers on earth. But though we are separated far in body, oh! may we be perfectly joined together in the spirit. The fruit of your labor is beginning to reveal itself in this arm. Then go on, and "cast thy bread upon the waters"—you shall take it after many days.

Here I will drop my pen. I cannot give utterance to the emotions of my heart. I would say to all who live in the bounds of this District, who wish to know of any query and its answer, will please write to the writer of this epistle as all the papers are given into his hands. I shall give a copy of any query presented at the meeting with its answer.

I am yours for the furtherance of the Gospel.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

March 25th, in Pigeon Creek congregation, NANCY JANE, daughter of elder John and sister Nancy WISE; aged 3 years, 3 months, and 14 days.

She was much loved by her parents, and by her little brothers, and all who knew her, and was an active little girl. A few days before she died she said: "You must be a lover of the Lord or you can't go to heaven when you die." She told me the next night after she was taken ill she would never get well any more. I asked her whether she didn't want to get well any more, when she answerd no. NANCY WISE.

In Bern Township, Berks Co., Pa., May 10th, CHRISTIAN KEONIG; aged 72 years, 10 months, and 9 days. He was a respected member of the Amonitan church, and a most respectful neighbor. He was buried on the 14th in the family grave-yard near Schuylkill. Funeral service by John Masth, at the funeral house, and Elder David Eshleman and the writer in the so-called Ebler German Reformed church. Funeral text, St. John 5: 28, 29. JOHN ZUG.

In the Lower Deer Creek branch, Carroll Co. Ind., on the 9th of May, brother JACOB SHIVELY; aged 66 years less two days.—Funeral services by Elders David Fisher and Jacob Wagoner, and others, from Rev. 14: 12, 13. REUBEN YOUNG.

In Poweshick Co., Iowa, May 15th, SAMUEL LANSE, son of brother George and sister Lanse; aged 46 years, 5 months, and 10 days. The deceased was a criple from his birth, though he came to the years of manhood, yet in simplicity as a child. He knew but little of the sins and temptations of this world. The parents waited upon him as they would on an infant. Funeral services by the writer, from Rev. 14: 13.

April 10th, in Poweshick Co. Iowa, ELIZABETH, infant daughter of friend Jacob and Christiana ROWLAND; aged 4 months and 23 days. Funeral services by the writer, from Luke 18: 15, 16. J. S. SNYDER.

April 2nd, in Lost Creek congregation, Juniata Co., Pa., sister SUSANNA HIDE, wife of brother Francis Hide; aged 63 years, 9 months, and 14 days. She was a consistent member. Services by brethren George Myers and Ezra Smith. Text, thirty-ninth Psalm, fourth verse.

MICHAEL BESHOAR.

In the Plum Creek church, April 12th, EDMUND KIMMEL, infant son of brother Jacob B. and sister Maria Kimmel; aged 5 weeks and 5 days.

The above-named child died very suddenly and unexpectedly; yet the parents do not sorrow as those who have no hope, knowing that Christ says: "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Funeral services from 1st Thess. 4: 13—18.

JACOB KELSO.

In the Yellow Creek district, Stephenson Co., Ills., March 4th, ALMA ALICE, infant daughter of brother Marcus (minister) and sister Rachael FOWLER. Aged 7 months and 5 days. Occasion improved by the writer from Mark 10: 14.

In the Waddams Grove district, at Rock Grove, same County and State, brother JACOB McCALLA; aged 72 years, 1 month, less one day. Occasion improved by brethren Enoch Eby, Robert Badger, and the writer, from the 90th Psalm. ALLEN BOYER.

May 10th, in Upper Miami church, Miami Co., Ohio, of chronic disease, sister MARY FREEMAN, wife of friend Robert M. Freeman; aged 59 years, 4 months, and 11 days. Funeral occasion improved at the house of the deceased, by brethren John Kadwalader and Samuel Coppock, from Hebrews 9: 27, 28. H. H. ARNOLD.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Intemperance—Temperance Societies.

It is well known to the readers of the Companion, and we presume admitted on all hands, that intemperance is a crying evil, a national curse, and a most damning sin. When we look at the vast amount of misery, suffering and death it has produced in the past, with its diabolical work of ruin and destruction before our eyes every day, the aspect seems so fearfully horrible that we think it should alarm the people and check, at least in some degree, this great evil. But in spite of all the painful logic of past experience, and notwithstanding all the efforts of the Christian Church, intemperance is more prevalent to-day, in many parts of the country, than it has been at any former period. This is a statistical fact which the warm-hearted philanthropist cannot deny, however much he may regret it; and it proves one of two things—either the evil is past remedy or else the proper remedies have not yet been applied. If the former were true, all temperance efforts intended to cure the evil would be in vain, but if the latter be correct it should stimulate the friends of temperance everywhere to adopt more stringent measures, and make use of more efficient means to check this growing evil, and drive this monster curse from the land.

We incline to the opinion that the vice is not past remedy, but that if proper measures were taken, not only the young and rising generation might be saved from its fearful ravages, but also many of those who are already chained to the car of ruin might be reclaimed and again restored to manood.

The desire for strong drink is not natural in man, but it is brought about and fostered by the baneful practice of "moderate drinking"—"social tipling." If all young men who have never touched the intoxicating cup would obligate themselves never to commence the moderate use of liquor, and all other temperate (?) men who use stimulating beverages "occasionally would at once and forever totally abstain from the use of everything that can intoxicate, many of the so-called respectable brinking-houses would soon have to quit business for want of patronage, and the evil would finally die out of itself. But as long as moderate drinking is held to be respectable, and excessive drinking is considered lawful, the great majority cannot be induced to become "teetotalers" And even if we could persuade the masses to take a pledge of total abstinence, many, especially such as are morally weak could not keep their obligations as long as they are exposed to all the luring temptations of the thousand and one liquor shops with which our land is cursed.

On account of our unwise liquor laws, and the loose manner in which even these laws are administered, the tone of morality has in many communities sunk so low, and human nature has become so hopelessly vicious, that it will no longer yield to reason and persuasion. In vain does the christian minister tell his hearers, that "no drunkard shall ever inherit the kingdom of heaven," as long as the air around him is dark with the smoke of breweries and distileries; and our towns and villages are crowded wich whiskey saloons and lager-beer shops. In vain does he inveigh from the pulpit against the evils of excessive drinking, so long as he is not willing to strike a blow against moderate drinking—"the only process by which the army of eight hundred thousand confirmed drunkards is continually being recruited, and kept staggering on down to drunkards graves, without the hope of immortality." In vain are all the temperance efforts of the Church, as long as the Church and the world unite in elevating unprincipled men to places of power who so shape the legislation and administration of our laws as to encourage the very evil which such efforts were intended to mitigate.

If these conclusions be correct, then it follows that all those who desire to see this great curse removed from the land, should co-operate with the temperance organizations of the day,—elect to places of power only honest men, who have the cause of temperance at heart—men who will abolish our infamous license system—close all drunkard-making establishments, and by virtue of law prohibit the manufacture, use, and sale of all intoxicating liquors as a beverage. This would at once cure the evil, by removing the cause.

But when I say that we should cooperate with the temperance societies, I do not mean that we must necessarily connect ourselves with some one or the other of these societies. Any man who totally abstains from the use of all intoxicating beverages, and discountenances its use among his fellow men, and favors prohibitory measures, is a supporter of the Good Templar's platform, whether he considers himself a member of the Independent Order or not. But all those who, by precept and example, teach that the present practice of moderate drinking is not only innocent and harmless, but useful and necessary —that total abstinence is useless, and even wrong, and exert themselves to influence public opinion against total abstinence societies, are not co-operating with those societies, and neither can they claim to be true friends of the Temperance cause—a cause which stands second only to that of the Christian religion.

On the Death of a Wife and Mother.

TO BROTHER MARTIN SHIVELY AND FAMILY.

Of all the loses which we are called to sustain, few are more sad than the decease of the mother of a large family of children. When one such departs, the tenderest feelings are stirred, and the deepest, emotions of sorrow overflow the soul. The friend and guide of our youth departs; portner of our infant joys and sorrows, the sharer of our maturer prosperity and adversity; the kind companion and adviser is laid in the grave, no more to be seen or loved on earth.

The loss of such a mother the dear family deplores. Inexortalbe death has come into your family and in less than twenty-four hours wrought a work which time cannot repair; made heart wounds, which no lapse of time can heal. Unstayed by prayers and tears, he has performed his task, as if entirely heedless of the consequences.

My work on this mournful occasion, shall be to speak of a few things which render the partings of a pious mother from her children a source of unusual sorrow. The intimacy of her relation to them. No person on earth comes so near to the heart of a child as the one addressed by the endearing name of "mother." The father may be fondly and tenderly loved, and other friends may be valued highly, but there is a spot unfilled except by a mother's form. It is her part to watch for the first signs of dawning reason, to defend her infant one from dangerous damps at night, and chilling blasts by day; to supply the food by which life is supported; to hang over the couch in sickness, to nestle in her bosom when dangers are abroad. God in his wisdom has so arranged, that to her is committed the early culture of those whom he from time to time commits to her charge, and they grow up with a confidence in her which no other person can receive. All through child hood the mother's character and daily life is the study of her children. If she kneels in prayer they mark the act: if she weeps, they see her tears; if she is sick, they listen to her sighs; if she is glad, they share her pleasures; if she is afflicted, they feel that a cloud has covered them, though they may not know the cause.

From a husband a woman may conceal her joys and hide her sorrows deep in her own heart. She may bury from the world all her anxieties, but alone with her children they will gush out.

Thus the child grows up, feeling that his mother cannot say a wrong word, nor do a wrong act. All his little sorrows he pours into her bosom;—all his trifling losses he unfolds to her and her advice is law to him in all his childish sports. A tie is formed which can never be broken, and to her gentle heart she binds her son with cords of love. Go to the abandoned wretch who is lost to home, to family, to society, to all that is lovely and of good report;go to him in his dungeon, where he awaits a felon's doom and you will converse long with him ere he will feel.—All the consequences of his crimes he will review with cool, calculating hardness; all the motives which can be drawn from the loss of the Soul and the loss of heaven he will resist. Even the cross of Christ and the love of Calvary he will spurn as unworthy of his consideration; but touch his pious; sainted mother, whom he followed to the grave long time ago: carry him back to the time when she took him upon her knee, and taught him to pray, "Our Father who art in Heaven," and you will soon see the tears flowing down his hardened cheeks. His voice will tremble as he replies to your kind advice, and you will find that deep in the heart is a place consecrated to a mother's memory, into which the passion of crime has not yet entered. The name of his mother carries him back beyond his crimes, beyond his hardness, beyond his first departure from the path of rectitude to the sunny days of innocency. This affliction, which outlives time and changes, and crime and sorrows, is the result of that holy intimacy which ever must exist between a good mother and her children. Aad when she is taken away her death causes a dreadful chasm in the family circle, which it is hard to fill or heal. To whom can the child go when weary and faint? On whose breast can the aching head be leaned? And whose hand shall wipe the cold brow when the death damp is upon it? The father may love, pity, and pray, but his hand was made for a rough contest with the world, and not for such tender offices. Who like a mother can listen to the tale of temptation, and affliction, and distress? Home without a mother, is a tree without leaves; a hearth stone without fire; a night without a morn.

The child is peculiarly dependent on the mother.—There may be intimacy without dependence in some relations, but not in this. And here the dependence does not consist in the supply of food and raiment; a father's means may purchase all these, after the mother has departed. The hundred kind attentions which we need from infancy to manhood, and which none but a mother thinks of; the duties which stretch themselves along from the cradle to the battle field of life.

Our dear brother is deprived of a kind companion, and the children ofa dear mother who has sacrificed her own comfort, and ease, and welfare, for their good; who has employedherself in devising plans, and executing purposes for their happiness; who has studied to make them happyhere, and prepare them for lasting joys hereafter. For such a wife andsuch a mother, many tears were freely shed. A week, humble, quiet life of domestic experience has closed, and the friend who has followed you withso much kindness through life, has ended her labors, and entered her reward. Thy lovely home will no more echo with the tones of her voice; thy table will no more be spread withthe offer the afflicted husband, and his weeping children to the throne of grace, to seek before God that humble trust and faith which will enable them to conquer death and overcomethe grave.

"My Mother! at that lovely name
Within my bosom there's a gush
Of feeling, which no one can tame,
And which, for worlds of fame,
I would not, could not crush."

Charity.

The eminent apostle Paul, while looking over the heavenly gifts that had been imparted to man, for his purification, discovered a grand principle, which reason throughout will sustain, as destined to the ages of eterdity. He well knew the sublimity of hope, and the grand necessity of faith, in the human redemption; and still he feels no delicacy in recognizing charity as being the greatest of the three, and shows to the humble followers of the Lamb, that it is indispensable in the redemption of souls from their lost state and in elevating them to Jesus, that where he is they may also dwell, and be in endless peace with the Father, who has created all things for his own glory.

We will properly define charity as nothing more or less than moral love: love that eminates from the moral powers, and looks at all things from a moral standpoint. It is a place from whence evil can never come, but all things of a moral and right nature are the result of its labor, it stands in favor of God, and repudiates the evil works of the Devil; as they do not comfort with the works of morality, and that which does not comfort with a true belief of morality, while in love with Jesus, is at once cast off by a sense of true charity. If it should be the blessed deed of feeding the poor, it could not with propriety be recognized as charity, neither can it in every case be regarded as the result of charity, from the fact the apostle Paul sums up the matter, and shows that the giving away of all things to feed and cloth the poor, will profit nothing if we have not charity, which must be moral love. So we say cultivate charity in its purity, as it is one of the most sublime principles of the human race. It is something that will make you happy in time and eternity. Its destiny is not one earth, but beyond the benighted valley of death, where neither eye nor foot can reach, far beyond the place from whence no one can return to tell the form thereof; far beyond the wings of imagination, that often exercise themselves in the midnight hour; far beyond the anticipations of faith; far beyond the desires of hope is the etherial destiny of charity.

A Crumb of the Bread of Life for a suffering sister.

No. XVIII

A certain great poet was not far wrong when he sang, "Nothing in this world is single." Speaking of the moral aspects of sin and redemption, even God could not emancipate man from the dominion of evil without human aid. This bifold constitution of the Redeemer shows the true nature of the Church and of all Christian duty. Sin is first spoken of only in its forms—"in the day that thou eatest thereof"—but this implies a hunger for what is forbidden. This double nature of sin runs through all its ramifications. Once conceived in the heart, it soon ran along the vital conductors to the hands, and,—humanity, was in ruins. As sin came by man, tempted and indwelt by the spiritual Head of evil, so must also recovery come by man, drawn and possessed by the Head of all things. This duple characteristic designates the true followers of Christ. In it they find not only a medium for the expression of all their powers in due proportion and proper form, but for rendering acceptable service in the most adverse and straitened circumstances.

In Luke 17 : 8, we have an instructive presentation of double service for Jesus—a service out doors, and then a giding for service in-doors. There is a deep and momentous truth hidden beneath this passage which, could we rightly apprehend it, would yield us abundant consolation in affliction, and inspire us with energy in every duty. Ploughing in the field represents what is more active and public, and waiting at the table what is more passive and retired. The leading idea is an unreserved, unrelaxed devotion to the advancement of the Divine purposes. When we entered into covenant with Christ, it was on the terms of continuous service. A living witness at all times—faithful unto death. Self-interest, and a desire to maintain our reputation, holds such powerful sway over the human mind, even after it is "swept and garnished" by the righteous occupant, that we are strongly inclined to a one sided service. The holiest disciples are more apt to be off their guard in their own families than when in the presence of strangers. What our near relatives cover up with the mantle of affection, would be likely to be given to the wings of the wind if enacted before those who have no special interest to guard our reputation. If we are busy out doors, we are apt to relax a little, if not much, when we get inside. But it is at home especially that the reality of religion appears. When a man has been in the field all day ploughing, or feeding cattle, it is reasonable to suppose that he is weary and wants to rest.—But then the summons comes, "gird thyself and serve me." We read nothing of girding when at work in the field. This is significant. It is only where we are in danger of becoming careless and indifferent that we are reminded that all our time is the Lord's and that every thing must be done unto Him. Girdles [illegible] to hold up their long skirts when running, and partly to support them when weary. I have known persons who, when they grew weak from protracted labor, would gird themselves tightly with a towel under their garments, in order to continue their work with greater ease. At home, in the moulds which our daily life has worn, we easily throw off some of the restraint which we observe when abroad, our walk is in danger of being more uneven, and we are perhaps not so attentive to what the Divine Presence demands as when ploughing, or toiling under circumstances that call into play the love of self. Here a door opens into one of the most foul, dark, dismal, disgusting chambers of the human heart. No reader that has made any respectable proficiency in self knowledge, but will feel ashamed of himself while perusing these lines. Nothing is more need, in the indoor service than the injunction, "gird thyself."—Most persons, after returning from the field, would be indisposed to renew their labor indoors, and would require some special incitement to beget the requisite energy. Having worked too much in the public enclosure as under the public eye, we feel as if relaxation were our due when we reach our privacy. But he that ploughs to the Lord will not draw his furrow straighter in the field, than he will gird himself and diligently serve when he is in-doors.

Your out-door work for Christ is at present suspended. But it requires more strength and patience to stand still than to be actively engaged. I have known strong men, who scarcely know what is meant by weariness when at work, almost break down with fatigue by standing a few hours to listen to a public harangue, or on some other occasion demanding close attention and immobility in a standing posture. When we are called in from active duty, and are required to serve the Master in a more passive way, we have great need of girding, as we sooner tire out in standing still, or being passive, than in "ploughing and feeding cattle." Patience in trial, forbearance under provocation, and a devotional frame of mind under the rod of affliction, require a strong girdle, having faith and love for its buckle. He that treads the loose soil and turns the heavy furrow all day, does service for God, needing God's presence and support, but he can lean on his plough for some degree of rest in the midst of his work. So the shepherd can lean on his crook. But in-door, after having expended our strength in the field, we need a girdle, and if we fail to put it on, and keep it on, our service will be poorly done, if done at all. If you cannot work for Christ out of doors, you may not relax your service in retirement, only do not forget your girdle. In unreserved resignation to the Divine will, and the exhibition of a meek and heavenly temper in adversity, you can honor God as much, if not more, in the girdle service, than in ploughing and pasturing. You cannot confidently say that by a life of activity and out door service God would have reflected so much of His beauty and glory in you as by the polish He has given your soul in the furnace of affe tion. Many a time you have been walking unawares with the Son of Man on a pavement of fire, which is only the under side of the pavement of gold. Soon the "well done," and well suffered, will look down from heights of glory and joy beyond which is God alone.

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, and good will towards men."

In the country of Syria, while the shepherds were watching their flocks by night, and as they were sitting there in the darkness of night, musing on the goodness of God, and looking with wonderful awe at the starry heavens above them, perhaps exclaiming in midnight stillness, "Wonderful are thy works Lord, God Almighty." While they were thus watching their flocks, pondering over the choicest of nature's scenery, behold an angel of the Lord came upon them. They were much amazed at the sudden approach of this heavenly messenger, wondering what was his heavenly mission. The glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid. But hark! The dispatch of this heavenly messenger: "Fear not: for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the City of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." What joyful news! Imagine this surprise.—A Savior born! Christ their Lord. But is this all? Suddenly there was with this angel a heavenly host, praising God, proclaiming "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men."—The angels have now left, and the shepherds go to see whether those things are so. They find the Savior according to the directions given by the angels. They return glorifying God. "Peace on earth and good will to men," is now proclaimed. But how lamentable to the mind when we take a retrospective view of the present generation, or read the history of past generations. Though this peace was proclaimed, and good will towards men enjoined upon all; though this was issued by our divine Master, yet how oft instead of peace, envy, malice, murders and war exist; in families, neighborhoods, and nations. This submissive lamb-like spirit, which the Savior has taught, is cast away, and the presence of mind is lost in anger, and the destruction of life is sought for, despite all the mandates of heaven.

Our Savior says: "Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves. Behold his wisdom, he has selected the most harmless of all the feathered tribe, for us to imitate in peace, innocence and love. Oh could all people and nations be as peaceful as the gentle dove, which sails in the regions of the upper deep, or like the gentle rivulet that rippies over its pebbled bottom and its hollow murmurings sounding through the vale, as it flows on to the vast ocean of eternity. Then love and peace would take the place of anger and strife. We would have better society, warmer Christians and more obedient children would flock to the blood stained banners of King Emanuel. This unbounded universe is large enough for all. Countries are settled up, while others are discovered, explored and sought out for the habitations of man. Let all mankind follow the footsteps of our Savior, and not suffer themselves to be led captive by the wily works of Satan. Then we can all enjoy the sweetest peace, and can exercise good will towards our fellow-man. In order that we may enjoy this peace, we must serve the Lord with all our soul, mind and strength, and love our neighbors as ourselves, and do good to those who despitefully use and persecute us. If we let nature alone we do not feel to love our enemies; but if we possess the love of God we will call those light afflictions all joy, for great is our reward in heaven. We should love our enemies and not abuse them, for if they would die, who could approach the grave of his greatest enemy, without a throbbing in the heart to think that he once warred with the mouldering dust before him. Let us all follow the footsteps of our Savior, and say with one of old: "as for me and my house we will serve the Lord," that we may love all around us and live in peace with all, so far as it lieth in our power, for the time will soon come when our pilgrimage on earth will end, the sun will soon set to close our eyes in the night of death. When we behold the sun, the great luminary, descending in the west, just about to sink beneath the horizon, to light far distant lands in day, what a pleasing prospect, when we can behold the golden embossed clouds, that it leaves behind, and can think that we are at peace with all around, and that the sun sinks not upon our wrath. The beasts of the field are then retiring to rest. Man returns from the busy cares of life and reposes on his bed of slumber, and sleeps the sleep emblematical of death. In the morn he awakes and beholds a new day, new sceneries, and all is fresh and vigorous around him. So the man that has peace with his God, when his sun is sinking beneath the horizon, to light his pathway to the future world, when his earthly pilgrimage is nearing to a close, if he has fought a good fight, his battles are then over, he soon will launch over jordan and behold new scenes, new glories and can go in and out and find pasture. He then can reap his reward of peace in heaven, and enjoy the society of angels throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity. Then brethren and sisters, let us all labor for that end, that we may meet around one common mercy seat at the great white throne in heaven, where all is love, joy, and peace.

TENDERNESS.—We may talk, says Nettleton, of the best means of doing good, but, after all, the greatest difficulty lies in doing it in a proper spirit. Speaking the truth in love, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves—with the meekness and gentleness of Christ.

Waiting.

Lord, is it wrong that I should wish to be
From this vile world of sin and suffering free?
With longing eye I look to yonder shore,
Each day love earth the less and heaven more.

With eager gaze I once looked out on life,
My ardent spirit ready for each strife.
I thought to conquer and my path to strew
With noble deeds, to show what man might do.

Alas! Alas! I knew not thee my heart,
How weak, how vain, how treacherous thou art;
How given to earthly care, to earthly love,
That naught but grace divine binds thee above.

Oft wrecked upon the shoals of earthly hope,
In storms and darkness for thy hand I grope,
My father, for I tried to steer alone,
Till I in mercy on the rock was thrown.

I'm weary of my errings, and of sin,
Of storms without, and traitorous heart within
Of my much wandering, from the gentle Lamb;
O take me, Jesus, to thee as I am.

And yet, dear Lord, thy will, not mine be done
In me thy weakest lamb, thy feeblest one.
Thou canst retain, and guide me through much pain,
And cause my soul heaven's peaceful port to gain.

Thy name if wonderful, and so thy deeds.
The weary rest in thee, thy God-hand feedss
The weak, the dying one. Be still, vain heart,
The Lord, the Lord is thine, rest in thy past.

"We shall all stand before the Judgment."

Concerning this general assembly, the beloved disciple speaks thus: "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God: and the books were opened, and the dead were judged out of the things which were written in the book, according to their works." These are the chief circumstances which are recorded in the oracles of God as preceding the general judgment. We will now consider the judgment itself, so far as it has pleased God to reveal it.

The person by whom God will judge the world, is the only-begotten Son, whose goings forth are from everlasting to everlasting, who is God over all, blessed forever. The outbeaming of his Father's glory, the express image of his person, the Father has committed all judgment to him. Being formed in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God has highly exalted him and ordained him as man to try the children of men; to be the judge both of the quick and dead; both of those who shall be found alive at his coming, and of those who are dead.

But who can count the persons to be judged, any more than the drops of rain, or the sands of the sea? I beheld (saith St. John) a great multitude which no man could number, clothed with white robes and palms in their hands. How immense must be the total multitude of all nations, and kindreds, and people and tongues. All must appear and hear the voice of the son of God, and appear before him. And every man shall there give an account of his work; a full and true account of all that he did while in the body, whether it be good or evil. Nor will their actions alone be brought to open view, but all their words. "Every idle word which men shall speak they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment. Will not God then bring to light every circumstance also that accompanies every word or action? Yea, he will bring not the hidden works of darkness only, but the very thoughts and intents of the heart. For searches the reins and understandeth all our thoughts. All things are naked and open to the eyes of Him with whom we have to do. Hell and destruction are before him without a covering.

And in that day shall be discovered every inward working of every soul; every appetite, passion, inclination, and affection. So shall it be clearly and infallibly seen who are righteous, and who unrighteous.

Then the king will say to them upon his right: "Come ye blessed of my Father," &c. After the righteous are judged the king will then turn to them upon his left hand, and they shall also be judged. He will say unto them, "depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." The joyful sentence of acquital upon those upon the right, the dreadful sentence of condemnation upon those on the left, both of which must remain fixed and immovable as the throne of God. Oh the blissful realities of eternal happiness. Oh the dreadful realities of eternal misery Then after the judgment the righteous shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father, and shall drink of those rivers of pleasure which are at God's right hand forevermore. But the wicked shall be turned into hell, even all the people who forget God. They shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power. The smoke of their anguish will rise up forever and ever. For their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched.

O, kind reader, think of these things before it will be forever too late. Is it possible that you must see the realities of eternal perdition before you can believe. It may not be long before the great Jehovah will bring these things to pass, when he shall make his second appearance. Sinners, how will ye escape? If the righteous are scarcely saved, where will the sinner appear. Will ye call on the mountains to fall on you, the rocks to cover. Alas! the mountains, the rocks, the earth, the heavens themselves are just ready to flee away. Neither can you prevent the sentence. O, what manner of persons ought we then to be, in all holy conversation and godliness. Why should one be found on his left hand at his appearance. He willeth not that any should perish, but that all should come to a knowledge of the truth. Can we doubt this, when we know that the Judge of all is likewise the Savior of all. He hath bought us with his own blood, that we might be saved. May we all make proof of his mercy, rather than his justice; of his love rather than his power. And may we know that this is our day, the things that belong unto our peace. O that we may now give ourselves to him, who gave himself for us, in humble faith; in holy, active, patient love. So shall we rejoice with exceeding joy, when he comes in the clouds of Heaven.

Ignorance of Scripture.—One of the latest novelties in French journalism is to make considerable use of the New Testament. Alexandre Dumas so thoroughly appreciated the love of novelty which characterizes his countrymen, that in one of his novels he incorporated a large part of one of the Gospels with great effect. To many of his readers, it was the newest part of the book.

Sanctified afflictions are among the most precious blessings of the Christian's present lot—patience and submission to God's holy will are thus brought out and strengthened and he is eminently glorified.

Parting.

The saddest of all sad words, of tongue or pen, are farewell, farewell! These, when spoken at the separation of dear friends, bring tears to many eyes and sorrow to many hearts. We may roam the world over, until we have circumnavigated the globe. Bright and glorious memories may arise as we ponder on bygone days—the happy scenes of our infancy, but when we think of the sad, sad parting with home and its loved ones, all these bright memories are blighted and fade into nothingness. Separation consists of parting for time, and of parting for eternity. When we bid adieu to friends—when we say farewell and it sends back its echo—when we part with those we dearly love, we mean it only for a time. The parting is sadder still when we think we may never meet again. But we hope to meet again, and this faint hope we cherish until it is realized. These timely partings are of short duration. They tend to ripen a parting for eternity. This parting may be avoided through the atoning sacrifice of Him who steeped the brow of Calvary in gore. Then let us awake to a sense of our responsibility.

We cannot be placed in circumstances that will not admit of devoting a few moments each day to the training of the heart. The parent occupies a high and holy trust. If faithful he augments forever his own future happiness. There are weeds to be uprooted; flowers to be planted in their stead; beautiful lessons to be inculcated of love, truth, self-control, and benevolence. The past is gone, the future is not yet, but the present is ours to improve. God has entrusted to us immortal souls, and in view of this conviction we can neither idle nor trifle, but ever find a faithful monitor to rebuke apathy; to whisper hope and heroism in the sacred discharge of duty.

The mind never dies, and he who sends it onward in its sublime career, enlarged and trained by wholesome discipline, lays up a treasure where "neither moth nor rust can corrupt.

The first impression which children recieve in the nursery, while under the mother's immediate care, are seldom so wholly obliterated, but that sooner or later their influence conduces to form the future life, and we can scarcely calculate the influence the mother has in forming the future character of her boy. Implicit obedience to the parent is the stepping stone to greatness, that greatness which does not consist in birthrights, or the pinnacle of political fame, but which is vaster still—in "the nobility of soul." We should remember that the sun, moon, and stars, as they shine, banishing gloom and darkness, do not shine for ourselves alone; that rivers and streams as they flow through the valleys, invigorating and beautifying the meadows around, do not flow for ourselves alone. Then let us live that in the autumn of life, when the dark mantles of death are gathered thick and gloomy around the dying bed, we may look with pleasure upon the past and calmly forward, where the dream of life shall be o'er, and stern reality fills the sphere of vision, and where parting is no more. For this great—this eternal parting takes place when we stand around the throne of God in Heaven. This is of all partings the saddest. Hear the angels and ransomed weep, as the words, farewell! farewell! echo, and re-echo, and the sound vibrates through the courts of Heaven. The wicked hear the awful sentence: "Depart from me," and the portals of Paradise are closed forever.

Marrying by Lot.

One of the most curious customs of the Moravian Church is marrying by lot. A little book written by a lady who was once a member of the sect tells about it. The women live in an establishment under the charge of an Elderess, and the unmarried men in a like establishment. When one of the brethren wishes to marry, he announces his wish to the society, and the Elderess selects a lady whom she thinks suitable. Then lots marked yes and no are thrown into a box, and if the first drawn is in the affirmative, the marriage takes place; but, if negative, a new choice is made, and the lot once more appealed to. Missionaries in distant fields of labor freduently have wives selected by the society, the ceremony of marriage performed with a proxy, and the bride sent on to their station, where, perhaps, they meet for the first time.

Christians ought to love One another.

"By this shall all men know that ye are my Disciples, if ye have love one to another." John 13: 35.

Our Master when here on earth gave us directions how to become His disciples. He tells us how we can know when we are his followers, but more than this, he has given to the world at large, certain signs, whereby they can know his disciples. The sign which he has given to the world is, "if ye have love one to another."

Upon this subject, and on the necessity of having love within the Church, we feel to write.

We are just as certain, that where love is lacking, nothing good can be done, as we are that Satan is the enemy of all our happiness. Take the family where no love exists, and you will find no pleasure there, and where there is pleasure there is no peace, and where there is no peace, Satan is at home. For this is his mission to sow discord wherever he can. But more than this, where there is no love, no happiness, no peace, and Satan himself at home, there we see strife. One is doing against the other what is in his or her power to make each other unhappy.

Of course none will say that Love is not necessary to make a family happy. But if it is of so great importance within a family, how much more is it to have love in the Church. And I think, brethren and sisters, we all have experienced that without love among the Christians not much good can be accomplished. We often hear the expression, "O, that man's preaching don't help me anything. I don't like him." Here we see the necessity of loving our preacher. O, my dear brethren, let us pray to God to remove everything out of our hearts, and give us that love wherewith we can love even our enemies.

But again; take the preacher who has to stand up between God and man. He goes to meeting, and of course is looked upon to exhort his fellow man; but just at the time he wants to get up, he sees, by the appearance of his hearers,—because one hangs his head here, and one there, and another is looking another way, yet under all these trying circumstances, by which he is made to see and to feel that they do not love him —we say under all these difficulties he is bound to preach. Oh, is it to be wondered, that we often see the tears rolling down his cheeks, and exclaiming that he cannot preach. Of course Satan is the cause of all this.

But then let us remember, that we give us not up in the hands of Satan, in order to hinder the cause of our Lord. I often have thought there would not be as much hindrance in spreading the Gospel, if there would be more love among the christians. O, brethren and sisters, let us try and show more love toward our preachers, when we come to meeting; let us do all in our power to cheer them up; let us bear each others burden. If they even come short sometimes, let us remember that they are men like we, and are just as liable to make mistakes. We like to hear good sermons, but let us remember the best sermon that ever was preached was preached by our Lord on the Mount. And if we read it we find he used very simple language. So we see, it is not the most stylish sermon that will do the most good. Let us remember, that which comes from the heart will only reach the heart.

But further, we not only must manifest love towards our preachers, but towards all, every member of the church. It was certainly necessary in the days of the apostles, and the Lord, and it is just as necessary now. But let it be love in deed. Love will show itself; it cannot be hidden. For if it could be hid, the Savior could not have said, that all men shall know by it that ye are my disciples. But here we should be careful again, we often have heard it said, (by the world) by men who attended our meetings, and saw the brethren greet each other with the holy kiss, that that, and that was a Judas kiss. O brethren, for our souls, sake let us not act a Judas. I fear we sometimes give the world cause to say so, because our works don't show quite such a love as our outward appearance does. Let us show love toward all brethren and sisters—whether we are among the world or at home. Let us remember that we cannot act the hypocrite in God's sight, although we may before men.

I have often said, that if a christian professor does anything against me, it hurts a thousand times more than if a worldling does evil against me. We sometimes hear short and angry answers given in the presence of those who are not members, and have seen that it has caused such ill feeling toward each other, that it took years of hard work to make everything right again. We have known brethren not attending meeting for years, only on account of believing themselves hurt by other brethren. Therefore let us all consider our actions, and our doings well, lest we do anything which might hurt our fellow brethren. Taking these things into consideration, we come to the conclusion that we must love our brethren and sisters with a pure love, or the world will not see that we are Christ's deciples.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Any Room for Jesus?

Have you any room for Jesus?
When we gather shall we say,
That the followers of the Master
Have no time for prayer to-day?
He was cradled in a manger;
His own angels sang the hymn
Of rejoicing at his coming,
Yet there was no room for him.

O my brothers, are we wiser,
Are we better now, than they?
Have we any room for Jesus
In the life we live to-day?
Room for pleasure, doors wide open;
And for business; but for him,
Only here and there a manger,
Like to that of Bethlehem.

Have you any time for Jesus?
O my brothers, you and I,
When a few more days are ended,
Must have room and time to die.
Room for Jesus—King of glory!
Time for him all times obey;
Love for him who came to save us—
Let us ask these things to-day.

The Sins of Christians.

The first thing to be said about the sins of the Christians is, that they are just like other people's sins.—A lie is a lie, whether uttered by lips that an hour before were opened in prayer, or by lips that never mention the name of God except in profane swearing. Cheating is simply and always stealing, whether the gains are afterwards consecrated to the Lord's work or to the devil's.—Murder is murder, even though David commits it. Lust is no less lustful because it sets up its foul sway in a heart that has begun to be made clean by the Holy Spirit. There is no such thing as sanctified sin. Our sins are not washed clean, but washed away. If any Christian is so interpreting the doctrines of free grace and imputed righteousness, and an indwelling Christ, as to find any comfort in the thought that his sins are wondrously modified and made less odious in the sight of God than the sins of the ungodly, let him beware; for he is far gone already in a deadly heresy.

The next thing to be said about Christian's sins is(if the reader will pardon the contradiction), that they are not like other sins. They are more heinous, covered with blacker guilt. For a Christian to lie is a greater offence against the truth than for any one else, because he does it in the very presence of his Savior, in the clear light of truth itself. Think of the Apostle John as uttering lies from the bosom of Jesus! For a Christian to be lustful is to defile the very temple of the Holy Ghost. All "presumptuous sins" of Christians may be called acts of desecration, polluting the Holy places which God has honored by his sanctifying presence. It is often said that Christians should be careful of their conduct, because their faults bring dishonor upon the cause they profess. This is true; but the half is not told. They should be careful because these faults and crimes are so grievously at war with the gracious work of the Holy Ghost in their hearts; with the higher life begun, with the Christ that is in them. Paul, in rebuking the Corinthians for their sensuality, did not, we believe, say a word about their dishonoring Christianity. He went to the root of the matter. "Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ? Shall I, then, take the members of Christ, and make them the members of a harlot? What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?"—1 Cor. vi. 15. 19.

Christian, remember, that, if you commit the same sins as the ungodly around you, you can not do it with the same guilt.

The Jordan And Jericho.

Barren and cragged rise the mountains of Judea; arid and sunburned are the plains of Sharon; but where the winding waters of the Jordon flow, the sandy desert becomes a pleasant land.

The delta of the Nile is not more sunny, nor these bores of our mountain lakes more bright and verdant, than the picturesque banks of the Jordan; for here the hot rays of the sun are tempered by the refreshing stream, as it rushes majestically down to the Dead Sea; here luxuriant cornfields alternate with thorny groves and craggy rocks, and the rustling of the tall reeds mingle its sound with the murmur of the flowing waters.

Here the cool shade of willows, acacias, and holm-oak is enlivened by the bright tints of the pomegranate and oleander; while laurals, tamarisks, and arbutus attract the eye, as well as the slender fig-tree with its interlacing branches and broad, over lapping leaves.

The red, fuchsia-like flowers of the sidr, and the orange-tinted fruit of the solanum, glow brightly in the warm sunbeams; while here and there the turban-shaped head of a solitary palm-tree, supported on its slender stem, rises from out the thick undergrowth of bays and balsamtrees. In the shaded recesses of this wooded paradise, hung with graceful creepers of all kinds, dwell innumerable tribes of wild boars, otters, and leopards; while flocks of water-fowl,herons,storks, partridges, ducks, and snipes build their nests in the reeds, and the wood pigeon in the branches of the trees, from whence also gleam forth the beauties of many-colored birds, while the caroling of song-birds is heard in the thickets.

The beautiful vale of the Jordon might easily be made a very Eden, were men to settle there who could turn to acconnt the natural capabilities of the land; but the pilfering Bedouin races who encamp on the great plains of Esdraelon, and the wild hordes who shelter themselves in the caverns of the mountains of Moab, render any settlement impossible.

Once a year, however, the valley presents a most animated apperance. The Easter festival is kept by troops of pilgrims, who flock hither in caravans, undertaking the long journey on foot, or on camels and horses, to halt on the spot, aud bathe in the stream where Jesus is said to have been baptized by John. The right bank of the river being here flat, affords an easy and convenient access to the water, while the opposite shore rises in an abrupt chalkcliff. The Greek pilgrims undress, and, wrapping themselves in the linen garment which is destined to be their shroud, cross themselves three times, then stoop down into the water, and dip therein three times. They then sprinkle the sand over themselves, and believe all their sins to be thus washed away. The Christian Arab and Copt women, who generally fear to appear in public with unvailed faces, step down without hesitation among the crowd of men, with their children on their shoulders, and dip them repeatedly under the water, in utter disregard of their cries and screams. Still more violently do the Russians and Greeks act: their fanaticism is only appeased when some of their number, as often happens, have lost their lives in the rushing river—a fate apparently envied by the survivors.

The water of the Jordan is sweet, fresh, and clear as crystal, except at the time when it overflows its banks. It then disturbs the sand on its shores, and mingles with it, thus becoming of a dirty yellow color; but when left to stand, it soon clears, and the sediment falls to the bottom.

The Jordan (Schenet el kebir) takes its source in a marshy district near Hasbeiah, in Lebanon; flows through the lake of Gennesareth; and then, after many curves and windings, rushes into the Gohr, and loses its waters in the Dead Sea.—Its direct course is about one hundred and twenty-five miles in length, but it has many windings and angles. Near Jericho its width is eighty feet. At its entrance into the Salt Sea, where it creates a small delta, Lieutenant Lynch found it a hundred and eighty yards in breadth, with a depth of three feet.

At one time the Jordon mirrored in its waters beautiful towns, but now only miserable ruined houses. Not far distant from its banks was Jericho, the renowned "city of dates." Who does not know the Bible narrative, according to which, at the sound of the trumpets of Joshua, the walls crumbled into dust and ruin, and all the inhabitants, excepting Rahab and her father's house were extirpated? When rebuilt, it acquired fame as the seat of the school of the prophets; it flourished anew, and became, after Jerusalem, the first town of Palestine. In the time of Augustus, Herod held his court there; fine palaces overtopped the palm-trees; mighty acqueducts provided refreshing water to the populous commerical town; the spectacle-loving multitude were attracted by an amphitheater, in the arena of which the people assembled to deliberate; extensive store-houses were used by the rich merchants for the costly commodities with which they supplied the luxurious inhabitants of Rome and Alexandria; and the city was entered by ingeniously constructed roads, winding over the rocky mountains. Here were gathered Jews, Greeks, Romans, and Arabs; from Italy and Spain came soldiers, dancers, gladiators. In these thronged streets the wild children of Ishmael and Esau—dwellers in tents, picturesque and warlike—came to sell their flocks and herds, fattened on the rich pastures of the Jordan; men whom neither emperor nor queen could bind

With the glory of Jerusalem see also the starof Jericho. Sandy waste and heaps of stones, broken columns half burried in rubbish, and arches of acqueducts overgrown with creepers, are the sole remains of the palace of the king and its ancient glories. A miserable village of some thirty poor hovels, more resembling cow-sheds than human dwellings, alone remains; here and there a bedouin tent and watch-tower—such is the aspect of the present Jericho.

The dwellers in Riha, the modern representative of Jericho, are of the negro type. They have black woolly hair, and their countenances are deficient in intelligence. The appearance of the dirty huts of matted mud and rushes, in whose interior the half naked inmates lie extended, with their shaggy dogs by their side, only excites disgust. Hedges of thorns, to repel the nightly incursions of jackals, inclose the villiage; and what was once the most lovely region of Palestine, and made over as a gift to the beautiful Egptian Queen, Cleopatra, is now the resort of wild robber-tribes.—Christian Miscellany.

"Lord Save Me."

Peter's prayer while sinking on Galilee. A model for every sinner who is brought to bend the knee; for,

First: It knocks at the right door. It is not an appeal to the minister, or the church, or any pious friend. It is a carrying of the case direct to headquarters. It is the whispering of the anxious soul right into the Divine ear. Its first utterances leap strait to heaven.

Second: It asks for the most essential thing. The desires of the human soul are numberless. But when conviction presses they are reduced to one. What is earthly gain, or good, or joy, when an immortality of blessedness is at stake? Get salvation, and everything else worth having will follow. For that the suppliant cries.

Third: It asks for the right person. No time to plead for any one but self. It is these hands that are defiled. These feet that have strayed. This heart that the burden lies on. These lips that have been prayerless. This soul that is sinking. "Lord save me."

Two Ways of being lost.—There are two ways of coming down from the top of a church-steeple—one is to jump down, and the other is come down the steps; but both will lead you to the bottom. So, also, there are two ways of going to hell: one is to walk into it with your eyes open—few people do that—the other is to come down by the steps of little sins, and that way, I fear, is only too common. Put up with a few little sins, and you will soon want a few more. Even a heathen could say, "Who ever was content with only one sin?" and your course will be regularly worse and worse every year. Well did Jeremy Taylor describe the progress of sin in man: "First it startles him, then it becomos pleasing, then easy, then delightful, then frequent, then habitual, then confirmed. Then the man is impenitent, then obstinate, and then he is damned." Reader! the devil only wants to get the wedge of a little allowed sin into your heart, and you will soon be all his own.—Never play with fire; never trifle with little sins.

The Vessels of the Temple.

The holy vessels and relics of the temple at Jerusalem, some of which were descended from the time of Moses, from the hands of Aaron, and from the patterns indicated by Jehovah himself, are safe beyond all reach of human worship in the bottom of the Mediterranean sea.

Says Gibbon, in his "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire." "The holy instruments of the Jewish worship—the gold table and the gold candlestick, originally framed according to the particular instructions of God himself, and which were placed in the sanctuary of his temple—had been ostentatiously displayed to the Roman people in the triumph of Titus. They were afterward deposited in the Temple of Peace, and at the end of four hundred years the spoils of Jerusalem were transferred from Rome to Carthage by a barbarian who derived his origin from the shores of the Baltic. The vessel which transported these relics of the capital suffered shipwreck, and thus this cargo of sacrilege was lost in the sea."

LENGTH OF SERMONS.—The question is asked, how long ought a sermon to be? Well, that depends on its thickness. We have heard some sermons so thick through with solid thought that the preacher ought not to stop under two hours. We have heard others so thin that if the preacher had ceased talking at the end of fifteen minutes, it would have been of proper portion; so well proportioned, indeed that it would not have been remembered otherwise than as a very good sermon.—The general run of sermons should be cut off at the end of about thirty minutes. If a man talks an hour, or an hour and a half, he wants to be sure he has got a thick sermon.

"New Work on Baptism."

Not very long since, a minister in Georgia baptized several persons in a river, reading on the occasion several passages from the New Testament, which refer to baptism. An adult person of intelligence and culture, who was present, asked a Baptist to lend him a copy of that new work on baptism, and was greatly astonished to find that it was the New Testament.

He did not fear Death.

A writer in one of our New York daily papers recounts a pathetic incident which occured not long since on board an ocean steamer.

A little ragged boy, aged about nine years, was discovered on the fourth day of the outward voyage from Liverpool to New York, and carried before the first mate, whose duty it was to deal with such cases. When questioned as to the object of his being stowed away, and who brought him on board, the boy, who had a beautiful, sunny face, and eyes that looked like very mirrors of truth, replied that his step father did it, because he could not afford to keep him, or pay his passage out to Halifax, where he had an aunt well off, and to whose house he was going. The mate did not believe the story, in spite of the winning face and truthful accents of the boy. He had seen too much of stowaways to be easily deceived by them, he said; and it was his firm conviction that the boy had been brought on board and provided with food by the sailors. The little fellow was very roughly handled in consequence. Day by day he was questioned and re questioned, but always with the same result. He did not know a sailor on board, and his father alone had secreted him and given him the food which he ate.

At last the mate, wearied by the boy's persistence in the same story, and perhaps a little anxious to implicate the sailors, seized him one day by the collar and dragging him to the fore, told him that unless he confessed the truth in ten minutes from that time he would hang him on the yard-arm. He then made him sit down under it on the deck. All around him were passengers and sailors, and in front of him stood the inexorable mate with his chronometer in his hand, and the other officers of the ships by his side. It was one of the finest sights imaginable to see the pale, proud, sorrowful face of that noble boy—his head erect, his beautiful eyes bright through the tears that suffused them. When eight minutes had fled, the mate told him he had but two minutes to live, and advised him to speak the truth and save his life; but he replied, with the utmost simplicity and sincerity, bo asking the mate if he might pray.

The mate said nothing, but nodded his head, and turned as pale as a ghost, and shook with trembling like a reed with the wind. And there, all eyes turned on him, this brave and noble little fellow, this poor waif whom society owned not, and whose own stepfather could not care for him—there he knelt with clasped hands and eyes upraised to heaven, while he repeated audibly the Lord's Prayer, and prayed the dear Lord Jesus to take him to heaven.

Sobs broke from strong, hard hearts as the mate sprang forward to the boy and clasped him to his bosom, and kissed him and blessed him, and told him how sincerely he now believed his story, and how glad he was that he had been brave enough to face death, and be willing to sacrifice his life for the truth of his own word.

Some Great Things.

Many of us say, practically, if not in words, "I would willingly work for Jesus, if I might do some great thing for Him; might, like Luther, defy the Pope at Worms; or like the martyrs, confess Him at the stake. If I had the talent of a Whitefield, a Wesley, or a Spurgeon, how joyfully would I lead souls to Jesus; but in these times, and with my limited talents, what can I do? What do these little things that I try to do, these little crosses that I sometimes bear, what do these feeble words I sometimes speak, effect the glory of my Master?"

RELIGION EXEMPLIFIED.—I would give much for your religion unless it can be seen. Lamps do not talk but, they do shine. A lighthouse sounds no drum, it beats no gong, and yet far over the waters its friendly spark is seen by the mariner. So let your actions shine out your religion. Let the main sermon of your life be illustsated by your conduct, and it shall not fail to be illustirous.

He who has never tried the companionship of a little child, has carelessly passed by one of the greatest pleasures of life.

"Our Whole Religion is comprised in the Gospel. The Gospel is condensed in the word of God, as spoken by Jesus in his Sayings on the Mount. For the word of God endureth forever and this is the word which by the Gospel is preached unto you. As Moses taught the words which God sent him to speak.

As Moses taught that in teaching those words which God had commanded, he "set before them life and good and death and evil," so also Jesus taught that the "words which God had sent him to speak were life, that the commandment was life everlasting."

That we are not left in any doubt; because Jesus says, "If a man love me he will keep my words, and God will love him."

Jesus, when leaving the earth, gave his one, last great commandment, to his apostles, to go and teach what he had commanded them, that he would always be with his words, that where even two or three were in his name he would be with them.

That both Moses and all the prophets, which they persuaded, and rebuked, and threatened, yet they gave no new doctrine, but throughout all the Holy Scriptures, it is plainly shown that the whole burden of their cry was to hear and obey the law, as given in the word of God to Moses, because that law was perfect, it was the perfect wisdom of God. And Jesus in his New Testament, reafirms the law which he declares he came to fulfill, and he sets forth all the law in his sublime Sayings on the Mount, plainly and repeatedly showing the vital truth of that Scripture which says, "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the Whole Duty of man."

Coldness strengthens strong love, just as physical coldness makes strong people more vigorous, and weak ones more puny.

Prejudices are like rats, and a man's mind like a trap; they get in easily, and then perhaps can't get out at all.

Do nothing without design.

Answers to Correspondents.

Novice.—Not a bit of it. Withholding your name would only be encouraging such brethren in their whims. If you are sincere in your motives, and we have no doubt but you are, you must rise above all such persecutions. I know very well that there is a spirit of prejudice against young brethren and sisters who are active and zealous. Though we believe it is an evil spirit, it is certain that it is not a new one. Paul noticed it already among the early christians. But he encouraged them with the same language that I would now offer you: "Let no one despise thy youth; but become an example of the believers, in word, in deportment, in love, in faith, in purity." 1 Tim. 4: 12. That there was such a spirit among them, is farther evident from the following language: "Now if Timothy come, see that he may be with you without fear; for he works the work of the Lord, as I also do.—Let no one therefore despise him."—1 Cor. 16: 10, 11. Why did Paul fear that Timothy might be intimidated by the Corinthians? Simply because Timothy was a young man, and Paul knew that there was a prejudice against such. And inasmuch as he admonishes Timothy to allow no one to despise his youth, and now again warns the Corinthians not to permit any one to despise him, we think the conclusion is irresistable that that same spirit of jealousy toward young Christians and young ministers was then being manifested among the professed followers of Jesus.

How kind it was in old brother Paul thus to step forth and bespeak and defend the rights of the young soldier of the cross. How we do love that fatherly spirit that fosters the young and timid pilgrim. It is so Christ-like! We have but one Master and all we are brethren. Paul wanted the brethren to receive Timothy as equal with him, for, he says, "he works the work of the Lord, as I also do." No jealousy there. If Timothy does work—if the word is preached by him—if souls are converted through him, to God is given all the glory.

King Saul became jealous of little David, and sought to destroy him; but "when Saul saw that he behaved himself very wisely, he was afraid of him."

Elihu was afraid to give his opinion, because he was young, until he was "ready to burst like new bottles;" until he saw that the cause of God was suffering, for there was none that convinced Job, or that answered his words. Therefore Elihu concluded that "Great men are not always wise, neither do the aged understand judgment." He also learned that there is a spirit of inspiration in man, from the Almighty, which giveth them understanding. But, mark you, although the spirit of wrath was kindling in Elihu, when he saw that there was no answer in the mouth of the three men, and against Job because he justified himself rather than God, he nevertheless waited until they had all spoken, "because they were elder than he." A most worthy example.

We say to you, therefore, rise above all such "vain accusations." "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."

Because you are writing for the Companion is no evidence to anybody that you "want to be a preacher." It is nothing but the spirit of prejudice and jealousy that suggests such an idea. And in most cases those who make such accusations are the very persons who do want to preach, but nobody else than they themselves think they could preach. And even if you should become "full of matter" and the spirit within constrains you to open your mouth, and to utter knowledge clearly, we do not know that you should therefore shrink back and hide. It is not such a dangerous spirit. Preachers are not such bad persons that you need be ashamed when men say: "he wants to be a preacher."

As for the other excuse you offer, that some will say they only write "for the purpose of seeing their names in print, or have them presented to the public," we think there is nothing in it. You might as well say they do not write because they are ashamed to bear testimony to the cause.—We have heard of such. The literary status of the Companion is too low to be associated with their names. But the real cause why persons who bring such accusations do not write, is a better one. It is the very best that could be given. Persons of such contracted ideas would not be likely to be made preachers because of their contributions to the press.

"For these, and other considerations" I cannot grant your request. Speak and be refreshed. When the spirit says unto you write, then obey.

P. D. We cannot publish it for three reasons. First, because you do not give your full name; second, because we do not now wish to discuss that subject (feet-washing); and third because there is nothing in your article.

"Is it according to the word of God, and the order of the Brethren, for sisters to keep on their bonnets and shawls in time of preaching and council meetings? I want you to give your views on the same."

Our views you shall have. In the first place we will say it is not according to the word of God, for that word says nothing about it. It is not according to the word of God to wear bonnets or shawls at all. The name bonnet occurs only four times in the scriptures, and in three times out of the four it has reference to something worn by men. Our opinion is therefore, in short, that it is neither according to scripture for sisters to have their bonnets on during religious services, nor to take them off.

The name shawl does not occur in the word of God, therefore it must be disposed of in the same way.

Now for the order of the Brethren. We have examined the Encyclopedia, which pretends to give all the decisions of our Annual Meetings as far as they could be obtained, and it says nothing about bonnets or shawls. It is evident, therefore, that the church has given no "Order" upon the case.

Now, then, we have answered your questions, but we feel to go a step farther and ask you why you are concerned about such a matter as that, upon which the scriptures are entirely silent. Has not Jesus given laws and ordinances enough, which we do well if we keep them? Surely so. He has made the way narrow enough.

There are two things by which Christians should be governed. These are Revelation and Reason. We have placed Revelation first because we refer particularly to Christian government. As men, Reason is our first guide, but when we go to religion we first appeal to Revelation. And as Revelation is silent upon the question at issue let us apply our hearts, and "seek out wisdom and the reason of things."

Now the object and use of a bonnet is to protect the head from the heat of the sun in the summer, and from cold and storms in the winter. When, then, a sister enters the house of worship in the summer season, when she will be in the shade, she has no need for the bonnet on her head, and reason would seem to say: "take off your bonnet, sister." But then Revelation comes in and says, "Every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered, dishonoreth her head." So if the sister has no other covering with her, we think she had better keep her bonnet on, for we would not have her dishonor her head. But with us the sisters have a special covering for religious service, neither calculated for heat nor cold,—though it is to feared that it is often used for ornament. It is called a CAP, and is mostly made of some light fabric, like book muslin or cambric. This is no encumbrance even in the warmest weather. So if the sister has a cap on, we see no reason why she should not take off her bonnet in the summer time. But if in the winter time, the house should not be comfortable, or a sister feels chilly, reason and comfort would say to her, "Better keep your bonnet on."

As for the shawl; it is only worn for comfort in the cold seasons, and compares with the over-coats worn by the brethren. And as a good rule we would say, if it is cold enough for the brethren to keep their overcoats on during service, the sisters might safely wear their shawls, and even we would make due allowance for the delicacy of their sex, and difference in clothing. There ought to be reason in everything.

At this time it is fashionable for women to wear shawls, or some kind of hang around in the warmest weather. Some of our sisters are following this custom. The shawl then becomes an ornament, and we incline to the opinion that if it may be worn as such on the way to meeting, it may as well remain during service.

Now to conclude, in all these things we would not be contentious. If you are an overseer in the Church, and see any of your members violate any of your rules, or customs, or usages, first inquire for their reason. "Circumstances" do sometimes "alter cases." No reasonable sister will keep her bonnet or shawl on in a comfortable meeting-house unless she has some special excuse for doing so. It is not the general rule or custom to do so. The first thing after the salutation, when their friends come to see them, they invite them to take off their bonnets and shawls. Perhaps a pleasant invitation of the same kind in the Lord's house, by those whose business it is to receive guests, is all that is needed.

This is the way we would dispose of such matters. Never pretend to give scripture for a thing that is nothing but custom or tradition, or even reason. God's word must not be tampered with. Neither add nor diminish.

Announcements.

By an oversight our rule not to publish the letters setting forth the announcements of Communion Meetings, but simply giving the time and place, has again been broken. We shall endeavor to adhere to it in the future. We take it that all who have the time and place published mean to extend an invitation. All will so understand it. When it is specially necessary other directions may be given.

Twenty-two must be an unlucky number, or we are unlucky, or careless—perhaps it would be as well to say the latter. At any rate the unit figure of the number of last week's paper was not changed, and hence we have two Nos. 21 and no No. 22. Please mark the issue of June 1st, as as No. 22, so that the binder may not make a mistake in putting them up.

We have been somewhat irregular in our issues since the Annual Meeting. The paper was considerably behind time when we returned. Now we have caught up, and have put this issue to press several days earlier, in order to enable us to attend our lovefeast, on the 4th inst.

By some miscalculation No. 22 (as it should be) has run short, so that we can no longer furnish new subscribers with full sets from No. 21.

SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS will pay for the balance of this year, or $1.50 for a full year.

We call the special attention of our readers to the neat and readable appearance of this week's paper. Perhaps they will say, why not have it thus all the time? It ought to be so. We have good paper, good type, and a good press. But all these will not do without skilful workmen. In this we are short, so far as press work is concerned. We lack a good foreman, one who understands machinery, and at the same time is a practical printer. We could fill the position ourself, (egotistic, is it?) and expect to do so for a time at least. Forty-two dollars a month is more wages than we ever received. We can earn it now by working for ourself. We shall at least try one month to make up our loss at the annual Meeting, by not being allowed to publish the proceedings. In the meanwhile if you know a man that would suit us send him along.

There appears to be a misunderstanding with some regarding the minutes of annual meeting, in as much as we advertized them for sale, some think we did not intend to furnish them to our subscribers as usual.

Each subscriber will receive a copy free as soon as printed, which will likely be sometime during the present month.

Those who are not subscribers or those who want extra copies, may recieve them at ten cents each.

We have now secured a room in Tyrone for public worship, and when ministering brethren are passing over our road me invite them to stop off, and preach for us. We expect to have regular meetings, and a sunday school in operation, before long.

We have long desired to have a place of worship in our town, but the congregation at this place being small we were unable to build. Lately our school board has erected a building which has one room to spare. That one we have secured. Thirty-six dollars per annum. So we will preach in our own hired house.

Postcript from Brother D. C. Moomaw.

The following postscript to brother Moomaw's contribution in last week's paper was unavoidably crowded out of connection with it, the article having made more than we had anticipated and our space being limited. Brother M. was taken severely ill on Monday evening, preceding the council, and hence could not attend. He says:

"I am again restored to health. To those of our dear brethren and sisters whose sympathies and prayers I received on account of my misfortune in not being permitted to assemble with them during the session of the Council, my poor heart feels greatful; but their great reward will be, I pray the Father, in the resurrection of the Just. My disappointment was very great. I had cherished the hope for a long time, that much enjoyment was in store for me at that meeting, but just on the evening preceding, I was stricken down with something like that terrible disease, Cramp Colic. However, I had not lost the advantages of hearing the brethren preach at our meetings, before the meeting of the Council, which was a great comfort. This was not granted to some of our brethren and sisters who were the victims of affliction.

To the members of the holy brotherhood I send greeting in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ."

From Spring Run, Pa.

Our Communion season is over, and we have had quite a refreshing, and reviving shower of grace from the presence of the Lord.

On Wednesday, May 19th, we had a Council Meeting, and at that time received two members by baptism, three reclaimed, and two by recommendation. And on Sunday following we received five more by baptism.

On Monday 24th our Communion Meeting commenced, and we were favored with the labors of love by brethren John W. Brumbaugh, John Spanogle, and George Brumbaugh, and others; and in the evening we were again favored with the arrival of brother John Knisely of Indiana. Our souls were revived, and encouraged on our way to Zion.

We also had a choice for a minister, resulting in the election of brother Samuel J. Swigart. Brother Geo. S. Hanawalt was advanced to the second degree in the ministry. Our meeting closed on Tuesday, 25th, at 12 o'clock, and we think that many good impressions were made.

From Aughwick, Pa.

By the grace of God we are all well: thanks be to his excellent name. Our Communion season is past; had a blessed refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Hope the Lord will bless the labors of the brethren that were with us, and labored among us, in the good cause. Brethren Quinter, Pannebaker, and Hanawalt were the laborers. An election was held for a speaker, and one deacon.—Brother Isaac Book was set apart for the ministry, and brother George Barber to the deaconship. I hope the Lord will bless the brethren so they may be useful in their office.—I send you the following obituary notice.

The Germantown Sunday School.

The statistics of the Sunday School, taken from the Report, designed for publication in the Companion, are as follows:

The School was formerly opened in the 5th of May, 1867, with thirteen scholars, and on account of the fact that nearly all of the children in the neighborhood attended other sunday schools, it was regarded an experiment. The number of scholars increased, so that at the session held March the 29, 1868, 83 scholars were in attendance. The average attendance during the year was 55. For the year just closed the average was 73. At the session held February the 14, 1869, one hundred and seventeen scholars were enrolled. The school is divided into 14 classes. Numbers of books in the library, 341.

The report closes with the statement that the school is a complete success.

To my brethren who are not so favorable to the sunday schools. I would say: try it, and see if it will not have adifferent effect. I was not so favorable to sunday schools myself at first, as I am now. I am fully persuaded that no church in any town will be likely to be upheld without this institution; for the reason, that all other churches around us have them. It therefore requires all the means in our power to keep the Ark moving on.

It had a good effect in our meeting to bring children to a knowledge of their Redeemer, and we are instructed by the wise man to instruct or teach them in the way they should go, and when they get old they will not depart from it.

We have also a sunday school in the Upper Dublin Church. I had the pleasure of baptising a young lad, a sunday school scholar on Lord's day, May the 30. The occasion was very impressive. It was so arranged by the teachers that the candidate for baptism should walk with me, arm in arm, to the baptistery, the Wissahicon stream, and the sunday school scholars should follow; two by two, in procession. The members of the church also following in the same train, singing the song of Zion. I thought to myself what a contrast is this between the children that ramble about the streets, and those that are taught in the sunday school. It seems to have made a deep impression upon the spectators, as such a profound silence prevailed throughout the proceedings. I have baptised a goodly number in this church but this was one of the most impressing. This makes the sixth person lately added to this church.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as will be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Death-bed Warning.

Hearken ye sprightly, and attend ye vain ones,
Pause in your mirth, diversity consider;
Learn from a friend's pen, sentiments most painful—
Sick-bed reflections.

Healthful and gay, like you I spent my moments;
Fondly my heart said joy would last forever;
But I'd to gotten man hath no enjoyment
But by permission.

Sudden and awful, from the height of pleasure,
By pain and sickness thrown upon this down-bed—
Vain is its softness to assuage the pain of Raging disorder.

Tortured in body—not one limb escaping;
No sweet composure to a knit one prayer in,
All is disorder, yet my state eternal
Now is depending.

Vain are my groanings, all complaints are fruitless.
Changing my place does not abate my fever.
Here like a reptile on a bed of embers,
Turning, I languish.

Kindest attention of my friends most humane,
With the profound skill of a kind physician.
All skill is baffled, while distress and anguish
Tortures my whole frame.

Hopes of recovery my fond heart indulged,
'Till my physician to my great amazement,
Kindly informed me that my case was desperate,
Death fast approaching.

Wonders on wonders to my views now opened;
Life is advancing—to the grave I'm hastening;
Am I prepared for this awful moment,
Meet my Creator?

Twenty-five years I've spent without considering.
Man is a mortal, depending on a moment.
Life's but a shadow, time a flying arrow
Quick to dispel it.

Oft I have listened while death-bells were tolling;
Seeing graves open with spectators mourning;
But for myself in spite of all those warnings
Long life expected.

Counsels I've slighted, warnings I've neglected,
In my gay moments thoughts of death I banished.
When grown grey-headed then I had resolved
Death to prepare for.

Time in advance to me seemed moving slowly.
Days without number I'd proposed for pleasure;
But they're all blasted, now behold the end of
All my enjoyment.

O, ghostly death, pray stop one single moment,
'Till I give warning to my gay companions.
No time is granted for expostulation.
Shun my example.

For the Companion.

The word "Baptize" proven by the Scriptures to signify Immersion.

Men, speaking upon the subject of baptism, generally refer us to foreign language, to Lexicographers and writings of great men: they tell us that the word baptize is a Greek word; that it was not translated, but transferred from the original into our common English version; that the word "baptize" should have been rendered "immerse." This, no doubt, is all correct. However, I can percieve no material difference in a word; because it is not in one word that the meaning of a sentence is expressed but in a sentence the signification of a word may be comprehended. Therefore, whether it be baptize or Immerse, plunge or dip, or even if a word not in use had been inserted in lieu of the word Baptize, the connecting words, or the words forming the sentence, would give it the same signification would be comprehended in the word "immerse." Therefore, in treating this subject, I shall confine myself entirely to the Scriptures; they being "of no private interpretation," are such, "that the wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein."

My object in writing upon this subject is to exhibit by the sacred word, (and this, I persume, ought to be satisfactory to every honest inquirer,) that wherever the word baptize is used, a burial, covering, overwhelming, or immersion, is implied. There are five different baptisms spoken of in the Sacred Volume to which I will refer the reader, to wit:

1. The Mosaic.
2. With Suffering.
3. With the Holy Ghost.
4. With fire.
5. With water.

First, then the Mosaic [illegible] 10: 12: "Moreover, brethren, I would not have you ignorant how that all our fathers were under the cloud and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." We read, (Ex. 14.) that after Pharaoh, king of Egypt, had permitted the children of Israel to go and worship their God, his heart was again hardened against them, and went in pursuit of the children of Israel whom they overtook being encamped near the Red sea: who, when they saw the Egyptians approaching, were sore afraid; and cried unto the Lord. But Moses lifted up his rod and stretched out his hand over the sea, and the sea was divided: the waters became a wall on their right hand and on their left. God made them a grave and led them in, and covered them with his cloud. As they were advancing in their grave, the cloud which went before them to guide them on their way, moved over them and came between them and the Egyptians too keep them from being captured by their enemies. God brought them safely through that grave where Pharoah and his host found their last sleep. Thus we see that even in the type, (which was a "shadow of good things to come,") of the Christian baptism there was an immersion implied. They, having been in the midst of the sea, and the cloud being over and among them,

(for they were in the cloud,)they were entirely covered. Thus they were baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea.

2nd. The baptism of suffering. Luke 12: 50: "But I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished. When this baptism was accomplished upon the dear Savior, he himself declared that his heart was "exceeding sorrowful and fell down upon his face and prayed; and being in an agony he prayed more earnestly until his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground." Next he was taken by his enemies who stripped him of his raiment, placed a crown of thorns upon his head, and a reed in his hand, bowed the knee before him and mocked him, took the reed and smote him upon his head. Oh! pitiful sight! Could we now behold the "Lamb of God," yield to that dire baptism; could we see his sacred blood trickle down on his holy temples,(as we may well suppose it did,)we would, no doubt, conclude that he was indeed immersed in pain and suffering. But, alas! His baptism was not yet fully accomplished: he must yet bear his own cross toward the place of execution; upon which the dear Savior was fastened; nails were driven through his harmless hands and feet; he was raised up on the cross, where he continued to suffer until the whole creation seemed to mourn. The sun was veiled in darkness; the Father,(affected by the scene,)withdrew and left the suffering Savior to tread the "winepress" alone, until the Son faint and overcome with pain, was made to exclaim: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" The vail of the temple was rent from the top to the bottom, and the graves were opened. These are some of the events that transpired at the baptismal scene of suffering of our loving Savior. Now I would ask my daer reader to pause and reflect Can we not discover an Immersion in the performance of this baptism? "Surely he has borne our griefs and carried our sorrows." He was covered and bowed down with the sin of the world which was laid upon him, and which brought him into Joseph's new sepulchre; but God did not suffer him to remain there long. His Holy One "did not see corruption. Like unto the children of Israel, God made him a grave, suffered to be covered with stripes and wounds. But he was wounded for our transgressions: he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed. Yet God brought him safely through, and "received" him "up into glory."

Gospel Privileges.

How sweet and refreshing to our weary souls to meet with our brethren and sisters, and friends at the place appointed for public worship. When we have met in the all-prevailing name of Jesus, to worship and adore that lovely being who has called us out from among the beggarly elements of the world, and has said: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." To those who appreciate the blessings of this privilege, it is none other than the house of God and the gate of heaven. It is there that we can unite our hearts and voices in singing hymns of praise to our God, and it is there that we hear the glorious gospel proclaimed to us, inviting us all to come, and partake of the waters of life freely. Notwithstanding all this we must acknowledge that these privileges are very often abused, even by those who profess to be the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus—those who should shine as lights in the world. We often hear excuses framed for not attending the house of God. 'Tis said "a poor excuse is better than none." Although we may think our excuses are pretty substantial, it is to be feared they will rise up in the day of judgment and condemn us. Why it is that we are so careless and heartless as to let unnumbered blessings pass by unimproved. How many thousand souls are today grovelling in total darkness! The gospel has never been proclaimed to them in its primitive purity. They have never heard of that lovely home that is prepared for the people of God. Oh! should we not feel for these people who are sojourners in distant lands, and who are deprived of the privileges which we now enjoy, and speedily send the heralds of the gospel that they may point them to the lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world?

The privileges which we enjoy will only be to our condemnation unless we improve them in a way and manner that will be acceptable in the sight of God. We have not long to remain here in this world of sorrow and commotion, but we know a rest awaits us and all the faithful. But if we neglect our duty here we need not expect to meet the approbation of him who judgeth all things right. May we be ever ready to attend to our duties, so that when we are called upon to leave this world and its sinful amusements we may be the happy recipients of that beautiful land on high.

Full Life

"The trees of the Lord are full of sap." So sang David as he looked over the fertile valleys, and up along the terraced mountain slopes of the land which God had promised and given to his people. It is a glorious picture which, even now, amid the desolations that show where the hallowed soil has been trodden under foot of the Gentiles, is spread out before the eye of the traveler in the Holy Land. When the spring rains are over and the sun is taking his daily journey across the deep blue heaven that bends over Syria, and the fields are gorgeous with flowers, and animated with flocks, and musical with the songs of the shepherds, and luxuriant with the foliage of fig and mulberry and olive, prophetic with waving grain that holds the promise of plenty to every cloth,—then it is a prolonged and repeated rapture which one experiences in traversing the land where the royal singer breathed his spirit, and sank to adoration, and where the prophet were born that have trembled in the air at Bethlehem, and that bear up the aspirations of so many multitudes to day.

The country exhibits this swelling, expanding, bursting life on all sides to day. June has brought the delayed fervors and stimulus of summer. The kindled life wherein it was waiting, makes all the shrunken fibers swell with a new force, and fills the almost dry channels with an overflowing current. The grass stretches upward more and more, and waves in the breeze like a little forest. The leaves multiply and spread till they hold and absorb the descending floods of sunlight, only have the earth below. There is a concert in the groves which begins with the dawn and runs on till the daylight fades out from the western heaven; and all the calm night through, the swamps and streams are fringed with melodies in the minor key that seem to voice the griefs and yearnings of the human heart.—The very air is alive and life-giving. To breathe it is to feel the heart throb with added strength, and the pulses leap as it from excess of elasticity. All nature seems a reservoir of blessing, and God gives with a freedom and a fullness that make him appear prodigal in his beneficence. Every flower cup is filled fresh from heaven as often as the morning comes, and runs over with colored light hour after hour, as though the fountain were inexhaustible and the beauty need not be husbanded.—"The trees are full of sap," and life everywhere is so ample and active that it bursts out in a shower of [illegible] and proclaims its greatness and its gladness on every side.

The fullness of life in nature is suggestive. It symbolizes the bountifulness with which God lavishes his gifts upon men. He gives without stint as the soul. His word of truth scatters light for the spirit not less freely than does the sun for the eye. Christ comes that we may have the higher life, and have it more abundantly. He promises the gift of the Spirit in the largest measure, and waits to turn the promise into fulfillment. His pledge is that he will pour it out.—And he does not give abundantly merely in one season. The reaper need not wait "Three months" before putting his moral sickle into the grain and bearing off his sheaves. No watery desolation is appointed us after the harvest in the spiritual year. The summer beauty is perpetual there. It is always June with the believing and dutiful soul. The full life is an abiding possession. The righteous is like a tree planted by the rivers of God, and they never run dry, however the summer heat may parch elsewhere, and they are never chained by the tyranny of the frosts, however life may be frozen out of the lower forms of existence.

Partial or feeble life testifies against us. God gives, for we do not receive. He would keep all the channels of the soul full to overflowing, like the Nile at its flood. He would have barrenness nowhere, but grass, flower and fruit-fulness everywhere. He would have the products of grace hanging on all the boughs of character. He loves strength and fulness, not debility and shrunken sinews, in the souls which he trains on earth for a while, that he may fittingly remove them to their place in the upper garden. There life always abounds, the trees yield their fruit every month, and their leaves are for the healing of the nations.

A story for swearers.

A gentleman once heard a laboring man swear dreadfully in the presence of a number of his companions. He told him it was a cowardly thing to swear so [illegible] he was not afraid to swear

"I'll give you ten dollars," said the gentleman, "if you will go into the village churchyard, to night at twelve o'clock, and swear the same oaths which you have uttered here, when you are alone with your God."

"Agreed," said the man, "tis an easy way of earning ten dollars."

"Well, you come to me to-morrow and say you have done it, and the money is yours."

The time passed on; midnight came. The man went to the graveyard. It was a night of pitchy darkness. As he entered the graveyard not a sound was heard; all was still as death. Then the gentleman's words, "I'll go with God," came over him with a wonderful power. The thought of the wickedness he had committed, and what he came there to do, darted through his mind like a flash of lightning. He trembled at his folly. Afraid to take another step, he fell on his knees, and instead of the dreadful oaths he had come to utter, the earnest cry went up—

"God be merciful to me a sinner!"

The next day he went to the gentleman and thanked him for what he had done, and said he had resolved not to swear another oath as long as he lived.

How admirable is the religion, which, while it seems to have in view only the felicity of another world, is at the same time the highest happiness of this.

Remarks on Baptism.

"Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness."

These words of Christ, if they have any meaning at all, stand as an everlasting rebuke against all who exclude baptism from their creed, or contend for as many modes as the applicants desire.

"One Lord, one Faith, one Baptism." Eph. 4:5.

Who can look upon the efforts that are made by so-called ministers to lead people astray on this point, without feelings of deep sorrow and holy indignation? That there is but "One Baptism" is as plain as anything can be; and to practice many, and yet say that all modes make up the one, is against scripture and reason.

We believe in an almighty God. Christ is "God manifest in the flesh," and he said: "All power is given unto me in Heaven and in earth." No one will contend that he was baptized more than one way. Neither will any one say, if common sense is allowed to control the judgment, that when Christ gave the commission to teach and baptize, he meant any other mode than the one he has sanctioned by his own example. If Christ needed baptism on his own account, he is no fit person to be the Savior of sinners. If he was baptize by half a dozen modes, he is inconsistent, and no safe teacher. But as Christ was without sin, and became our model in baptism, and was consistent in all he did, we have no more right to invent modes of our own than we have to adopt all the devilish devices of the "mother of harlots."

All who have the least regard for the Word of God, believe that Christ has power on earth to forgive sins, or that such was his when here; and that a change of heart must take place in all that are truly penitent. But no one has a right to infer from these things, that it matters not how we are baptized, or whether we are baptized at all.

The bold declaration which a preacher uttered in our midst some time ago, that each convert may choose any baptism that best suits him, is without any truth, and plainly contradicts the Word of God. All genuine repentance is the same in substance; all true faith in God is one in character; and if the Holy Ghost works these changes and graces in the heart, he will not lead people to half a score of ways to baptize. There is but one faith, and this is the fruit of the Spirit, and this leads to one baptism, or the wisdom of these self-styled preachers is of more worth than the wisdom of God. The right baptism is found in the word, and not in our own notions; and the preacher that advocates two, three, or half a dozen modes, is guilty of the fearful sin of putting the tradition of men on an equality with the commandments of God.

Christ said: Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Not in the names, as though one action would serve for the three, but in the name. Christ said: "I am the way;" not the ways. Is not this plain teaching? So plain, indeed, that fools may not err! If we say, I baptize in the name of the Father, but accompany the declaration with no action, and the same of the Son, and in repeating the name of the Holy Ghost, immerse the person, is it not the flatest contradiction to call such a person baptized in the Trinity? Any child that has come to understanding can decide so simple a question. To baptize in the name of one only is all the same, in the sight of God, as no baptism at all.

If we would owe a firm of three men a certain [illegible] you your share, and not do so; and so to the second; and then to the third, giving only to the last the share which is due him, does any sane man think that the first two would be satisfied?

So in the matter of baptism. Let us not be guilty of falsehood in the very ordinance in which we publicly give ourselves to God. To baptize less than three times, while saying the three names of the Holy Trinity, is to lie in the face of God and man; and we know what the liar's portion is. Let us give to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost the honor due them.

The Savior taught his apostles to go and teach all nations, and baptize them, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever he has commanded them. It is very different with those who baptize any way that people may require. Such preachers do not believe that all power is given unto Christ, or else that he has made a very poor use of it. If half a dozen ways be only one baptism, how much of a baptism would but one way be? Let those answer who think they have a right to shape the gospel to suit their own fancy. If the many baptisms they practice compose the "One baptism," then each individual has but the fraction of a baptism.

Learned men candidly admit that baptism means immersion, and never contend for anything else except for argument's sake. But we need no learned exposition to show us this. Paul, in two of his epistles, calls it a burial. Let no one make light of so serious a matter. It is the commandment of God, and he is not mocked. If there is but one mode, and that consisting in as many actions as there are persons in the Trinity, then it is nothing but mockery to baptize in any way different from this one mode.

It is perhaps not strange that such views are held by certain persons, and that we should be called narrow-minded for holding to "One baptism." When preachers and members go with the world in its foolish fashions and wicked customs, allowing the women to pray with uncovered heads, saluting each other without the Holy Kiss, going to law, and such like things, it is only consistent, in this respect, that they should have a doctrine of baptism, which has no ground in the Word of God. Religion is with them a very loose matter; and they will doubtless find it too loose at last to anchor them to the rest that remains for the people of God. The Word is our guide; and if that is true, [illegible] Christians must find their hope of salvation in some other book. They give fulfilment to the words of the prophet: "They have forsaken me, the Fountain of living waters, and have hewn them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water." O the folly of giving heed to these false teachings, and of selling our souls at so cheap a rate! Such doctrines are very agreeable to the carnal mind, and cannot fail to bring together a great heap of flesh; but what is born of flesh is flesh. Half a dozen hooks will catch more fish than only one, but what is gained, if it be found that they are fish that have no fins?

My object is to show, that by accepting more than the one baptism of the Gospel, we give to man the honor due to God, and place more confidence in false prophets than in Christ. If these [illegible] who maintain there are many baptisms as they please, were to preach the Gospel to the heathens, how would they proceed in the matter of baptism? Would they teach him how, or would they ask him how? After having heard the word, and been convinced of sin, and having repented, how is he to find out whether any baptism at all is necessary? or how it is to be administered? If the Spirit teaches the folks in our neighborhood how they are to be baptized, why not do the same for the heathen? And yet the latter never dream of the thing, nor the mode, and yet all their knowledge of this matter is from the Word.

The doctrine that the Holy Spirit leads people to different modes of baptism, is a delusion every whit as great as that which causes the heathen to worship wood and stone. The pagans in our midst that preach their own Gospel, and follow their own decrees in the name of Christ, will bring upon themselves a heavier doom than the heathen abroad, unless they believe and obey "the good Word of God," and suffer themselves to be led by the Holy Spirit, who teaches "One Lord, one faith, one baptism."

The Four Graces.

Love, joy, hope, faith—these are graces of the Spirit, and under their powerful and combined influence, the apostle was caught up, as it were, into the third heavens, and scarcely knew whether he was "in the body, or out of the body." [illegible] Stephen, when he was stoned, saw heaven open to receive him. With the same Spirit, the apostles in prison sang praises to God at midnight. With the same Spirit, Daniel found the lion's den a paradise, and the three children in the burning, fiery furnace found no hurt; yea, they found Christ, the Son of Man, walking with them, and they had far better company in the furnace than the king on his throne, who put them there, possessed in his palace. They had a good conscience, they had a hope full of immortality, and they had the privilege of drawing near unto God.

Constantly endeavor to do the will of another, rather than thy own; constantly choose rather to want less, than to have more; constantly choose the lowest place, and to be humble to all; and constantly desire and pray, that the will of God may be perfectly accomplished in thee, and concerning thee. He that doeth this, enters into the region of rest and peace.

The Minister's Charge.

There is no more important charge given to to man than that of the minister of the Gospel of Christ. Nor is there one with a greater responsibility. "Preach the word" is his great charge. Necessity is laid upon him to do it; yea, woe will be unto him, if he does not preach the Word.

First, then, he must know the word; he must "study; give attendance to reading; give himself wholly to them." Let every minister become thoroughly acquainted with the entire word, and then be very cautious that he declare the whole of it, and does not take from or add to. We must all be born "by the word of God," and that alone "is the power of God unto salvation." A minister should "be as wise as a serpent, and as harmless as a dove." He should know how to divide the word, so that saint and sinner may receive their portion in due season. Bring out of the rich treasury of the word "things both new and old." Remember the word reaches all cases of business in this life, and not only to the house of God. Do not always harp on repentance, baptism, feet-washing, and humility, as if there were nothing more in the word, however essential these may be. "Teach them to observe all things," says Christ, and through it to every creature.

I have been led to pen these few lines after hearing zealous brethren, and lovers to the cause of Christ who are not yet brethren, complain of some ministers' preaching being composed so much of reproof on other societies, and of relating numerous worldly incidents, so that there is generally more offence given than if the simple and unadulterated word were preached. The word is sharp if not blunted,—no, I will rather say, hid,— by apologies, fault-findings, and other improper expressions not found in the word, which are so often placed before, after, and frequently thrown in between. "He whom God has sent, speaketh the words of God." There are some ministers who are so contracted in their preaching that their hearers always know about what they will say when they see them rise up to preach. If the minister does his part in watching, prayer, and zealous study of the word, he may depend on the aid of the Spirit, and not before. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." May your unworthy writer, with all the watchmen on the walls of Zion, "meditate upon these things," give ourselves wholly to them; that our profiting may appear to all. Let us "take heed unto ourselves, and unto the doctrine." Let us "continue in them: for in doing this we shall both save ourselves, and them that hear us."

Idle Words.

"But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment." Matt 12:36.

When I come to properly define idle words, as they are used by the greater part of the human family, I am almost at a loss to know to what degree to limit the definition; however, I must conclude that all words that do not convey a necessary idea, are with just propriety recognized as idle words, for which the Savior says men shall give an account in the day of judgment. This being the case, it becomes man to properly investigate the necessity of the words used by him, as well as notice the things that are performed by his hands. If the human race would pay more attention to the words that are used by them, I am satisfied that far less evil would be done by vain talking.

Are there any of the readers of the Companion that use vain and absurd expressions? If there are, how long will they continue in the evil practice.

It is in the power of any person to quit the use of any idle words. Come to the conclusion that you will use no word that is not necessary to convey an idea. The use of idle words by parents among children, is a double evil, as it is evil for the parents, and learns the children to habituate themselves in a gross error, that will follow them to the judgment bar.

Glorifying God.

"For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's."

The valuation of an article is generally estimated by the price of it. The price with which our redemption was purchased infinitely exceeds all which was ever paid for any earthly commodity:

therefore it is but reasonable that all honor and glory should be rendered to our great Purchaser by our bodies and our spirits, which are his. It is unnecessary to ask how we can glorify him since God by his Spirit teaches us that there are so many ways.

There is one way, we regret, that is too little appreciated, and too often neglected; that is, religious conversation. It is as truly a means of grace as any other exercise which has the effect to promote personal heart-piety. That there are benefits derived from it, all who habitually engage in it can testify, from its happy effects upon their own minds and hearts. How often it occurs, in the order of Providence, that we meet with our friends in a social capacity where the entire number are professors of religion! With the heart all aglow with the love of God, we want to tell of it, we do so long to talk about Jesus (for, if we talk with him in the closet, we shall not want for an abundance to talk about him in public).

At a suitable time, we introduce the subject of personal religion. Too often there is only a monosyllabic reply, or, at most, a few cool, brief remarks made; and the subject is changed for a more congenial one. There is a manifest disrelish for it: we have evidently mistaken the topic: it fails to interest. After two or three unsuccessful attempts to maintain the conversation, we are compelled to let it drop, and remain in silence on that subject.

Then commences a spirited discussion and comments upon the latest styles of the different articles of dress and their material, which, together with gossip and some unimportant items of matters and things in general, make up the conversation; and thus the visit terminates with little or no good being accomplished. Instead of a "feast of fat things," it is only "husks" with which we have been fed. In both cases, it is equally true, that "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." In such cases a rich opportunity is lost; and are we not accountable for every one? and are we not guilty before God? Not only he is not glorified, but is he not really "wounded in the house of his (so-called) friends"?

How often do we hear Christians remark "Oh, how much good religious conversation does, me! I always feel so strengthened and encouraged by it, that it seems as if I can bear the trials of life so much better." In the social interchange of heart-experience, many times the fitly-spoken word is uttered, which is owned of God, and made effectual in reclaiming the wanderer, or arousing the lukewarm to newness of life. The tried and tempted one is inspired with new hope; the drooping spirits are revived; the desponding heart is cheered, and made to rejoice; the afflicted one is comforted; and, by thus "bearing one another's burdens, we fulfil the law of Christ;" and God is "glorified in our bodies and in our spirits, which are his."—Guide to Holiness.

Answers to Queries.

"I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth." Isaiah 43: 6.

In reading over the chapter I came to the conclusion that the Lord, through the Prophet, is speaking of his "people," or his church upon the earth:—and has reference in the 5th and 6th verses; to gathering together his people from the four parts of the earth: From the north and from the south, from the east and the west, into his church militant, and triumphant. Hope this may suffice the Querist and I trust if we read the first 8 verses of the chapter, we may all understand the text.

"Shall go in and out, and find pasture. John 10: 9." The speaker is not in and out of the church! But we might say in and out among the brethren, or in other words: whether we stand or walk; whether we work or be idle: we may meditate upon the sacred word, and find pasture. Jesus says: I am the door: and if we enter in by him, we indeed find pasture. For many are the pleasures and comforts that we can partake of, in this life; and in the world to come, everlasting life and happiness.

"For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the word and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one." John 5: 7. Let us turn to St. John 10: 30. I and my Father are one. We believe if the Father and the Son are one: then we also must believe that the Spirit that was in them agreed in one. To prove that Christ is the word spoken of in 1st. John 5: 7.—we will call your attention to St. John 1: 14: "And the word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth." And since the Savior is ascended into heaven, He can, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, bear record to all our works, be they good or evil.

Spread of the Gospel---My Experience.

"Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they do not believe? and how can they believe on him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they are sent?" Paul

The above interogations occur in the 10th chapter of Paul's Epistle to the Romans, and deserves our serious consideration. I am more impressed with the importance of the language of the Apostle to-day, than I have ever been before in my life.

It has been my happy privilege to attend our Annual Meeting, which recently came off in Virginia, and which was the first meeting of the kind it has ever been my privilege to attend since I became a member of the church. But I confess, that I was greatly surprised at the opposition manifested on the part of some of the brethren, to the laudable and praiseworthy project of raising funds for the more general defusion of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, an enterprise which I consider to be worthy of the co-operation of Angels and of God. Can it be possible that men whom God has blessed with abundance, and a super-abundance of the goods of this world, who profess to have the love of God in their hearts, would hesitate for one moment in contributing to such a glorious enterprise!

"Can we whose souls are lighted
With wisdom from on high,
Can we to men benighted,
The lamp of light deny?"

Oh, I ask, in the name of Jesus, will we for the sake of a few paltry dollars and cents, refuse to our fellow [illegible] to those who are in darkness with regard to the will of God concerning them—who have never heard the gospel preached in its purity—who are hungering for the "Bread of life"—whose souls' salvation cost the groans and agonies of our Lord Jesus Christ—will we through penury and selfishness, withhold from them the means of light and salvation? But I am persuaded better things of you Brethren, though I thus speak; for I am made to believe that if the Brethren could but see their duty in this thing, and could but eradicate from their minds their former prejudices against this system of contributions, that no people upon earth, would be more willing, and more liberal in giving aid for the support, and spread of the Gospel.

I am aware, from my experience and observation, that the "Salary System," always has, and ever will have a tendency to corrupt the ministry, and therefore, I, for one, am opposed to it. I want no such system adopted, all I desire is, that poor brethren who are efficient workmen, and capable of doing much good in their calling, may receive that aid from the church, which will enable them to do the greatest possible amount of good."

I am aware, that there are often objections raised to this cause, and arguments offered against it—that they have the scripture to read for themselves, and that they are very plain and explicit, so that they could understand, and conform to them, if they would. But "how can they hear without a preacher, and how can they preach except they are sent?"

I herein propose to give a brief sketch of a few incidents in the history of my past life. And I do assure you, dear brethren, that I do not do it through any ostentatious motive; but solely and alone, for the purpose of convincing you if possible, of the great importance of a more strenuous, zealous, and hearty co-operation in the good work of the Lord.

I was born and raised in Johnson Co., one of the upper, and most mountainous Counties in East Tennessee. Being surrounded, as I was, from my earliest recollection, by those lofty mountains which are so prominent in this part of our State, and breathing the pure, free air of the wild, romantic scenery by which I was surrounded, and drinking of the pure and crystal-like streamlets which gushed so abundantly from those mountains and hills,—no wonder, with such surroundings, that I should naturaly imbibe a free and romantic nature. I have, therefore, in all my intercourse with my fellow-men been frank and open in my speech speaking out freely the true sentiments of my heart, and acting upon my honest convictions of right and wrong. In those days, and in this country of my early childhood, Schools, and facilities for the improvement of the mind, were not so plenteous and convenient as they are now; in fact they were very meager. I however, was placed at school when I was about ten years of age, where I made some proficiency in the study of the English Sciences. From my earliest recollection, I was under the influence of the Baptist Denomination; for, be it known, that at the time of which I write, there were no other professed Christians in Johnson County, except a few Methodists, who were regarded almost in the light of heretics by the large majority of our citizens. I was, therefore, early impressed with the firm belief that the Baptist Church was the true Church, and that all other ways were wrong,

"How fair so e'er they seem."

And although in my reading, and examination of God's word, I found many requirements, as I thought, which they failed to teach and observe; and, when I would interrogate any of them with regard to these things, It was told, "that it was not given to every one to understand the mysteries of the kingdom of God; but to the elect only—that these things were mysteries which could only be understood by those who were the highly favored of God, called and set apart by the Holy Ghost, and sent by God to preach, and to explain his Word—that these were figurative expressions, and must be spiritualized—that they must not be taken in a literal sense, but in a spiritual.

During the time of my childhood, "the Brethren" passed annually through our country while on their missions of love to the Brethren in Ash County, North Carolina. While on those transient visits, they always stopped over night at the house of one of my neighbors, where they would have an evening appointment to preach. I almost always attended those meetings, so that I heard the Brethren preach, probably once a year, from my earliest recollection. But the Brethren then, as also yet, deemed it most prudent probably, to reserve their "larger guns," and not to discharge them until they had laid siege to a place; and as they, at that time, had no idea of endeavoring to hold the country, they very wisely, and prudently, said nothing upon controversial points, or the doctrine and practices of the Church. From these circumstances, I, and the citizens of our county, as a matter of course, learned but little of the doctrine, and practices of the Church. All that we could gather from their preaching, and from what we could hear concerning them, was, that they believed in baptism by trine immersion; and, that it must be done by a forward action, or face foremost; that they ate a supper in connection with the Communion of bread and wine; that they observed Feet-washing, and the Holy Kiss. For all of which things I tho't I could find some foundation in the Word of God, except the first two, vis.: Trine immersion, and the forward action. But, as I had not only imbibed, but also inherited, Baptist sentiments, being raised and taught by Baptist parents, I, like all other Baptists, thought that they had a spiritual signification, which none but Baptist preachers could explain. For I would as soon have believed that the Scriptures were wrong, as that a Baptist preacher who spake under the immediate influence of the "Holy Ghost" could err in his explanation. During the time of which I am writing, there was quite a sensation produced in "our country" by the introduction of a "new Gospel," as it was called, by a sect of people whom the Baptists called New Lights, but who called themselves "Christian Baptists." Here was ground for real fears by the Baptist Denomination, from the fact, that those Christians, or New Lights, were so nearly like the Baptists in a great many of their practices, that they were liable to deceive. Those Christians, or Cambellites, as they are more commonly called, taught, however, "that all scripture is given by inspiration of God; is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, and thoroughly furnished for every good work;"—and that we shall take heed "thereto, as unto a light which shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in our hearts, knowing that no scripture is of any private interpretation." Hence they urged the necessity of reading God's word and obeying according to instructions therein given. When this controversy got up between the Baptists and the Disciples, I began to examine the subject more closely, and finally came to the conclusion that the Cambellites were the nearest right, and that the scriptures were plain and intelligible, that they were addressed to the understanding of the masses, and that God desired us to obey all his commandments and practice according to his instructions. Hence, I believe that feet-washing, the Lord's Supper, and the Holy Kiss, should be observed, all of which they practiced and taught, except the Supper. They also taught that baptism was for, and not because of, the remission of sins. The consequence was, that I became a member of the Christian Church, as it was then, the best light, and the best opportunity I had at the time. I remained a member of the Church for about ten or twelve years, when I became more particularly acquainted with the "Brethren." And although I could not so readily understand their reasoning upon the subject of trine immersion, and the forward action, yet upon the mean I liked their doctrine very well. But time passed on, and I at length became somewhat uneasy with regard to my condition; for I honestly believed that my heart was not right in the sight of God. I therefore, began to pray to God for the guidance of his Holy Spirit, and I began also to retrospect my passed life, and the more I scrutinized my passed conduct, the more abominable, and sinful it appeared to be. I therefore began to pray to God in good earnest for mercy, and for pardon for my past sins. I thought, and felt, that I was willing to do any thing which was in my power to do, so that I might secure the pardon of my sins, and the favor of God.—But I did not know what to do. And as if to drive me into dispair just at this juncture of time, the idea presented itself to my mind, that all my efforts at a reformation were in vain; that I was only giving myself useless trouble, and afflicting myself unnecessarily; that I had passed beyond the recovery of hope; that I had committed "the unpardonable sin," in that, I had made a profession of the name of Christ; that I had surrounded the Lord's table, ate and drank unworthily, thereby eating and drinking damnation to my soul, and consequently need expect no mercy. These thoughts almost drove me to despair. I became gloomy and melancholy, and even absent-minded. Often times, when persons talked to me I did not know what they were saying. And indeed so horrible and dark were my future prospects that I lost my desire for sleep or food. I delighted greatly in solitude, where I might be alone.

So with this feeling actuating me, I one day took a sprouting hoe to work at destroying some brushwood in my meadow; but really my object was that I might be alone. Here in this solemn hour, indeed the most solemn of my life, I entered into serious covenant with God, that if he would have mercy upon me, I would serve him faithfully as best I knew how, to my life's end; and in making this covenant, I experienced that rest which the soul experiences in coming to Christ. I had there, in that solemn hour, when I felt as Job says, like "the pains of hell had got hold upon me," promised if God would have mercy upon me, that I would endeavor to serve him to the best of my ability the remainder of my life, no matter at what sacrifice of comfort, property, and even life. After I had thus experienced that rest which Jesus promised the penitent believer when he said: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy ladened, and I will give you rest."

I was then more desirous than ever before to associate with the People of God; but the great inquiry in my mind was, where shall I find them? I therefore began to look about for some Church which I could regard as the right Church. The Church to which I already belonged I could not believe to be right, because they had measurably abandoned the practice of the Ordinances for which they so zealously contended when I first became associated with them. Therefore, my mind naturally reverted to the Baptists, and I soon found my former prejudices revived in their favor. But here I found a very formidable difficulty in my way, in the fact that they were not keeping all the commandments of Jesus, as I understood them; and, indeed, were even ridiculing those who did try to do so. I could not, therefore join the Baptist Church, because in doing so I could not keep my vow and covenant with the Lord, to serve and obey him in all things according to my best light and ability. I now turned my attention to a close scrutiny and examination of the tenets and practices of the BRETHREN.

I found them teaching, and practising just what I understood to be the Gospel in its most comprehensive, and also in its most simple sense; except Trine Immersion, and the forward action. These two things perplexed my mind very much, and stood greatly in my way to uniting with the Church. Consequently, I began to examine those two propositions very closely, and for the first time in my life, I attempted an analytic examination of the last Commission of Christ Jesus to his Apostles. When I came to analyze the commission, I found that it was a compound sentence, composed of various parts of speech. Those different parts of speech I separated from each other, or considered them separately, so that I might find the relative bearing of each word, its office, and its influence upon the others. Thus, when I came to consider the verb "baptizing," I found it to be an active verb; because it was indicative of the performance of an action. I also found it to be transitive; because it was followed by the pronoun them, which referred for its antecedent to the noun nations. Hence the noun nations was in the objective case, receiving the action of Baptism. Therefore, I came to the conclusion at this stage of my investigation, that, if all the Nations could receive Baptism at one time, there would be no necessity for but one action. But I found upon examining the subject a little farther that this one action was to be performed in three separate and distinct names,—those of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, hence, this one, or same action, must necessarily be repeated in order to correspond with the addition of names, that as they were to be baptized in the name of the Father, there must be an action performed in that name; and, as the verb baptize was superceded in the sentence by the introduction of the conjunction and, that therefore, it (the conjunction) assumed to fill the office of the verb, and also that of its own, which was to add words, and make of simple sentences a compound one. I, therefore, was forced to the conclusion, that as often as the verb baptise (or its substitute) was repeated, there must of necessity be a corresponding action; and hence, in order to obey the Commission, there must be an action performed at the mentioning of each name—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

But here my great warfare began. My relatives and friends were mostly Baptists—the Baptist Church was a large, respectable, and influential denomination, which it would be an honor to any man to be associated with; while "THE BRETHREN" were rather insignificant, old fashioned, and beneath the dignity of a gentleman. Therefore, if I were to join the BRETHREN, I would loose the confidence of my friends, and also lower myself greatly in the estimation of the world.

These thoughts perplexed my mind greatly, for some considerable time, and caused me to hesitate in doing my duty. But when I would remember the vow I had made, to make any sacrifice, even to life itself if need be, I hesitated no longer, but went forward, and associated myself with the brethren. I now consoled myself with the happy reflection, that I had been able to gain such a victory over the "old man," and therefore my severest battle was fought. But very soon I found that I had yet another, more severe and sorer trial to encounter than the one I had just passed through.—I had not been a member of the church exceeding a twelve-months, untill the brethren laid "the yoke" upon me, by placing me in the first degree of the ministry. This I considered at the time to be a very grievous burden, and one which I was entirely unable to bear, as I had no talent whatever for public preaching; but that God "who tempers the wind to the shorn Lamb" enabled me to bear this cross with patience, and Christian fortitude. I was enabled to console myself with the reflection that my duties in this capacity did not extend very far, and that therefore I could confine myself to the neighborhood of my acquaintance; and although it might sometimes happen that I would be called upon to read a portion of Scripture and open the services at our meetings with prayer, yet this probably would not often be the case. This trial I endeavored to let sit as lightly as possible upon me, and I should never have had any serious grounds of complaint, had this been the heaviest burden I was called upon to bear. But that God whom I had so often offended saw fit to lay heavier and greater responsibities upon me.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Regularity of Habits.

Much attention has deservedly been paid of late years to the building up of the physical constitution. In a newly settled country, where regular labor is necessary, and the mind not overtasked, there are but few cases of prolonged ill health: but when wealth increases and necessity of manual labor ceases, the leisure thus afforded is generally filled either by a close application to mental pursuits or by devotion to a luxurious and, perhaps, dissipated mode of life. Either of these exclusively pursued will produce the physical deterioration so commonly the accompaniment of a community. But an intelligent people will soon perceive this evil, and apply all their energies to guard against it, and to seek regenerating influences. Thus, while twenty years ago New England was striving only after intellectual development, and large proportions of children of the wealthy classes were born with the seeds of consumption, or other kindred disease, there is now a marked improvement in physical culture. So in wealthy circles all over the country physical exercise is becoming fashionable

This renewing of physical exercise in different forms is a most valuable step in the work of building up a strong constitution, which we hope to see extensively carried out in every portion of our land, especially in our cities, where the duties of life are necessarily so often sedentary. We must, however, remember the physical exercise is but one step—an important one, certainly, but by no means the only one in this work. The formation of regular habits of life is still sadly neglected among us, and until it becomes fashionable to eat moderately and only at stated intervals, to sleep sufficiently, and during the hours of the night, and to exercise regularly but not excessively, we are yet far from having reached the right point in physical culture. There are few who know, and still fewer who realize the evils to the physical system of irregularity in habits. There is a power in all living beings of repairing damages caused by attacks from external agencies and the lower we go in the scale of existence, the stronger that power becomes, so that even when a portion of the body is removed from some of the lower orders of the animals, a new one will grow, and in many worms and other insects the parts thus severed will supply the necessary organs, and each become a separate existence. That this fact is still more evident in the vegetable kingdom every one who grows a plant from a slip is aware. This power, then, though existing in man, is less fully developed; and the teeth are probably the only organs, that one removed can ever be restored.

But so far as the union of broken bones, the healing of wounds and the resistance of nature to diseases, this power is inherent in all and is greatly regulated in its strength by the habits of the individual. A system of attack and resistance is constantly going on in the frame of every one of us. The power to restore increases with the regularity of the attack, but if the frame is attacked at uncertain times and with irregular force, the constant vigilance necessary to resist must before long wear out the strength of the constitution. Proper exercise, pure air, nourishment and recreation, are like the withdrawal of the attacks, and if these are made regular the attacks will also be regular, and the resisting power will have time to accumulate.

It has been abundantly proved that six hours of sleep, taken at regular and proper times, are equal in recuperative energy to eight taken at uncertain periods; and regularity of eating and drinking, of toil and rest, of study and and play, conduce far more than is now commonly believed, to the grand work of building up a fine, vigorous and healthy constitution. No keenness, or culture of intellect that fails to recognize every part of healthy culture, no wealth, no morality, not even a religion that does not embrace the preservation of the physical sytem from deterioration, and its cultivation to the highest perfection, can ever be a permanent force in the world.

Be kind to your Sisters.

If brothers and sisters would but realize how sad they will be in future life, thinking of those little unkindnesses and bickerings in which they are apt to indulge—if they will could realize the sharp and bitter pangs they will feel in thinking of unnecessary or spiteful pain inflicted upon dear departed ones—juvenile irritability and patience and forbearance would be wonderfully improved. Some families, with every comfort around them, scarcely know what happiness is. Peevishness and passion rule the day. Angry words and angry reply, unkindness begets ill will, and the circle that might enjoy perpetual sunshine are almost strangers to domestic peace and quiet. How easily all this might be avoided—how certainly they ought to be! The following extract, taken from the American Messenger, gives the exact idea we would impress upon our young readers:

Boys be kind to your sisters.—Think how many things they do for you; how they love you in spite of your ill-temper or rudeness; how thoughtful they are for your comfort, and be you thoughtful of theirs.—Be ever ready to oblige them, to perform any little office for them that lies in your power. Think what you can do for them, and if they express a wish be ready to gratify it if possible. You do not know how much happiness you will find in so doing. I never yet knew a happy and respected man who was not in youth kind to his sisters. There is a beautiful song which says:

"Be kind to your sisters—not many may know
The depth of true sisterly love:
The wealth of the ocean lies fathoms below
The surface that sparkles above."

It is much easier to think right without doing right than to do right without thinking right. Just thot's may, and often do, fail of producing just deeds; but just deeds are sure to beget just thoughts.

Christian Participation in Worldly Amusements.

Considering the question of the theatre and kindred fashionable amusements, as respects the duties and obligations of men and women professing to be Christ's people, it is, in our judgment, a very grave mistake to admit, by entering into casuistic discussion of the subject that there is any room for discussion. It is one of the grand strategies of the devil to get up debate upon questions of religion not debatable, and thereby to unsettle the consciences of Christian people with doubts. The Unitarian who receives the Scriptures only as of the same authority with natural religion and reason, and denies the depravity of the race, may perhaps argue consistently enough with his theory, that God's will concerning human duty may be gathered from the instincts and desires which he has implanted in man; and that as he has implanted a taste for amusements of the theatrical sort, that taste may righteously be indulged by Christians. The argument, however, obviously proves too much, and therefore proves nothing; for it is equally good to prove that we may organize under Christian patronage, "club houses," gambling hells, beer saloons, and bagnios.

But to intelligent Christian men and women, with the word of God in their hands and in their hearts, as the infallible rule of faith, it is simply impossible that this question of indulgence in such worldly pleasures as the theatre, the masquerade, the card table, and the dance, can be a doubtful or debatable question.

For, in the first place, upon the very surface of the gospel platform of Christian duty lie scattered broadcast such precepts as these, "If any man will follow me let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me." (Luke 9: 23.) "If thy hand offend thee cut it off; if thine eye offend thee pluck it out and cast it from thee." (Mark 9: 43.) "If ye were of the world the world would love his own—because I have chosen you out of the world, the world hateth" (John 15: 19.) ("I will put enmity between her seed and thy seed.") "Love not the world nor the things that are in the world. If any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him." (1 John 2: 16.) "And be not conformed to this world, but be ye tranformed in the image of your minds." (Rom. 12: 2.) "Ye adulterers—know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God—whosoever will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." (James 4: 4.) "Teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present evil world." (Tit. 2: 11.) But space fails to cite all. And instead of encouraging any casuistic debates about how far we may go as Christians under these precepts, in the way of self indulgence, the principle is constantly inculcated that even in things per se sinful, the Spirit of Christ leads to shun that which may become a stumbling-block to others. "Whoso offendeth one of these little ones, it were better that a millstone, etc." "But take heed, lest this liberty become a stumbling-block. If meat maketh my brother to offend, I will eat no meat," etc. (1 Cor. 8: 9–12.

But, in the second place, these gospel precepts are not left to our casuistry to interpret, but leave their root in the great fundamental law of redemption—the relation of Christians to the person of Christ.

The worldliness of thought, feeling, taste etc., which such amusements minister, is not merely incompatible with specific ethical laws of the gospel; but with the most fundamental conceptions of the relations of Christians to Christ. Nothing can be plainer in the gospel than that our Christianity is not related to Christ as philosophy to a philosopher, as the Platonic thought to Plato; but that day by day the true Christian lives in conscious relationship to the ever-living Author of his creed and his spiritual life. The Platonic system of thought is not damaged though Plato were annihilated; but Christianity is non-existent apart from Christ. It is not a doctrine, as Unitarians conceive, bequeathed by Christ to a world with which he has ceased to have any dealings; it perishes outright when abstracted from its Founder. Christians feel that He is their living Lord, ever present with them; and the Christian life springs from and is sustained by the presence of Christ in the soul as a quickening spirit. Every true Christian may say with Paul, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Christ lives in Christians; He thinks in Christians; He acts in, and through Christians No one can read catch the spirit o His wonderful discourse in John 6th concerning the bread which came down from heaven—His flesh mea indeed—without perceiving that th personal Christ is inseparable from Christianity.

It is altogether an inadequate conception of Christ's work as the purifier of Christians, that He called men to holiness of life merely by ethical precepts and by the beauty of his own example; and confronted them with a living ideal of holiness so as to shame them. If that had been all, he would merely have created in them a torturing sense of short-coming and impurity. He did far more than that. He made himself one with our nature that he might by contact purify it He folded the humanity around his eternal person and made it his own and then by the gift of his Spirit bound us to it, and through it to himself. And henceforth the Christian humanity is to be conscious of a presence within it, before which the unclean spirit of the world shrinks away. Such is the sublime argumentation of Paul with the Colossians; as from the premise of the "Head from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increasing with the increase of God," he reaches the practical conclusion—"If ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world," and "if ye be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above; set your affections on things that are above and not on things on the earth. For ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God. Mortify, therefore your members which are on the earth.'

Now it is this profound gospel mystery of the oneness of the members with the Head, and the consequent indwelling of the Holy Spirit upon which the Apostles ground their precepts of non-conformity with the world—in its pleasures and allurements "Know ye not that your bodies are members of Christ—shall I then take members of Christ?" etc., (1 Cor. 6. "Know ye not that your bodies are the temple of the Holy Ghost?" The tendency to worldly indulgence and allurements, therefore, is mournful because as this tendency is strong it argues a corresponding weakness of faith. And the ground on which the christian pastor warns and rebukes, is chiefly neither because of any inher at sin in the amusements themselves, or even the ethical precepts of the gospel against worldly conformity, but as evidences of a decay of spiritual life, and danger of making shipwreck of the faith. Whether able metaphysically to prove the sin or not—or to demonstrate the points of casuistry arising under the applications of the gospel rule—or to confirm it by testimony of the Church or not—he signs of spiritual decay are manifest, and therefore he warns and enforces the gospel precepts upon the declining believer.

And now what gives its special points to this argument from the high mysterious nature of the christian life is the life of Christ in the soul, is the further fact that the life of Christ our model on earth, was a life of special self-denial, and abstinence from worldly pleasures. Though "He was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor." Why was the life of Jesus on earth a life of such self denial? Why might he not as well have enjoyed position, ease and luxury? Even though after such a life of pleasure he should have paid the penalty of sin? Simply to be the example of self-denial to his people. Hence the argument so often used by the Apostle—"if ye suffer with him ye shall reign"—and Paul's idea of perfecting the sufferings of Christ in his body, etc.

Hence, therefore, when looking for the Scriptural argument against indulgences in worldly pleasure, its real root will be found to be back even of the ethical precept—"Be ye not conformed to the world," in the nature of the Christian life as derived from Christ's life, and marked by the same features of self-denial.

Such is the true ground of the argument. The precepts against the allurements of the world have their root in this mysterious oneness of Christ with his people. Of course it is needless to waste time in argument of this sort with men of the world who have no spiritual apprehension of such truths.—Stuart Robinson.

The Fear of God is mingled with hope! "The eyes of the Lord are upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy." Fear is to hope as oil is to the lamp—it keeps it burning. The more we fear God's justice the more we may hope in his mercy.

Christian Family Companion.

Tyrone City, Pa., June 15, 1869.

The Lovefeast at Warrior's Mark.

On Friday, 4th inst., was our communion meeting at Warrior's Mark. There was a reasonable attendance of the members, though there were still a number absent, of whom we can think, but know of no good reason for their absence. It is to be feared that the love is waxing cold. It would have taken a power to have kept us away.

We had also a fair visit of membership from other congregations. Of ministers, we had brother Isaac Meyers, from Union county, who is so full of love that his very presence makes one feel good. Also brother John Garver, of Aughwick branch, and James A. Sell, of Stone Valley. These brethren labored faithfully, and we trust the Lord will bless the effort. Altogether we had a good meeting, and we think it was good for us to be there.

One dear young sister was very suddenly taken sick, shortly before breaking of bread, so that she had to be carried to her home. She has the sympathies of the church, and we hope the Lord will break to her soul a portion of the bread of life. She was some better next day.

On Sunday, (6th) brethren Meyers and Sell preached for us in Tyrone, which was the first meeting in our new room. Our next appointment is for the 4th of July, at 3 P. M.

Visit to Franklin County.—E.

On the morning of the 29th ultimo, we took a train at 7. 50 A. M., bound for Franklin county. At Harrisburg we met brother Samuel and sister Longenecker who were on their way home, having attended some love-feasts in Cumberland county. At Carlisle we met brother D. M. Holsinger, who was also returning from love-feasts, having been about his "Father's business" for about a week, as we were informed. Stopping at Green Castle, we took coach and arrived safely at Waynesboro in the evening of the same day.

Next morning were taken in company with brother J. F. and sister Oller to place of public preaching, where the ministering brethren present endeavored to edify the Body of Christ and to call sinners to repentance.

In the evening we had the happy privilege of taking shelter under our parental roof, where we had much friendly enjoyment until the morning of June 1st., when we repaired to Antietam house of worship. Here we were made to feel happy in meeting our brethren and sisters in the Lord, and many friends.

This was the day set apart for the Spring Love-feast in the Antietam congregation. The brethren boldly held forth the words of Salvation; and in the afternoon one soul was added to the Church by the holy ordinance of Apostolic baptism.

In the evening, were celebrated the ordinances of the Lord's House as they have been delivered unto us.

Next morning, (June 2nd) it was our joy to meet the brethren of the Falling Spring congregation at their meeting-house at Falling Spring. It was the day appointed for their Love-feast. Here, too, was the plain, primitive word of Gospel truth defended zealously. It is cheering to Zion-bound pilgrims to find in their travels that everywhere the same word is preached and defended. May it be granted by the Lord whom we all serve, that we may ever believe, and obey, and advocate the one, Heaven-ordained "from of doctrine." "Let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing." Phil. 3: 16.

In the afternoon of the same day an election was held, which resulted in the choice of brother David H. Bonebrake to the ministry of the word and brethren C. Royer, Adam Lookabaugh and Samuel Knepper to the deaconship, two of which had a tie vote. May these dear brethren be faithful to the calling, and endeavor, by the help of the Divine Master, to discharge the duties laid upon them, untill it will be said: "Well done." May the language of their hearts be: 'Not my will, but thine, O Lord, thou Head of the Church.'

After the night services at this place, we were taken by a friend and relative to the house of friend George and sister Anna Foltz, residing near Chamberburgh, where we met other of our kinsfolk.

Next morning (3rd) we took a train at Chambersburg, and arrived safely at Tyrone in the evening. The visit was a very short but pleasant one.

Answers to Correspondents

C. Bucher, Schafferstown, Pa.—Your letter contained no money. But we send the Certificates.

Catherine A. Zollers, Lower Providence, Pa. Your subscription was paid to No. 17 of this Volume, by brother John J. Emmert, of Illinois. The dollar which you send will pay for remainder of the year. We send such of the numbers between 17 and this as we have.

A. J. Correll, Romeo, Tennessee. We send you No. 14 only, No. 17 being run out. We will send package to Romeo according to your advice.

Roswell Hildreth, Howardsville, Ills. It is all right. You have sent 50 cents and are credited to No 38 of this Volume.

Thomas Gray, York, Pa. In reply we would say 42 cents will pay from the close of your subscription (5—37) to the close of this year.
